McGEE—JOSEPH T. McGEE died at his home, near Richland, Holmes county, Miss., on Tuesday morning, February 18, 1890. He was the son of Joseph McGee, and was born in Jones county, Ga., January 16, 1821, and had passed, by one month and two days, into his seventieth year. With two older brothers who survive him, he accompanied his father from Georgia, and in 1834 became a Mississippian by adoption. He was twice married; first, to Miss Eliza E. Crawford, November 9, 1847, and, again, to Miss Lou McAdory, November 1, 1866. Both marriages were fortunate ones for him. A large family was born to him, some of the children being yet in their minority; but quite a number grown to the estate of manhood and womanhood occupy places of usefulness in the church and in society.

Bro. McGee became a Christian in early manhood, and a Methodist of the decided sort. He filled the offices of class leader, Sunday-school superintendent and steward, and was faithful to his work. At Richland, where he held his membership, and near which place he lived so long, his seat was seldom vacant in church till increasing and severe infirmity kept him away. He was an indulgent and helpful hearer, a friend to his pastor, liberal in his contributions, interested in the work and progress of the church at home and in foreign fields. He was esteemed by all the people as a friend, a citizen and neighbor. White and black were alike his friends. He was fluent and ready as a speaker, of more than average ability and culture. If an address was to be made at a neighborhood gathering, social or religious, all eyes turned to Bro. McGee, and the people were not disappointed.

His last years have been years of suffering, but for him they have been years of mellowing and maturity. He has often told the writer how he was in the past earlier years of his religious life vexed by a turbulent spirit, and how he grieved over fits of anger; but his testimony for years has been that the power of religion enabled him to triumph over all his foes, so that he became gentle, peaceful, and was thus kept to the end.

His prayers in his family circle were notably earnest and pathetic as the outer man gave way. His last testimony was strong, his faith intelligent and comforting. He was wonderfully sustained in his last sickness. We shall miss him in our rapidly depleting numbers, and his widow and children are sorely bereaved; but he has overtaken many comrades of his earlier conflicts, and those who are left may follow on. JOHN BARCROFT.

POWERS—At the first Quarterly Conference for Coekrum circuit, Sardis district, North Mississippi Conference, held at Independence, February 28, 1890, the pastor reported that, on February 12, our brother, the Rev. A. F. POWERS, had died. A committee of three members was appointed by the Rev. S. M. Thames, P. E., to draw up and place on record a suitable memorial of the life and labors of our deceased brother.

We find in his family record that he was born July 10, 1830; professed religion, was baptized and received into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, September 11, 1856; he was licensed to preach in 1871; was ordained deacon by Bishop Paine in the year 1877. Married, first, to Miss Martha Ann Stephens, December 7, 1853. She dying, he was left with three children—two sons and a daughter. He was married to Miss Callie Jackson, May 20, 1868. He was made a Master Mason in 1856; was made Royal Arch Mason in 1858. Be it Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Powers we feel bereaved, and are sensible of the loss sustained by the church in the death of so good a man.

Resolved, That, as a citizen, a Christian and a preacher, there never was a stain on his character.

Resolved, That we shall miss him in the Quarterly Conference and in our public worship, and in the Sunday-school of which he was a faithful and efficient superintendent.

Resolved, That the members of this Quarterly Conference deeply sympathize with this bereaved family in this, their deep affliction, and that a copy of the above memorial and resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the Quarterly Conference, and that a copy be sent to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE for publication.

W. J. O'BRYANT, P. C.,
For Committee.

The seeking of God should be the prologue to all our affairs; we are enjoined first to pray, and then determine; "Thou shalt make thy prayer unto him; thou shalt also decree a thing, and it shall be established unto thee." The interesting providence in our concerns is the highway to success. The reason we miscarry is because we consult not God, but determine without him, and then we have no reason to complain of him for not prospering our way when we never commended our affairs to his conduct.—Charnock.

"Don't Give Up the Ship."

"Many that did ill under physicians' hands have happily escaped, when they have been given over by them, left to God and nature and themselves." "More danger there is from the physician than the disease." "Their art is wholly conjectural, if it is an art." All this was written long ago before the "Elixir of Life" was discovered and applied by the "regular faculty;" and the writer frankly adds: "I honor the doctors, as I am enjoined to honor the physicians, for necessity's sake." Though the doctors of the present day are, no doubt, very different from those referred to above, and in spite of the great progress in medical science, we are obliged to admit, that many, very many cases are still given over by them as hopeless. To such patients we say: Compound Oxygen is neither a drug nor a medicine, but a vitalizer, assisting nature.

You will find our treatise on Compound Oxygen an interesting work, carefully and thoughtfully written. It contains records of many cures, with the patients' grateful testimonials. Send for it and see for yourself. Sent free. Address DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa., or 120 Sutter St., San Francisco, California.

GRANT'S FURNITURE STORE

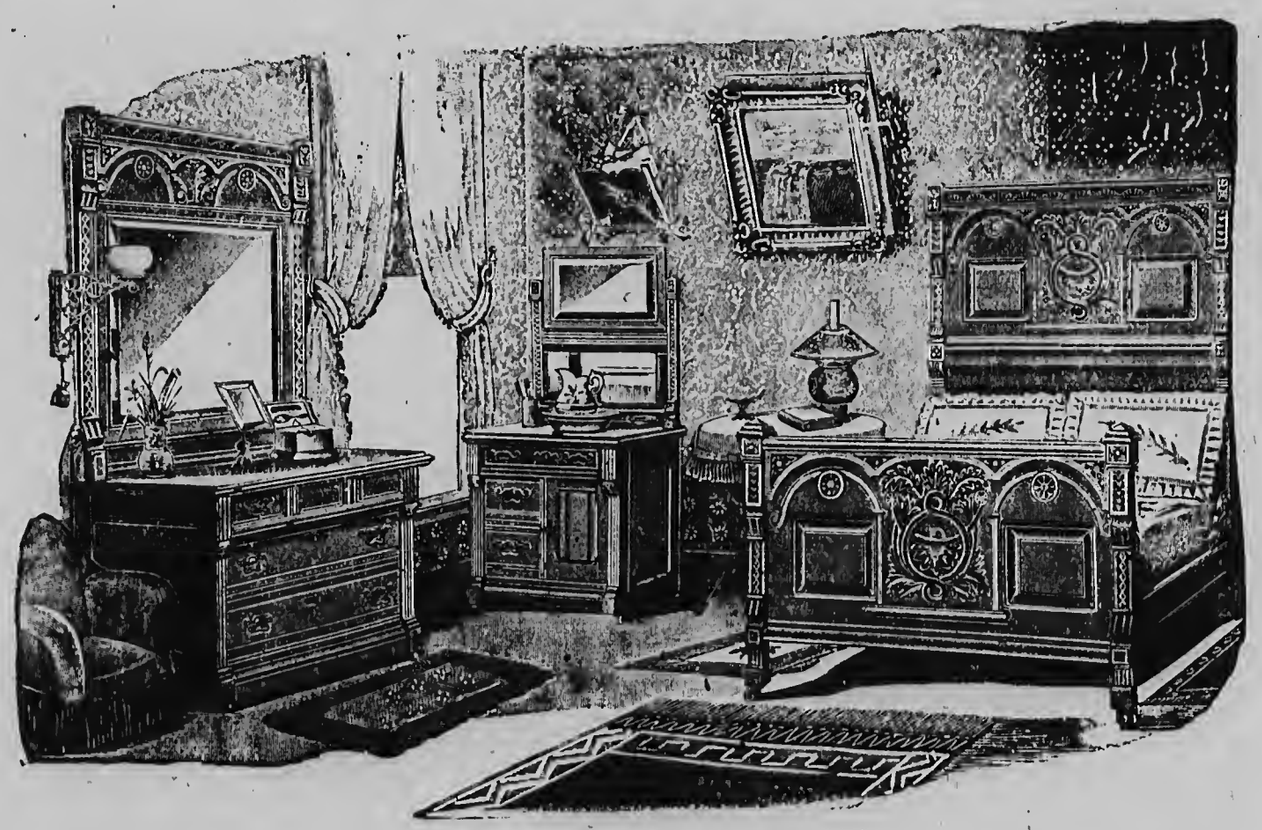
at 44 and 46 Baronne St., into which I have recently moved, is one of the finest buildings in the city, with a floor space of over 25,000 square feet, and is fully equipped with all modern improvements. It is very centrally located, being only one block from Canal St., and I hope to be favored by a call from you when in the city.

BEAUTIFUL PARLOR GOODS.

I have one entire floor devoted to the display of these goods alone, and have over sixty different varieties to select from. Complete Suits anywhere from $35 to $650, and odd pieces—such as Sofas, Divans, Easy Chairs, Patent Rockers, Window and Reception Chairs—at as low prices in proportion as the Complete Suits. I have these goods in Cherry, Mahogany and Walnut, and can give you your choice of any of the following coverings: Crushed, Embossed, Plain and Silk Plushes, Hair Cloth, Mohair, Raw and Spun Silks, Satins, English Tapestries, French Velours, Petit Point, Brocatelle or Damasks. I make a specialty of these goods, have many of the patterns made specially for my own trade, and can offer a greater variety at lower prices than any other house in the South.

NEW STOCK

In all departments, and every grade of goods, from the cheapest to the most expensive, in endless variety. I have all the latest and most fashionable designs, and, as I have only purchased from factories whose goods I have been selling for the past six years, can and do guarantee every piece of Furniture that leaves my establishment.



LOW PRICES

are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.

A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and whether you wish to pay $40 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs.

I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.

I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

A Model Biography of a Model Man.

Now Ready for Delivery to Subscribers:

Life of Bishop Simpson,

OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

By Geo. R. Crooks, D. D.

The early years of Simpson's life are described in a modest and charming style by the Bishop himself. It was fortunate that he was led to do this. Otherwise much that he has written of his boyhood days would have been lost, and we should have missed some very entertaining chapters. The story of how this awkward, bashful young man finally made his way to the topmost round of pulpit fame is a captivating one. His autobiography shows us how unpromising the beginnings were; but for his successes we must depend on the full and glowing descriptions which his diligent biographer has gathered from various sources and woven together with true literary and dramatic skill.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The worst flood ever known in the Red river is sweeping away the levees in its course. The Mississippi is falling faster every day, the back water from crevasses is running off.

The gambling dens in Denver, Col., were closed by the police authorities on May 8, and the proprietors were bound over for trial. This is the first time in many years that gambling has been suppressed there.

Representatives of the river interests are hard at work, and plans have been devised to further the urgency bill of Mr. Blanchard, which asks for $1,000,000 for the maintenance of the levees.

The Providence, R. I., school committee has adopted a revision of its by-laws which banishes the Bible and devotional exercises from the city schools and restricts the application of corporal punishment to cases in which the parents' consent is obtained.

Representative Mason has introduced in Congress a resolution to authorize the Committee on Labor to make an investigation during the recess of Congress with the purpose of bringing about an 8-hour law.

Archbishop Ireland, of St. Paul, Minn., preached a sermon in the St. Augustine (colored) Catholic Church, at Washington, in which he asserted that there is no such thing as a color line except in the minds of those whose intellects are clouded by unjust reasoning; that whites, reds, blues and blacks are all children of the same God, and because of the simple accident of color it does not follow that the negroes are to be treated on different lines, religiously or socially.

Secretary Proctor has made a second allowance of $50,000 for the relief of Mississippi flood sufferers as recommended by Major Weston, who has charge of the distribution of reliefs. This leaves an unexpended balance of $50,000.

The Texas Spring Palace, at Fort Worth, threw open its gates for 1890 on May 10. Thousands of strangers were in the city. Business was suspended at noon, and the opening exercises took up the afternoon.

In the midst of a terrific cloudburst, Akron, Ohio, was struck by a cyclone on May 10, and fully 100 houses were demolished.

A company has been formed in Galveston, to be styled the Galveston Manufacturing, Trading and Importing Company, with a capital stock of $250,000. This company is to begin operations when $100,000 is subscribed. The object of the company is to trade with Mexico, Central and South America.

The saloons in Covington, Ky., were closed Sunday in obedience to the law. The officers of the Saloon-keepers' Association used their influence and authority to induce saloon-keepers to obey the law.

The furniture warehouse of J. G. Grant was burned to the ground, and its contents destroyed, on May 10. Loss about $100,000.

FOREIGN.

It is reported that a correspondence has been going on between Emperor William and Bismarck relative to certain newspaper articles inspired by the ex-chancellor, which are considered uncomplimentary to the Emperor.

For the first time in the history of London the lord mayor will make an official visit across the border into Scotland on Thursday, June 19. He will proceed in state.

The latest advices from Africa represents the king of Dahomey as very tired of his war against the French. He had expected to overwhelm the small French garrison on the coast at one blow, and either capture or drive them into the sea, and when his troops returned discomfited from the defences of Kolonou he was so enraged that he immediately beheaded the general in command, and followed up the act with the slaughter of several more of his officers next day.

The question of taking control of charitable institutions from the priests and placing it in the hands of civil power is arousing bitter controversy in the Italian Parliament.

The Mexican Senate has reported favorably on the bill granting an indefinite term to the President.

The King of Samoa and the American and German consuls have signed the Berlin treaty. Great interest was manifested in the event, and a large number of the natives and nearly all of the white residents of Apia assembled around the house during the ratification of the treaty.

It is said that the Pope is satisfied with the German government's concessions to the clergy, and disapproves the course of the centrists insisting upon further concessions.

The Pall Mall Gazette publishes an interview with an American engineer named Tetley, in which he unfolds a plan for bridging over the Thames from London to Putney, by a vast platform, to rest upon tubular tunnels, stretching from shore to shore. About five miles of additional space would thus be added to the superficial area of the metropolis, giving room for new avenues, trees.

Experiments are being made with American cotton seed in Turkestan, and the Russian government is prepared to enter upon its cultivation on a large scale, should the results prove favorable. In lower Russia, too, the cultivators have been ordered to plant the seed and report results to the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. Henry Stanley, regarding the German movements in Africa, said that he was wearied by England's apathy in regard to the operations being carried out by the Germans. If England continued to remain inactive, the Germans would secure paramount influence in Africa.

Emperor William has sent experts to examine the hygienic arrangements of the state mines at Saarbrucken. They are also to investigate the grievances of the miners employed there.

Notice.

All contributions and communications intended for the Transit and Building Fund Society of Bishop William Taylor's Self-Supporting Missions, should be sent to Richard Grant, treasurer, 181 Hudson St., New York.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policyholders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

It is well known among successful merchants that liberal advertising is indispensable to the economical and successful working of their establishments.—Price Current.

Has any Southern religious book ever sold like "The Man of Galilee?" Appeared May, 1889; the tenth thousand in press March, 1890. Sent postpaid for eighty cents to any address.

Camp Meeting.

The nineteenth annual camp meeting, on the Seashore Camp Grounds, will open on Friday evening, July 11, next, and continue for ten days. The trustees have made arrangements to provide ample accommodations for the increasing annual attendance. Eminent preachers will assist as heretofore in the public religious services. Steps have already been taken to secure reduced rates over the various connecting railroads. The camp grounds are located on the line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, and are 78 miles distant from New Orleans, and 68 miles from Mobile. They have a width of 1,600 feet frontage on the Mississippi Sound. The sea bathing afforded here is unsurpassed. An abundance of fine shade trees provide shelter from the summer's sun; while pure refreshing zephyrs from the Gulf of Mexico exhilarate and renew the panting and jaded visitor from our smoke-enveloped and dust-stifling cities and interior towns.

Parties desiring to rent rooms before the rush at the opening of the camp meeting should address their communications to W. B. Thomson, Esq., 68 South Rampart St., New Orleans, La. All inquiries regarding transportation should be sent to Capt. A. C. Danner, Mobile, Ala.

The Reception Committee, of which the president is chairman, will secure, as far as possible, lodging accommodations for all preachers free of charge, and tickets for meals at the restaurant at half-rates as heretofore. Private boarding-tents furnish accommodations to visitors at very moderate rates, in addition to those afforded by the trustees. A small gate-fee is charged for entering the grounds, which is employed towards defraying the expense of their care and improvement. The growing attractiveness of these grounds as a summer resting-place, and the experienced management of the public services, have advertised the place to thousands.

As the property of the Southern Methodist Church, only its members can own cottages or tents on the grounds. Members of other evangelical churches may rent accommodations, subject to the rules, and are heartily welcome. All the time and attention devoted to the grounds by the trustees is gratuitous, and in the interest of the salvation of precious souls. For a copy of the rules and other data apply to

Mansfield Female College

Conservatory of Music and Art.

MANSFIELD, LA.

One of the most popular and flourishing institutions of the South. The Sixty-sixth Session opened September 11, 1889, and the Spring Term begins February 1, 1890, with an able and experienced faculty. Curriculum comprehensive, instruction thorough. Advantages in Music unsurpassed, as in the best conservatories. The pianos are new and of the best make. The Technikon and the Technichone are used to facilitate the work in the music department, placing this department beyond competition. Departments of Fine Arts and Industrial Arts under specialists.

The location is unsurpassed for beauty and attractiveness, and the school is celebrated for the remarkable record for good health maintained. The climate is the best in which to educate, and the place is the safest for girls. The main building is of brick, massive and commodious, with a large and well-shaded campus. Rooms large, well furnished, warmed and ventilated. Ample provision for the table of the best the market affords. All necessary comfort secured. Expenses very low and the school very economical. A new building with a large audience hall is in contemplation, and extensive improvements are in progress to make this the grandest institution in the State.

A PRAYER.

BY PHŒBE CARY.

I ask not wealth, but power to take
And use the things I have aright;
Not years, but wisdom that shall make
My life a profit and delight.

I ask not that for me the plan
Of good and ill be set aside,
But that the common lot of man
Be nobly borne and glorified.

I know I may not always keep
My steps in places green and sweet,
Nor find the pathway of the deep
A path of safety for my feet.

But pray that, when the tempest's breath
Shall fiercely sweep my way about,
I make no shipwreck of my faith
In the unbottomed sea of doubt.

And that, though it be mine to know
How hard the stoniest pillow seems,
Good angels still may come and go
About the places of my dreams.

I do not ask for love below,
That friends shall never be estranged,
But for the power of loving, so
My heart may keep its youth unchanged.

Youth, joy, wealth—Fate, I give thee these;
Leave faith and hope till life is past,
And leave my heart's best impulses
Fresh and unfailing to the last.

Proceedings of the General Conference.

FIFTH DAY.

The session on Monday was consumed principally in the reports of standing committees, and the offering and reference of resolutions. "Non-concurrence" is the order of the day. The two hundred "new men" do make this rather a black-haired Conference; but, from present indications, it will be level-headed, nevertheless.

Dr. A. S. Hunt, of the American Bible Society, the bearer of a fraternal message to the Conference, was introduced and made a touching reference to the sainted worthies who were with him on the platform when he was before the General Conference sixteen years ago; now all have crossed the flood except two.

Report No. 1 of the Committee on Boundaries was adopted as follows:

Your Committee on Boundaries, to whom was referred a memorial from the Council Grove District Conference, of the Western Conference, and one from the Atchison District Conference, Western Conference, asking that the boundaries of the Western Conference be changed, beg leave to recommend that the petition be granted, and that paragraph 210, page 337, of the Discipline, be amended so as to read, "Western Conference shall include the States of Kansas and Nebraska."

We recommend that the memorial from the Atchison District Conference, asking a change of the name of the Western Conference, be not granted.

Respectfully submitted.

R. H. MAHON, Chairman.

There were ten memorials presented, and thirty or more resolutions, some of which were referred to the appropriate committees; some tabled; some lost; some carried. The Conference adjourned early. The standing committees nearly all meet every afternoon at three o'clock, and what with preaching and walking and talking and writing to the home folks—the average delegate is a very busy man. While they are thus at work, let the whole church be at prayer.

SIXTH DAY.

The Conference assembled with promptness at nine A. M., with a smaller attendance than usual at the opening exercises, Bishop R. K. Hargrove in the chair.

Dr. D. Atkins, of Columbia Conference, conducted the devotional exercises of the day, opening with reading of the Scriptures, after which the 219th Hymn was sung, beginning:

"Let Zion's watchmen all awake,
And take th' alarm they give."

Dr. Atkins then led in prayer.

The minutes of Saturday's proceedings were read, corrected and approved.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON EPISCOPACY—NO. 1.

Our first report is one of sadness, and well suited to produce solemnity. We are called upon officially and formally to chronicle the death of our late senior Bishop, Holland N. McTyeire.

The episcopal message calls our attention to this event, and asks that a memoir be presented as a becoming token of the merits of the distinguished and lamented dead. This is done that a brief and permanent record may be made relating to his eminent character and services during his career. We fully appreciate the estimate placed on Bishop McTyeire by his surviving colleagues, and echo back the sentiments expressed not faintly, but with forceful emphasis. Your committee feel that time has not yet allayed the sorrow caused by his departure; and we doubt not that this General Conference realizes the great loss sustained by this sore bereavement. Four years ago he was with us almost in the very prime of a vigorous manhood—there were no indications of decay of either physical or mental power. Time had dealt gently with him; and expectation was indulged of a long protraction of his years. He had attained to a ripe maturity, to a commanding eminence in his high office. With rare endowments of both mind and body he was filling his vocation with honor and influence worthy of his title.

Uncertain is life always, and short at the longest, yet there was a shock at what seemed to all an untimely closing of his brilliant career. The mighty oak, with umbrageous foliage, beautiful and sublime in aspect, is stricken by a bolt which shivers the trunk, and puts in the dust life, limb and leaf. The sun was eclipsed in mid-heaven at its zenith, rather than by gradual decline made to sink below the horizon.

Your committee tender a brief memoir of Bishop McTyeire, not doubting that in due time a full biography will be written worthy of his name and deeds.

Bishop Holland N. McTyeire was born in Barnwell district, S. C., July 24, 1824. South Carolina has been very prolific of great men, and when McTyeire was born, another star was added to the already brilliant galaxy. He was very fond of the land of his nativity, and often attested this by his pen and his tongue. He had a Methodist parentage—the father having the most exalted admiration of the lamented Bishop Capers, and deeming him the foremost of religious guides.

Bishop McTyeire was converted at an early age, becoming a professor of religion in his thirteenth year. Passing childhood at home, he went to the higher schools, first at Cokesbury, S. C., then to Collinsworth Institute, Ga. By these schools he was prepared for college. He was among the earlier graduates of Randolph-Macon College, Va.; and this mother college of Methodism has given to the church and world no son of greater worth and distinction.

Finishing his collegiate course in 1845, already licensed to preach, in November, 1845, he was admitted on trial into the Virginia Conference, and began his career at the ancient capital of Williamsburg.

After one year's service in Virginia he was transferred to the Alabama Conference, and was admitted into full connection in due order of time in the first of the year 1848. The same year he was transferred to the Louisiana Conference, and he was ordained elder in 1849. He was editor of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE from 1851 to 1858, when he was elected editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, the central organ of his church. Interrupted in his editorial career by the misfortunes of war, he entered the pastorate again in the Alabama Conference, serving in the city of Montgomery till his election, in 1866, to the episcopal office. He was ordained Bishop in New Orleans at the same time with Wightman, Marvin and Doggett; and all were worthy compeers of their honored predecessors, and their colleagues. This quartet was a rare combination of men. The lamented Bishop served long enough in the usual work of the ministry to make high reputation as an able preacher of the gospel. Though he was not by reputation considered an eloquent preacher, he was by all critical minds adjudged an able expounder of the Word of God, possessing, as he did in high degree, a mind critical and analytical in its cast. His words were weighty and powerful, having the condensation of a great hydraulic press. To hear him was to understand him—there was not much of flaming rhetoric, but a more durable impression was made upon the mind by his forceful logic, uttered with thunderous emphasis. The tones of his voice, his slow, cautious speech, his commanding person, made him a man of power in the pulpit.

As an editor, he was pre-eminent. The pages of his paper flashed with wit and burning satire. His sententions, epigrammatic style was rarely excelled. The finish of his leading editorials made them to stand forth as a marble pillar polished to the perfection of a mirror. As a writer, especially as an editor, our church has never had one to surpass him among all its brilliant minds.

Bishop McTyeire did fine service with his pen in many ways, but he has gained lasting distinction by his latest production—"The History of Methodism." This is a ponderous volume, full of fact, and with none of the adornments and illusions of fiction. We are greatly indebted to him for this much-needed book. We do not deem it necessary to speak of all his writings. He was the author of the well-known "Manual of Discipline"—a great aid to the ministry in practical administration. By his writings widely extended, he is destined to a high place in our history and traditions.

The Bishop was a model presiding officer, being a thorough parliamentarian—a lawyer of acute and analytic mind, prompt and bold in his decisions, he ruled an assembly with marked success and ease. His executive ability was of a very high order; he seemed to have been born to command, and to have realized this capacity to control his fellow-men.

Our Bishop was wise in planning and efficient in executing church work. Nothing will give him more durable honor than the great service rendered in forming and directing Vanderbilt University. His agency in this magnificent enterprise justly entitles him to praise. He was the president of its Board of Trust, and, as such, had unusual prerogatives. Vanderbilt University is a grand monument to the memory of its founder, and hardly less so to the name of McTyeire.

The Bishop's impress has been deep on his generation, nor can it soon be erased, if ever, by the wear of time. He died February 15, 1889, after an illness of several months' duration. Peacefully he left the field of his labors, the high office he filled so well; and his departure was in serene, but victorious triumph. The vacancy in our episcopal ranks made by his death is so wide that we may well hesitate to say who can wear the mantle of the ascended leader in our Israel. Your committee close by offering the following resolutions:

Resolved, That in the death of Bishop Holland N. McTyeire the General Conference and the church have sustained the loss of an eminent and honored officer, whose death we deplore as a bereavement.

Resolved, That we record with melancholy feelings our high estimate of his abilities and unsullied character as a Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; and, as a token of the same, it is hereby ordered that this memoir be recorded in our journal.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family of the deceased Bishop, as an expression of the sympathy of this Conference in their time of sorrow and bereavement.

Respectfully submitted.

J. W. HINTON, Chairman.
JAMES ATKINS, Secretary.

The report was adopted unanimously by a rising vote.

The Committee on Sunday-schools made the following reports:

REPORT NO. 3.

Your committee have had under consideration the memorial of the Mississippi Conference, in reference to allowing churches and Sunday-schools, in which collections are taken on Children's Day, to retain fifty per cent. of such collections, to apply to Sunday-school libraries.

They recommend non-concurrence.

Respectfully submitted.

T. J. MAGRUDER, Chairman.
JOHN S. CANDLER, Secretary.

The report was adopted.

REPORT NO. 4.

Your Committee on Sunday-schools have had under consideration a memorial of Edward Booth and T. D. Woodson, of Felicity Street Church, New Orleans, Louisiana Conference, in reference to changing election of Sunday-school superintendents from the Quarterly Conference to the Sunday-school. They recommend non-concurrence.

Respectfully submitted.

T. J. MAGRUDER, Chairman.
JOHN S. CANDLER, Secretary.

The report was adopted.

SEVENTH DAY.

When Bishop Duncan called the Conference to order this morning the auditorium was but partially filled with delegates, and the galleries had few spectators. Before the conclusion of the devotional exercises, however, the floor was filled, and there was a large number of ladies and gentlemen in the galleries.

Dr. J. W. Hinton, of South Georgia, conducted the religious exercises. The Scripture lesson was the first chapter of Paul's letter to the Romans, and Hymn 485 was sung:

"Ye servants of the Lord,
Each in his office wait."

The journal of yesterday was read, after which the proceedings of the day were as follows:

At the request of Bishop Duncan a communication from the Paine Institute, in reference to that institution, was read for the information of the Conference, and referred to the Committee on Education. Also a similar communication from the Lane Institute, which was similarly referred.

The Committee on Episcopacy made the following reports:

REPORT NO. 2.

Your committee having duly considered the official administration of the Bishops for the past four years, and also their Christian conduct and character, beg leave to report:

The names of John C. Keener, Alpheus W. Wilson, John C. Granbery, Robert K. Hargrove, William W. Duncan, Charles B. Galloway, Eugene R. Hendrix, and Joseph S. Key were called one by one, and your committee hereby report that their characters and official administration have been approved.

J. W. HINTON, Chairman.
JAMES ATKINS, Secretary.

J. W. Hinton, chairman, submitted Report No. 3 of the Committee on Episcopacy, which was taken up and adopted.

Following is the report:

REPORT NO. 3.

Your committee have duly considered the paper of R. H. Parker, D. Atkins, R. S. Clark and others, requesting that one of our Bishops have his residence somewhere on the Pacific coast, beg leave to report an approval without any dissent in the committee. The committee are fully aware that this is a matter beyond your control; and if the desired object be attained, it can only be by an arrangement among the Bishops themselves.

We deem it important to effect the object proposed in the petition, and so report, calling the attention of the episcopal college to the subject, hoping they will give it favorable consideration.

The committee offer for adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this General Conference that one of our Bishops ought to reside on the Pacific coast; and the Bishops are requested to take the matter into consideration at an early day.

Respectfully submitted.

J. W. HINTON, Chairman.
JAMES ATKINS, Secretary.

S. H. Dent, chairman, submitted Report No. 1 of the Committee on Publishing Interests, which was taken up and adopted.

Following is the report:

REPORT NO. 1.

Your committee begs leave to submit Report No. 1, as follows:

That it has had before it the memorial of the East Nashville District Conference, asking that the price of the Nashville Advocate be reduced to one dollar per year.

Your committee has duly considered the same, and respectfully recommend non-concurrence.

S. H. DENT, Chairman.
B. F. HAYNES, Secretary.

The Committee on Publishing Interests submitted the following report:

REPORT NO. 2.

Your committee begs leave to submit Report No. 2, as follows:

That it has had before it the resolution referred to it and signed by J. S. Candler, H. H. Parks and J. W. Quillian, asking that the General Conference instruct the Book Agent to publish the Ritual of our church in some edition of our Hymn Book.

Your committee has duly considered the same, and respectfully recommend concurrence.

S. H. DENT, Chairman.
B. F. HAYNES, Secretary.

The Committee on Temperance submitted the following report:

REPORT NO. 1.

To the Bishops and Brethren of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South:

Your Committee on Temperance begs leave to report that, having had under consideration the recommendation of H. M. Winslow and others, relative to the use of unfermented wine and a change in the Discipline relative thereto, respectfully recommend non-concurrence, for the reason that this privilege is already granted by the Discipline.

W. H. GOODALE, Chairman.
A. B. JONES, Secretary.

The report was laid over under the rule.

S. Rodgers, chairman, submitted Report No. 2 of the Committee on Missions, which was read, and went to its place on the calendar.

Following is the report:

REPORT NO. 2.

Your Committee on Missions, having duly considered the various papers referred to it, respectfully submits the following report:

1. A resolution from J. O. Branch, T. J. Christian and others, requesting that the Board of Missions be instructed to consider the question of establishing a Hebrew Mission, and, if found expedient and practicable, to organize such mission during the next quadrennium.

Your committee recommends concurrence, the resolution to be accordingly referred to the Board of Missions.

2. A petition signed by C. C. Mayhew, praying assistance for the Illinois Conference.

Your committee recommends its reference to the Board of Missions.

3. A paper signed by I. M. Wright, R. K. Brown and others, reciting certain facts relating to the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, closes with the following resolution:

Resolved, That inasmuch as the Board of Missions is empowered to act in such cases, building houses and establishing schools, we refer these educational institutions (Paine and Lane Institutes) to the Board of Missions, requesting it to consider this appeal, and to grant such aid as their judgment may suggest.

We recommend concurrence.

4. A memorial from B. P. Walker, T. J. Ball, S. S. Hayes and others, the design of which is to secure modification of Article 12 of the Constitution of the Board of Missions, so that the relations of the Bishops and the Board to each other and to the work may be more clearly defined.

Also to change Article 5, so that some authority may be given to the Board in the appointment of missionaries to mission fields, and in their transfers from one mission field to another.

Your committee is not satisfied that it would be wise or safe to change the law as proposed in the memorial. We suggest instead of the desired changes in the Constitution of the Board of Missions, that, if at any time there should be such exercise of episcopal power as goes beyond the authority conferred upon the Bishops, there should be a prompt reference of the same to the Committee on Episcopacy.

We, therefore, respectfully recommend non-concurrence.

5. "Report of D. C. Kelley, Missionary Treasurer, to General Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to meet A. D. 1890."

This paper is respectfully returned to the General Conference, with the statement that we find nothing therein requiring the action of the Conference.

6. Memorial from the Mississippi Annual Conference, asking the General Conference to formulate a plan for employing godly women as deaconesses in the church.

We recommend non-concurrence.

7. Petition from T. J. Duncan, T. A. Kerley and S. V. Wall, praying that Ques. 12, in the order of business of the Quarterly Conference, be stricken out, and the following question inserted: "Is there a written report of the general state of the missionary cause in this pastoral charge?"

We recommend non-concurrence.

SAMUEL RODGERS, Chairman.

R. H. Mahon submitted Report No. 2 of the Committee on Boundaries, which, on motion of J. C. Morris, was recommitted.

A. S. Andrews, chairman, submitted Report No. 1 of the Special Committee on the Sabbath, which was read and went to its place on the calendar.

Following is the report:

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH.

How shall we more effectually guard the sanctity of the Lord's Day?

1. By avoiding all secular and worldly pursuits and all popular amusements on that day, and by devoting the day only to those duties and exercises that nourish and build up Christian life and character.

2. By preaching, at least, once a year in every congregation upon the proper use of this holy day.

3. By employing all our influence, personal and official, against the profanation of the Christian Sabbath, by unnecessary travel, Sunday excursions, Sunday publications, and the transportation of freight and merchandise.

4. By requiring all our presiding elders at the third Quarterly Conference to ask the following question:

Is the law of the Christian Sabbath properly observed and duly enforced in this pastoral charge?

A. S. ANDREWS, Chairman.
E. H. EAST, Secretary.

There was a long and heated discussion of Report No. 2 of the Committee on Publishing Interests, relating to the incorporation of the Ritual in the new Hymn Book; but the matter was left undecided.

Dr. A. S. Hunt, representing the American Bible Society, was then introduced to the Conference, and made a long and characteristically eloquent address on the subject of his secretariat. The Conference, relieved from the spell of Dr. Hunt's eloquence and the thrilling passages referring to Bible evangelization in Italy, France and Spain, as by one impulse took up the coronation hymn, and the strains of the song rolled like melodious thunder over the body, all rising to their feet. On motion the Conference adjourned with the benediction by Dr. A. S. Hunt.

"All hail the power of Jesus' name;"

EIGHTH DAY.

The Conference assembled at the usual hour this morning, with a goodly number of delegates in attendance; Bishop Galloway in the chair.

Rev. D. W. Carter, of the Central Mexican Mission, led the devotional exercises. The morning lesson consisted of the reading of fourteen verses of the fifth chapter of Galatians, and the singing of Hymn No. 1:

"Come, thou Almighty King;
Help us thy name to sing."

Bro. Carter then led in prayer.

The journal of yesterday was read, corrected and approved.

Bishop Hendrix took the chair.

Pending the reception of reports of standing committees, Bishop Hendrix (presiding) said:

Brethren, we have with us this morning two fraternal messengers from the Methodist Episcopal Church, whom I take great pleasure in now presenting to this body—Rev. R. F. Bristol, of Chicago, and ex-Gov. Robert E. Patterson, of Philadelphia.

The call for reports of standing committees was resumed.

H. C. Morrison, chairman, submitted Reports Nos. 1 and 2 of the Committee on Church Extension, which were read and sent to their places on the calendar.

REPORT NO. 1.

Your committee have carefully considered a resolution referred to them by the Church Extension Board, asking for the election of a secretary and an assistant secretary to the Board of Church Extension.

We recommend that this General Conference concur in the said request.

H. C. MORRISON, Chairman.
CHARLES W. WHITE, Secretary.

T. J. Magruder submitted Reports No. 7 and No. 8 of the Committee on Sunday-schools, which were read, and went to their place on the calendar.

REPORT NO. 7.

Your committee have had under consideration the memorial of the Church Conference of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Los Angeles, Cal., and after carefully examining the same, beg leave to report that the following be enacted by this Conference:

Add to Ans. 9, of ¶ 106, at the end of said answer, the following, to wit: "And they shall also cause to be organized Young People's Leagues, having for their object the promotion of piety and loyalty to our church, education in church history, and their encouragement in works of grace and charity, and shall prepare suitable constitutions and by-laws for the same, together with such other literature as may be required for their successful operation."

Your committee have also had under consideration the resolutions of H. C. Morrison and W. F. Lovejoy, and of John S. Candler, W. W. Turner and J. W. Quillian, all in reference to the creation of a literary and religious paper for the youth of our church and to provide an editor for the same, recommend the following as a substitute for both resolutions:

Resolved, That the General Book Agent shall be authorized to publish a weekly periodical or newspaper at Nashville, of religious and literary character adapted to the wants of our young people.

That an editor shall be elected by this General Conference, who shall have editorial control of said youths' paper, and who shall, in addition to his duties as editor aforesaid, edit the Sunday-School Visitor. Respectfully submitted.

T. J. MAGRUDER, Chairman.
JOHN S. CANDLER, Secretary.

The Committee on Education reported recommending a Board of Education, and furnishing a draft of its Constitution; and there were also other reports of committees at this protracted session which we can not publish, and many presentations of memorials and resolutions.

There was much discussion of a prize catechism, recommended in a report before the body, and Bishop Keener made the following remarks:

It is said that confession is good for the soul. I was very much impressed

ONE DAY AT A TIME.

BY HELEN HUNT JACKSON.

"One day at a time!" That's all it can be;
No faster than that is the hardest fate;
And days have their limits, however we Begin them too early and stretch them too late.
One day at a time
It's a wholesome rhyme,
A good one to live by—
A day at a time.

"One day at a time!" Every heart that aches
Knows only too well how long that can seem;
But it's never to-day which the spirit breaks.
It's the darkened future, without a gleam.

"One day at a time." A burden too great
To be borne for two can be borne for one;
Who knows what will enter to-morrow's gate?
While yet we are speaking all may be done.

"One day at a time!" When joy is at height—
Such joy as the heart can never forget—
And pulses are throbbing with wild delight,
How hard to remember that suns must set.

"One day at a time!" But a single day
Whatever its load, whatever its length;
And there's a bit of precious Scripture to say
That according to each, shall be our strength.

"One day at a time!" 'Tis the whole of life:
All sorrow, all joy, are measured therein.
The bound of our purpose, our noblest strife,
The one only countersign, sure to win!
One day at a time!
It's a wholesome rhyme,
A good one to live by,
A day at a time.

Address of the Bishops.

The quadrennial address of the Bishops was read to the Conference by Bishop A. W. Wilson. It is as follows:

Dearly Beloved Brethren: We cordially greet you in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. Your coming together is to us an evident token of the gracious care of our great Head over his church, and gives promise of blessing to accrue through your wise and faithful handling of the interests committed to your oversight. We shall not cease to pray for you, that "the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of Glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him, the eyes of your understanding being enlightened that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe."

We have reason to be grateful that the intellectual and moral activity of the age has disclosed no need of change in our "Articles of Religion," or standards of doctrine, nor has there been among us any serious demand for such change. The great body of our preachers and people hold firmly to the Methodistic statement of truth as being in full agreement with the words of our Lord Jesus Christ and the doctrine which is according to godliness." That statement has been subjected to close scrutiny by reason of its unavoidable relations to other forms of teaching, and has been fully tested in its application to individual and social life; and the results show it to be sufficient as the rule of faith and practice. Occasional sporadic efforts have been made to induce the church either to renounce its ancient confession, or to put upon it an interpretation not warranted by reason or by the "analogy of faith." These have been successfully resisted by the fidelity of our people to the teachings out of which the organic life of the church has grown, and by which its spiritual life has been nourished. We trust that the unity and power of the church may remain to the end of time unimpaired by the intrusion of heresies destructive to the simplicity and purity of its faith.

We rejoice to record our conviction that the spiritual life of the church has suffered no decline in the past four years. The faithful preaching of the truths characteristic of Methodism has been productive of gracious results; extensive revivals have been reported each year; large numbers have been added to the church; and very many of our members have made increase in faith and holiness. It has been demonstrated that our people are true to the principles of vital godliness, of experimental religion, by whomsoever they may be attacked, however subtle and enticing her appeal may be against them, and however strong the adverse current of public sentiment. In an age when the functions of the pulpit and pastorate are largely usurped by the secular press and platform, and doctrines are widely disseminated (sometimes from the pulpit itself) subversive of the authority of the Word of God and of the foundations of spiritual life, and when the attempt is made to substitute the amenities, culture and entertainments of educated society for the graces, virtues and fellowship of the church of God, it is gratifying to note the steadfastness with which our members adhere to the conviction that the church is a separate and divinely ordained association, taking its life and its law from its own living Head, and, by the terms of its existence, incapable of subjection or of conformity to this world.

As it is well known, the individual exceptions to this statement are many. Many walk of whom we have told you before that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ who mind earthly things. The instructions and exhortations of the pulpit, and the impressive and emphatic vows of the baptismal covenant, solemnly ratified and confirmed at the moment of their reception into our communion, are insufficient to restrain these from indulgences in dispositions and practices quite incompatible with Christian holiness and the purpose of the Christian Church. To them the exercises of godliness are tame and distasteful, the meaning of Christian fellowship is unknown, and the church is attractive only when it can strongly enough appeal to their sensuous tastes through an eccentric pulpit, an æsthetic service, and the sensational appliances so often employed as substitutes for the presence and power of the Holy Spirit. They would have the church enter the arena of this world, and compete with it upon its own ground and according to its own methods; and, failing in this, they refuse submission to the order and discipline of the church, bring confusion into our ranks, and by example and evil counsel pervert unwary and inexperienced souls.

Some of this evil is due to ignorance; some to the weakness and instability which offer no point of resistance to the enticements of the world; some to the arrogant claim, set up by wealth, culture and station, to exemption from the hard requirements of self-denial and unworldliness imposed by the gospel. Much of it, undoubtedly, might be abated by uniform, impartial, judicious and firm administration of discipline. The attitude of the church upon the question of conformity to the world is so pronounced, and has been so often authoritatively declared, that no one charged with the responsibilities of the pastoral office among us can show us any sufficient excuse for failure in its treatment. It is unnecessary to repeat deliverances that have gone forth in more than one pastoral address by authority of the General Conference, declaratory of the law and binding upon all our preachers and people. It will be well, if practicable, to indicate and provide for some satisfactory method of training, especially for our young converts, in "the doctrine which is according to godliness." The class meeting, whose province and power have been taken up by no other agency, has very generally fallen into disuse. Its revival, if it be possible, would be an incalculable gain to the church. But it can not again be made compulsory; and its voluntary observance seems to require a larger measure of spiritual life than is common with us. In its absence some more thorough and systematic method of pastoral instruction should be considered, in aid of which the sanctified abilities of the laity might be enlisted. No added office or order in the church is needed. We seek only the free and hearty co-operation in this pastoral service of the consecrated talents of the whole church. It is surely high time that the culture and skill of our members should be brought under contribution for the higher uses of religious life. By such means we may train up a generation exercised unto godliness, and prepare to assert and maintain the claims of personal holiness against all the seductions of the world and the wiles of the devil.

While we thus aim to secure our separateness from the world, we can not forget that by the terms of our gospel we are brought into special relations to it. Our responsibility is not restricted to the sphere of the interior life of the church. Our Lord's words, "Ye are the salt of the earth," "Ye are the light of the world," put upon us a sacred trust; while the apostolic exhortation, that supplications, prayers, intercessions, and thanksgivings be made for all men, for kings, and all that are in authority, is prompted by the consideration that a healthful social order and righteous rule are necessary to the "quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty," upon which the growth and prosperity of the church greatly depend. In the world, though not of it, the church acts intensely upon it, and in its turn, on many sides of its manifold life, is strongly influenced by it. These vital and responsible connections between the two should be consciously and constantly in view when regulating the affairs and shaping the economy of the church. Very many questions of social order are, on one side, principles of godliness, and the assertion and enforcement of them within the limits of its own life and action are the church's witness to the truth before the world. Our members have their names enrolled in the commonwealths and kingdoms of earth as well as written in heaven; and it is within the province of the church to exact that in the discharge of their functions as citizens, in the conduct of business, in the regulation of the family, and in the observance of social requirements they shall conform to and illustrate the law of life given in and by the Son of man. We can not hope, by impertinent and unwarranted interference in the affairs of government and society, to change the currents of human life; but by unequivocal testimony to the truth, and its constant and uniform application and enforcement within the sphere of the church's rightful authority, we may exert a healthful and saving influence upon the world. The careful observance of the scope and limit of the church's action, combined with bold, uncompromising enunciation of every ethical and spiritual principle of the gospel, will save us from embarrassment and entanglement in worldly schemes, and insure the greatest efficiency to our measures for saving men.

The unsettled state of the relations between men in the various conditions and callings of life—in many instances the positive antagonisms among them—make it obligatory upon the church to give more explicit expression to the law of Christian fellowship. The gospel of Christ—and that alone—gives promise of a satisfactory solution of the vexed and vexing problems of life and society. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," and its practical correlative, "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise," "Take heed and beware of covetousness," "Honor all men," and such like self-renouncing principles and commands, which put all men upon the common ground of mutual respect and helpfulness, are the contributions of our faith to the attainment of peace on earth and good-will among men—the only satisfaction for the needs of a disordered, restless world. To let men see, within the communion of saints, that these are practicable and vigorous elements of life, is to give the highest assurance that the success of the gospel is the true and only guarantee of the rights and interests of all men.

The conduct of the affairs of the church during the quadrennial period has been attended with as little difficulty as can be expected under any system administered by men. With very few exceptions, the preachers have been blameless; nor have we to mourn many departures from rectitude and propriety of life among our members. Close inspection and more vigorous application of discipline would, perhaps, have brought to light offenses that have escaped publication and censure; but it may be questioned if in any age or under any conditions the church has enjoyed greater freedom from the vices and sins that dishonor humanity and exclude from the kingdom of God. As a whole, the administration has been faithful, and its results commend our system as thoroughly effective and suited to the conditions and needs of our widely extended territory. The part taken by the Bishops and Annual Conferences in the conduct of affairs will be submitted for your inspection in the journals of the Conferences. With entire frankness we offer ourselves and our work for your investigation and judgment.

Our existing regulations require but little change to adjust them to the conditions of the time and growing demands of the people. It has been proposed to alter those affecting our ministry so far as to admit to orders every man appointed to the charge of a circuit, station, or mission. This would practically annul all provisions for a due and necessary trial of candidates for the ministry, and open the way for many and grave abuses. The end sought would be better attained by prohibiting the appointment of unordained men to such charges. Difficulties would, undoubtedly, attend administration under such provision; but no abuse could arise, and, as the number of such appointments is few compared with the whole number, the difficulties may be adjusted, and would gradually disappear. We do not, however, recommend any change in this feature of our system.

It may be well to review carefully the regulations concerning local preachers, and, if it be found necessary, provide for more accurate definition of their place and work, and for their greater efficiency. The Discipline makes it their duty "to aid the preacher in charge of the circuit, station or mission to which they belong," puts them under his direction, and requires them to report in writing to the Quarterly Conference. Whatever may be the cause, these provisions are to a considerable extent inoperative; and many of this class assume the functions of evangelists at large and carry on their work, without regard to disciplinary limitations, wherever they can find an open house—and sufficient compensation. The church is much indebted to the local ministry, and in many sections of the work is still, in a great measure, dependent upon it, but should not consent that the regular itinerant ministry be supplanted by practically irresponsible agencies. In some instances it is known that traveling preachers have taken a location for the purpose of engaging in evangelistic work, untrammeled by the restrictions of appointment and responsibility. Would it not be wise to so change the law as to put local preachers under the direction of the presiding elder for assignment of their work in the district? Proper adjustment of the local service to the enlarging and increasingly complex movements of our itinerancy may add much to the strength and effectiveness of both.

Not many cases have occurred to test the provision made by the last General Conference, for an appeal by a traveling preacher, in case of trial and conviction, in advance of the meeting of the General Conference, to a committee from an adjacent Conference; but, in the few who have called for its application, suggestions of difficulty have been presented that seem to indicate the propriety of a change of the law. The present arrangement, being virtually an appeal from one Annual Conference to another, seems likely to put the Conferences concerned in attitude of disagreement, and has too little of the connectional character to command unqualified respect for its judgments.

Other proposals for change in the processes of trial, looking to the removal of ambiguities and uncertainties, and providing for an unembarrassed administration of the law, will, in all probability, be submitted to you. These will receive your careful attention, for the order and purity of the church depend, in no small degree, upon the clearness and certainty of the provision for indictment and trial and the simplicity of the methods of procedure.

Before referring specifically to the institutions and enterprises of the church, we should take note of its estimated forces and the increase made since the last General Conference. Four years ago there were reported in the General Minutes 4,106 traveling preachers, of which number 3,885 were effective; the report of the last year shows 4,862, of which 4,295 are effective, an increase of 456 in the itinerant ranks. The local ministry has grown in the same period from 5,943 to 6,269, an addition of 326. There were, according to the Minutes of 1885, 980,645 members. The last returns give 1,166,019, an increase of 185,384. The whole number of preachers and members at present estimated is 1,177,150, an addition to our force in the four years of 186,156. In such measure the blessing of God has been upon our heritage and has rewarded the labors and prayers of his servants.

We thank God and take courage, while constrained to confess that the gains have not been proportioned to the resources and capabilities of the church and to record our conviction that intenser holiness, instant prayer, uncompromising faith—in a word, more thorough and universal consecration to our Lord and his work—would have produced far greater results.

These figures represent an immense fund of material resources for the Lord's uses. We can no longer plead poverty. The increase of wealth in our territory, in which our members have shared as largely as any other section of the community, has been unprecedented. We have enough upon which the Son of God may rightfully make claim to multiply many times over the work we have in hand.

Moreover, these more than a million members present a vast array of every order of mind and form of character which, devoted not informally and irregularly, but systematically, to the the interests and uses of the church, would give intelligence to the faith of all our people, elevate the standard of Christian life in general estimation, set up an impregnable defense against the encroachments of infidel thought, and expose the hollow pretensions of arrogant and truculent worldliness. In truth, nothing is wanting in the providential and gracious provision for our church. The one thing needful is the baptism of the Holy Ghost and of fire upon the entire body.

The various departments of activity in which the life of the church finds expression will be duly reported to you in the details of their management and results.

Our mission work is first in importance, and, beyond question, demands the best thought and the most skillful and thorough treatment that can be given to it. The proportions of the enterprise are but imperfectly apprehended. If the greatness of the numbers and the depth and urgency of the need of those in foreign lands to whom, in the providence of God, our church is called to minister the gospel, were fully known, our apathy would surely give place to the compassion with which the Lord looked upon the multitudes "scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd." The time is fully come when broader and more vigorous measures should be devised to satisfy this great and growing demand. Evasive pleas of ignorance, poverty and home wants will no longer relieve us of responsibility; and they find their more than sufficient answer in the abundant and constantly increasing wealth and luxury of our homes and the immense investments and skillfully planned and far-reaching business projects in which so many of the professed followers of Christ are concerned. It is the standing reproach of our Lord and leader that "the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." At this late day in the church's history it is more than a reproach; in the face of the demands and opportunities of the age it assumes the proportions of a crime. The foresight, skill, boldness, energy and self-sacrifice devoted to secular uses would, if turned to the purposes of the gospel, in a little while change the thought and heart of the world. The endeavors of our church thus far have been scarcely more than tentative, just disclosing the breadth of the field and the conditions under which the work must be carried forward, with enough of practical result to give assurance of complete success so soon as we shall make hearty and adequate response to the call of God.

The last General Conference directed the College of Bishops to include the foreign missions in their plan of visitation, and to give them, in common with the church at home, immediate supervision. In compliance with this requirement, China, Japan, and Brazil have each been visited twice, and Mexico annually. The results have justified this measure. Difficulties that threaten the harmony and progress of the work have been adjusted, our brethren abroad have been brought into closer sympathy with us, and their hopefulness and zeal have been stimulated afresh by these touches of home life, while the more immediate report to the churches at home has given greater confidence in our mission work, and enhanced the interest in our operations.

The missions in China and Brazil have, according to the order of the last General Conference, been erected into Annual Conferences. The mission in Japan has taken on very compact form, and has vindicated the wisdom of its establishment by the number and character of its converts and its extended and growing influence upon Japanese life.

In China, our oldest, and we must consider it, our most important mission, we are suffering for want of men. The extent of that densely populated field and the enormous exactions made upon our laborers under most trying conditions of climate and life call imperatively for large accessions to the force. We are not adequately furnished in any department—educational, medical or evangelistic. The changes going on in China will undoubtedly create a greatly increased demand for the education given by Christian missionaries. Other mission establishments are preparing on a large scale, with heavy endowments, or appropriations and full staff of teachers, to keep up with the demand. Our facilities are not equal to the present necessities, and must be strongly re-enforced before we can hope to offer our fair contribution to the educational agencies of the empire. A plan to bring our institutions in China into the unity of a system is now under consideration. It promises advantage to the work. With this effected, and a sufficient increase of teaching force provided, we shall have a powerful adjunct to our evangelical ministry, insuring stability, permanency and steady growth to our church in China. Still larger additions should be made to the regular ministerial force, until, with the native helpers in our service, we shall be able to occupy the commanding points in the province, to which our present work is confined.

Japan, our latest mission, has been so compactly and effectively organized, and has wrought so successfully, that its members feel impelled to ask that it be erected into an Annual Conference. The thoroughness of their administration and the reasons given in their memorial seem to us to justify the petition. We recommend that it be granted. Beyond the organization of the Annual Conference, they anticipate the union of the various Methodist bodies of Japan in one independent native church. Overtures have been made looking to this end, and the proposal will be submitted to you in due form, but we deem it inexpedient to take action.

A few years' experience in the working of an Annual Conference will be of service in training our mission for the wider movements of an independent native church.

It ought to be observed that in this mission no grants have been made for the election of churches or the education or support of native preachers. The only payments to natives are those made to interpreters and teachers for our missionaries. The Japanese converts supply out of their own meager resources the funds necessary for the training of their ministry, and are building according to their power such churches as will suit their uses. A bequest of the late Thomas Branch, of Richmond, Va., enabled the Board of Missions, at its meeting in May, 1889, to provide for the erection and establishment of a school of high grade at Kobe—an institution much needed in this region where Buddhism has taken a strongly aggressive attitude, and brought to its aid the appliances of modern thought and Christian civilization. It is very evident that in both China and Japan the work of the ministry must be supplemented by that of the school, and provision must be made for the training of men who can by sound speech stop the mouths of gainsayers. Indeed, though much has been done in Japan calling for gratitude and exciting wonder, the indications, if we are not deceived, point to difficulty and struggle in the days to come, and not far distant. We must not cajole ourselves into the belief that an easy conquest awaits us. All the forces of heathenism are bestirring themselves, and, learning wisdom from their adversaries, are industriously employing the agencies of education and propagandism to check the advancing power of the Christian faith. They have allies in the various forms of infidel thought and teaching, which have grown up in the midst of our Christian civilization, and are now seeking to enshrine and intrench themselves in the heart of heathendom. They must be met with all the weapons that the armory of God will supply, and no sluggish, defensive attitude will avail. Only eager, determined, aggressive movement, with all the forces at our command, will insure success in the final conflict.

The missions in Mexico and Brazil are making steady progress. The forms of opposition encountered here are widely different from those of heathenism, but hardly less fanatical and malignant. Yet the providence of God has so directed the affairs of government and society in both these lands that obstructions to the work of the gospel have, for the most part, been taken out of the way, and among even the prejudiced masses our pure Protestant faith and worship are supplanting the superstitions which have so long had rule over them.

Indeed, in every land the hand of God has so evidently prepared the way for the introduction of the gospel that the refusal of the church to enter with its message and witness to the truth must involve the guilt of deliberate disobedience to the heavenly call; while the aroused antagonism of the old faiths dreading their overthrow calls for the energetic forward movement of all the available forces of the church of God under alert, skillful, enterprising leaders. This is not a skirmish of picket lines. It is the collision of hostile worlds. A general conscription is the demand of our day. The great and effectual door is open to us, but the many adversaries confront us.

All the conditions abroad call for the inauguration of plans more liberal and more positive in our treatment of the church's relation to missions. A timid, hesitating, vacillating policy defeats itself. To put work demanding the brain and energy of half a dozen of the best of God's elect upon one man, and then tie his hands by the restrictions of a narrow economy, is to proclaim want of faith in our avowed purpose and invite the indifference of the church to our enterprise. Parsimony and illiberality on one side are as hurtful and sinful as prodigacy and extravagance on the other. Your Board of Missions—a body of prudent, earnest, prayerful men—has been constantly embarrassed in its endeavor to provide for present and pressing need by the insufficiency of its means of communication with and appeal to our people. To the majority—we venture to say—this Board is a remote and ineffective agency, out of sympathy with the real struggling life of the church and known chiefly by its occasional vociferous clamor for moneys to be expended in visionary and fruitless undertaking in foreign lands. It belongs to this General Conference to make ampler provision for bringing this supreme purpose of the Lord and Head of the church closer to the understanding and sympathy of his people. We beg you, brethren, to give wise and thorough consideration to this great need and to the best methods of furnishing for it adequate supply.

The election of two secretaries, instead of one, is, in our judgment, required for this service; and it would tend to secure more general and more generous contributions if the General Conference should insist that this collection be made in connection with no other.

The Board of Missions chosen by the last General Conference has, by the fidelity, painstaking and practical wisdom with which it has discharged its functions, proved itself worthy of the confidence reposed in it.

The work of the Women's Board of Missions deserves your attention. With great patience and zeal these fellow-helpers of ours in the gospel of Christ have prosecuted their labors with no small measure of success. In China and Brazil, in Mexico and on the border, and in the Indian Territory, in the schools under their care, through Bible women and by hospital work they have diligently ministered to the wants of women and children and prepared the way of the Lord. Much of the success of our regular missionary service is due to their efforts, and in many places this form of work has become indispensable. In the church at home their zeal has provoked many; and a wider and more intelligent interest in the extension of the kingdom of Christ has attended upon the organization and working of their societies.

It has been questioned whether, under the terms of the Discipline, which restrict woman's work to "women and children in heathen lands," the Woman's Board had authority to enter Mexico, Brazil and the Indian Territory. To remove all embarrassment, we suggest that the action taken by them heretofore be ratified, and their Constitution so changed as to include non-Protestant lands, with the Mexicans of the border and Indians of the Territories.

Difficulties and delays occurring and, in some instances, actual loss incurred in the transmission of their funds under the present arrangement moved the Woman's Board, at its annual meeting in May, 1889, to adopt a memorial to this General Conference, asking that they be authorized to send their funds direct to the missions by their own treasurer. This request may be safely granted, with a provision for quarterly and annual examination and audit of the treasurer's accounts by the parent Board. Every proper facility should be afforded these faithful women for the prosecution of their work, and every reasonable precaution taken against unnecessary interference with their plans. The church has had much benefit from them, and may, without distrust, anticipate greater results from their services in the future. The publications of both the parent and the Woman's Board have been useful to the cause and are indispensable to the wider diffusion of information. The more abundant use of the press and distribution of missionary literature in its various forms for the instruction of the church, deserve your consideration. Some means should be adopted for giving all our members the fullest possible statement of our missionary movements.

In response to invitation duly extended, two delegates, under direction of the Board of Missions, represented our church in the World's Mission Conference held in London in June, 1888. It was a remarkable exhibition of the growth and power of the modern missionary movement. More than fifteen hundred men and women from every part of the world, and speaking among them nearly every known tongue, discussed for ten days every phase and problem of missionary life and work. The intensely evangelical character of the meeting was one notable feature, and another was the unity of sentiment and harmony of action declared and reported from almost every field. It was a truer testimony to the oneness of the church of God than could be furnished by the obliteration of denominational lines and the reduction of the whole to absolute uniformity under one administration. Such an assembly, gathered under such auspices, is itself notice to the world that the work begun and brought to such proportions will be carried on to completion. The zeal of the Lord of Hosts will do it.

The Board of Church Extension has proven a valuable adjunct to the Board of Missions in our Western territory, and has aided in no insignificant degree in conserving and building up much of our work in the older Conferences. The statistics and reports of this Board, which are worthy of careful study, exhibit an astonishing result from the energetic and wise management of comparatively limited resources, and clearly indicate the great advantage that would accrue to the church from a more generous outlay in this direction. The work is so well organized and skillfully conducted that nothing seems to be required for its continued and enlarging success beyond provision for ampler supplies. The Woman's Department of this Board, organized to procure funds to purchase or secure parsonages, has not received the attention that it merits. The annual contributions have been insignificant, and the interest in its purpose and plans so slight that much difficulty has been found in establishing the necessary local societies and enlisting the services of the women of the church in this behalf. The same objections have been raised to its operation that have been encountered at the inception of every other enterprise of the church—objections answered in each recurring instance by the event, and which should long since have lost their force with godly and unprejudiced men and women. Due consideration of what has been done by this agency with very small means will show great benefit conferred and to be conferred by it upon many weak charges and destitute preachers, who without it would hardly be able to provide homes of any sort for their families. The funds of this department are distributed by the Board of Church Extension with the same caution and sound judgment that mark its other transactions. We trust that the church may come to a more thorough knowledge of this movement and extend to it a more liberal hand.

The church in the West, aided by both Boards, has made gratifying progress. In the face of difficulties hardly appreciable by our brethren in the older Conferences, and under pressure of sore poverty, the devoted and self-sacrificing men to whom our interests in that section have been committed have worked their way to compactness of organization which gives assurance of permanency and shows what an efficient and faithful ministry can accomplish even in the midst of unfriendly surroundings. Churches, parsonages and schools have been built, and the institutions and character of our church have been maintained and vindicated. These men deserve honorable mention for their achievements, and ought to be re-enforced and supplied with the means requisite for advancement in those rapidly developing regions.

As a very efficient aid in the prosecution of their work we think it advisable that the Book Agent be directed to provide for the publication of a weekly paper in the city of San Francisco, Cal., the editor thereof to be elected by the General Conference.

The greatly increased sales of the Publishing House, the additions to the list of its publications, the multiplications of issues of the periodicals, the decrease of its bonded debt, and the creation of a sinking fund sufficient to take up all outstanding bonds whenever they may be presented, the absence of any new indebtedness, and the distribution under the restrictive rule of a considerable proportion of its proceeds among the Annual Conferences give assurance of the continued prosperity of that institution. Improvement has been made in almost every department of the House; and there is promise that energetic prosecution of its legitimate business under the same careful management will, in a few years, enable it to satisfy all demands of the church for a strong, wholesome and attractive religious literature.

The conditions of the Publishing House justify the recommendations that it shall make provisions for the translation and publication of our Sunday-school and other needed religious literature in Spanish and Portuguese for the use of our missions in Mexico and Brazil. It will thus aid materially in conserving and extending our work abroad as well as at home.

The committee ordered by the last General Conference for the revision of the Hymn Book was duly appointed and made no delay in the discharge of their duty. The result is before the church in the shape of a collection of hymns retaining all the best characteristics, lyrical and doctrinal, of its predecessor, while much of the old material has been removed and a judicious selection from the best of the more modern hymns introduced. It will, we believe, compare favorably with the hymn-books of other denominations, and supply the wants of the church for, at least, another generation.

The Sunday-school department shows progress in the number of schools and of officers, teachers and pupils, as also in the amount and quality of its literature. This is one of those providential agencies whose precise character and relations to the general work have hardly yet been finally determined. In its efficient ordering so much depends upon local and individual influences that our laws wisely constituted the Quarterly Conference a Board of Managers for the Sunday-school, thus putting its operation and control in the hands of responsible men conversant with the conditions of the church and community, and fettering them with no restriction constraining to uniformity of method.

The international series of lessons is generally, if not universally adopted, and, in so far, furnishes a bond of unity between the schools of the entire church. Unhappily, in many instances, these lessons, which are but excerpts in systematic order from the Scriptures, are accepted as a sufficient substitute for the whole Word of God. The evils of such a violation of the integrity of the Bible are apparent. Every pupil should be taught to compare Scripture—with Scripture and learn to interpret every part according to the "analogy of faith." We are of the opinion, also, that the catechetical method of instruction has special advantages, and regret its disuse in so many of the schools. The catechisms of the Church ought to go into every class in every school.

There is in some localities an excessive disposition to make the Sunday-school a place and means of entertainment for young people. There seems to be an apprehension that the minds of the children are insensible to the attractions of the gospel and that, if we would keep them under our influence, we must appeal to the sensuous side of their nature—"make provision for the flesh." The Lord has taught us more truly, and out of the mouth of babes and sucklings has ordained his own praise. Care must be taken lest, in the cultivation of these natural proclivities, foundations be laid for habitual and ruinous self-indulgence in the later years of life.

It is hoped that, in the Sunday-school, the new Hymn Book may supplant the evanescent and unauthorized collections of songs so widely current. There is in these more of loose, unscriptural expressions and maudlin sentiment, damaging to healthful faith, than can be compensated by the satisfaction of the demand for novelty and the attractiveness of the music.

Under the gracious guidance of the Holy Spirit and the wise and firm administration of the men charged with, this responsibility, we doubt not these evils will disappear and the Sunday-school become more and more a sound and strong saving agency for the young of the church. Its spiritual quality improves steadily. The number of conversions in the Sunday-school is larger in the present report than in any previous year. The church and the Sunday-school are being compacted together, having the same aims, moved by the same spirit. It is impossible to foresee the final form of this institution, but it requires no prophetic vision to anticipate that in it will be seen the last and fullest expression of the church's fatherly care for its young. It will call out the sympathy and enlist the energies of all who love our Lord Jesus Christ, and in its turn, like childhood in the home, will evoke and cultivate the highest and finest qualities of our nature. In view of the great interest attached to this cause and the far-reaching results anticipated, it may be wise to put the Sunday-school department upon a broader foundation and give added force to the editorial staff.

The general prosperity of the church has been shared in their measure by our educational institutions. Debts have been removed, endowments secured, facilities provided for larger and more liberal as well as more thorough education and opportunity given to greater numbers of our young people, whose conditions in life forbid them, without such help, to seek scholastic training. At the same time the spiritual life is not subordinated to the requirements of intellectual growth. Christ is set forth as the life of men and the light of the world, and his supremacy over every side of our composite nature is constantly asserted. Increasing numbers of young men are preparing in our schools for the ministry, giving promise of such trained faculty for the pulpit and pastorate as will, under the baptism of the Holy Spirit, greatly enhance the efficiency of those functions. All our schools labor under the embarrassment of sharp competition with other institutions which, by reason of State aid or heavy endowments, can offer the advantages of secular education at very little or no cost for tuition. Our successes have been achieved in spite of these disadvantages, and speak well for the fidelity to the church and the cause of Christian education of the faculties and trustees of our schools. The incalculable importance of educating our young under the auspices and within the atmosphere of our own church ought to commend large benefactions for the full endowment of our schools.

With great propriety, in view of its history and large promise to our church, we may make special mention of Vanderbilt University, a worthy monument of its benefactors and of Bishop McTyeire, who so faithfully and ably administered the trust committed to him by the sagacity of its generous founder, which continues its contributions to the high purpose of Christian education. In its seven departments with their various schools, all thoroughly equipped, the present register shows more than seventy professors and other appointees for instruction and service in its different lines, and more than six hundred students. It is especially gratifying to note that while larger requirements have been made for admission to the classes, and for the securement of the degrees of its Theological Department, there has also been an increase in the number of its students. More than fifty young men are now pursuing their studies in the University, preparatory to the work of Christian ministry. Of these twenty-three are A. B. graduates of different colleges. This advancement in the grade and number of its students is due in part to scholarships established and awarded for distinguished attainments to the A. B. graduates of our colleges.

It is also cause for congratulation that a number of the friends of the institution are quietly and generously founding scholarships to be awarded as premiums for excellence of character and attainments to young men in the preparatory schools of the country, who, without such aid, could not procure a university course. By the generosity of Cornelius Vanderbilt, a grandson of the founder and bearing his honored name, Mechanical Hall has been added during the quadrennium to the buildings on the grounds and equipped for instruction in manual technology. Also a magnificent building has been erected in the heart of the city of Nashville for the use of the Law and Dental Departments of the University. We are persuaded that you will not fail to regard this institution as a providential trust, affording the amplest facilities for thorough culture to the young men of our church of our Southern country and calling for devout gratitude to God.

It is right that mention be made here of another institution closely connected with our Western work.

Corvallis College, which, for twenty years, has conducted, as one of its departments, the Agricultural College of Oregon under a contract formally entered into by its trustees with the Legislature of the State, and in specific terms made perpetual, has of late been crippled by an effort to withdraw the funds, now increased to more than $25 000 per annum, from the institution, and also to invalidate its title to the Agricultural Farm, purchased by and deeded to the college, for the uses of said department. With the aid of very able counsel the church has endeavored to maintain its rights under the contract before the courts of Oregon. It is gratifying to know, from the decisions already rendered by the courts and from the assurances of counsel familiar with all the facts, that there is good ground to believe that our rights will ultimately be vindicated and the college be perpetuated with increasing usefulness to the church and the country.

The literary enticements of our time constitute a positive threat to the manhood and womanhood of the coming generation. All the worst and vilest elements of life are pushed forth daily from the press in the attractive guise of fiction, and become the almost exclusive nutriment of thousands of young minds. We are not disposed to deny that there is much in the form of fictitious literature not to be condemned; but the largest circulation is accorded to the sensational, sentimental, dissipating, salacious expressions of men of corrupt minds and the vagaries of infidel thought so attired that they may surreptitiously make their way into the inner sanctuaries of uncorrupted natures, and poison the fountain of their faith. At any cost our young people should be secured against this pest; and no means of security appears to us except that which is found in a thorough Christian education: A trained mind, impregnated with Christian principles, is proof against the enticement. In view of this immeasurable evil, as well as many others to which our children are exposed, it is hardly too much to say that it is the church's duty to give Christian education to all her sons and daughters.

We owe a vast debt of gratitude to God for the onward movement along these lines; and, believing in the perpetual guidance of the church by the Holy Spirit, we look forward to the time when all embarrassments shall be removed, Christian education will become the common right of all the children of the church, and Christ will have the place in art, literature, and science that he holds in the faith of his true disciples.

The General Conference of 1882 committed the church (we may say wisely) to the support of the educational undertakings of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America. This movement is of grave importance in the present aspect of social affairs and to the future of our country. It represents our attitude upon the question of the relations between ourselves and the colored people. We can not disregard their claim upon us. We can not refuse to aid, as far as in us lies, in providing a safe and sound ministry for home in educating and elevating them, and by all Christian means preparing home for a higher life in this world, and for the fellowship of the kingdom of God. The scope of their schools at Augusta, Ga., and Jackson, Tenn., is limited to the education of teachers and preachers for the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church. They are in charge of ministers of our own communion, appointed by your Bishops, whose character, together with the oversight by trustees selected from both churches, is guarantee that the work done shall be in agreement with the original purpose, sound and fruitful, such as shall commend itself to the sober judgment of godly, thoughtful men. Both the schools are in need, and are making strong appeal to us for help. Christian principle and the strong bond of Christian fellowship between the two churches move us to commend their interests to your care.

In the establishment and regulation of these agencies the church has been directed by the providence of God, and is thus furnished with a large—we dare not say complete—equipment for the final fulfillment of its mission to the world. For their perfect working and the adequate discharge of their various functions, reinforcements of men and means are needed. Their scope requires to be extended and their energies made more intense and multiplied. All the fields of the world lie open before us, and all possible products of the Christian faith and labor are expected of us. The Word of God must not be bound by our ignorance, indolence, covetousness, or self-indulgence. Every channel of our activity must be unobstructed, and through all the Word must have their course. It may be that as the conditions of human life become more complex and difficult new and more effective agencies will be required for the entire fulfillment of the purpose of God concerning us. In every such case a living and faithful church will be led by the Holy Spirit, in the divine order of its development, to the recognition of the need and due provision for it. For the church is the only authorized, accredited and empowered agent to do the work of Christ in the earth. It is the body of Christ, the organ of expression of his truth and his power. Sustaining such relation to its great Head, it forms its own agencies and gives to them its sanction in the measure of their subordination to its great purpose and conformity to its law. It omits nothing from its provision that is included in its great commission, and orders its entire system of teaching and training so as most surely to secure the attainments of holiness, "without which no man shall see the Lord." It has not abandoned the truth of entire sanctification taught by its founder, nor turned away from his expressed aim to "spread scriptural holiness through these lands." Nor can it agree that this one purpose of its whole being shall be taken out of its hands by unauthorized, self-constituted agencies, working upon eccentric lines, and claiming exclusive right and power for methods and movements not included in the economy of the church, and not in agreement with its order and administration. It will not delegate its responsibility, nor give its glory to another. It is quite competent to discharge its own functions; and, until its candlestick is removed out of its place, will not consent that any shall usurp its prerogative and wield its authority.

The baptism of the Holy Spirit upon its ordered and united hosts is the one sufficient guarantee that its labor, in whatever direction expended, shall not be in vain. Let the fires of God be kept burning upon the altars of heart, home and church, and ceaseless and unstinted sacrifice of self, substance, and energy be made to the Lord who died for us and is alive forevermore, and then the sacred presence that led Israel through the wilderness, gave his people statute and ordinance from the throne of his holiness, and brought them in triumph to the land which he had sworn to their fathers to give them for a possession, will be our guide and law-giver, and give us an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom.

Since the last General Conference many who were prominent in the councils of the church have gone to their reward. Among them—and some of them were men of renown—none has made a broader and more indelible impression in the history and economy of the church than our late senior Bishop, Holland N. McTyeire. As an able minister of the New Testament, a lucid and cogent writer, a wise and vigorous administrator and sound expositor of Methodist law and usage, he had but few peers. He filled, in due order, the places of pastor, editor and Bishop, and in each and all of them was "blameless in life and official administration." His last word was "Peace," and with this he entered into rest February 15, 1889. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace." You will provide for due memorial of one so eminently worthy.

The loss thus sustained calls, in our judgment, for the addition of one man to the present College of Bishops.

Finally, brethren, we desire and pray that all your deliberation may be conducted in the spirit of love and peace, and that your conclusions may be so wise and fruitful that our whole body shall be fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, and make increase unto the edifying of itself in love.

Nearly everybody needs a good medicine at this season, to purify the blood and build up the system. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most popular and successful spring medicine and blood purifier. It cures scrofula, all humors, dyspepsia, sick headache, that tired feeling.

If we might be allowed to suggest a motto for the hirelings of the Lottery Company among the Louisiana newspapers we would select this saying of the Immortal Sir Hudibras.

"For what is worth is anything, but so much money as 'twill bring?"

People Wonder
WHEN they find how rapidly health is restored by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The reason is that this preparation contains only the purest and most powerful alteratives and tonics. To thousands yearly it proves a veritable elixir of life.

Mrs. Jos. Lake, Brockway Centre, Mich., writes: "Liver complaint and indigestion made my life a burden and came near ending my existence. For more than four years I suffered untold agony. I was reduced almost to a skeleton, and hardly had strength to drag myself about. All kinds of food distressed me, and scarcely the most delicate could be digested at all. Within the time mentioned several physicians treated me without giving relief. Nothing that I took seemed to do any permanent good until I began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which has produced wonderful results. Soon after commencing to take the Sarsaparilla I could see an in my condition, my appetite began to return and with it came the ability to digest all the food taken, my strength improved each day, and after a few months of faithful attention to your directions, I found myself a well woman, able to attend to all household duties. The medicine has given me a new lease of life, and I cannot thank you too much."

"We, the undersigned, citizens of Brockway Centre, Mich., hereby certify that the above statement, made by Mrs. Lake, is true in every particular and entitled to full credence."—O. P. Chamberlain, G. W. Waring, C. A. Wells, Druggist.

"My brother, in England, was, for a long time, unable to attend to his occupation, by reason of sores on his foot. I sent him Ayer's Almanac and the testimonials it contained induced him to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using it a little while, he was cured, and is now a well man, working in a sugar mill at Brisbane, Queensland, Australia."—A. Attewell, Sharbot Lake, Ontario.

Two New Bishops.

At the election for Bishops, on Monday, Rev. A. G. Haygood, D. D., received 171 votes on the first ballot, and was elected. Rev. O. P. Fitzgerald, D.D., was elected on the third ballot.

Editorial Correspondence.

The fourth day of the Conference was a busy one. Standing committees began making reports. The Committees on Boundaries, Sunday-schools, and Itinerancy, all made reports which were laid over under the rule. Resolutions, petitions and memorials looking to various changes in our polity came in from many sections of the church. The readers of the ADVOCATE will read with pleasure the action of this General Conference in regard to our special pet, the Louisiana Lottery. The following paper introduced by the entire delegations from Louisiana, North Mississippi and Mississippi Conferences was passed with an enthusiastic and unanimous rising vote:

Whereas, Beyond question, the Louisiana State Lottery is a recognized evil and a national disgrace, corrupting the morals of the people from one end of this land to the other, and is, therefore, the enemy of the people of all the States and of the church of God throughout our country; and

Whereas, All of our Methodists in Louisiana, together with all of the other good people of that State, headed by their noble Governor, are at this time engaged in a mighty resistance to the attempt now being made to extend the life and ruinous work of that monstrous iniquity for twenty-five years longer; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this General Conference are moved with profound sympathy for their brethren of Louisiana, and will, by all proper means in their power, aid them in their effort to forever rid themselves of the Louisiana State Lottery and of all other lotteries.

On this subject, the Daily Advocate spoke as follows:

The condemnation of the Louisiana Lottery abomination by rising vote was timely. We hope it may strengthen the hands of the friends of honesty and truth in that commonwealth in their fight against that disgraceful and pernicious institution, whose days, we trust, are nearly numbered.

The Conference adjourned at an early hour. The evening was taken up by earnest work in the committees, much being accomplished.

The Sabbath was spent in the usual way. All the Methodist pulpits were occupied by members of the Conference, and many of the pulpits of the other denominations. I had the pleasure of preaching for the Lafayette Park Presbyterian Church. I am nearly always put off on our good Presbyterian friends; but why I can not tell. I hear reports of great sermons yesterday by many of the brethren, but as it would be invidious to mention names, I forbear.

The fifth day began with a full house and a determination to accomplish something. A call of standing committees brought quite a number of well-digested papers before the Conference for action. The Committees on Sunday-schools, Boundaries, Episcopacy, Revisal, all made reports which lie over under the rule. The Special Committee on Introduction reported, and appointed Wednesday and Thursday evenings next as the time of the reception of fraternal messengers from other Christian bodies, the reception to take place at Centenary Church.

The work of the sixth day was very heavy. Four hours in Conference in the morning session, three hours of the afternoon in committee work and two hours at night in the same work, made up a day of solid employment, wearying to the flesh. The standing committees, by the number of their reports, gave evidence that they had spent much labor upon the matter referred to them. The Committee on Episcopacy brought in a resolution which was promptly passed by the Conference, which will give satisfaction to the people on the Pacific Coast. The resolution is that "one of our Bishops ought to reside on the Pacific Coast." During the morning session Dr. A. S. Hunt, secretary of the American Bible Society, represented that great interest before the body. His address was a clear and forcible presentation of the work of spreading the Scriptures over the world, and was listened to with profound attention by the Conference. At its close, Bro. Peterson, of Virginia, struck up "Coronation," which was sung with great feeling by the audience. Quite a spirited debate was sprung upon the question of printing the Ritual of the church in the twenty-five cents' edition of the Hymn Book. The drift of the opinion seemed to be that our people needed to be familiarized with the Ritual, and that printing the same in the Hymn Book would be a good way to effect that object. The final action was that the Book Agent was instructed to publish in all our Hymn Books those parts of the Ritual relating to the Recognition of Members, the Burial of the Dead, and the Sacraments.

Some good stories are leaking out on some delegates. For instance, a delegate, who is quartered at the Lindell Hotel, being accustomed, when attending Annual Conferences to excuse himself to his hostess when invited out to dine, said to the waiter as he left the breakfast room: "Tell Mrs. Lindell for me, that I am invited out to dine to-day and she need not wait dinner for me." In this connection, I will simply say that none of the Louisiana delegation are quartered at the Lindell!

The seventh day was also a busy day, and very much work was accomplished. The record is now about the same for each day. Four hours in the Conference-room and from four to six hours in the committee-rooms make up the day's doings. This day, however, had a very fine close. In the evening, at Centenary Church, was the reception of the fraternal delegate from the British Conference, Rev. D. J. Waller. He was introduced by Bishop Keener. Mr. Waller is a man of very fine and commanding appearance, and his manner quite easy and unaffected. His address was one hour and twenty minutes long, but was heard with profoundest attention, and elicited frequent applause from the enthusiastic audience. I hope the readers of the ADVOCATE will soon have the pleasure of reading this eloquent speech from the first fraternal messenger which the British Conference has ever sent to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

C. W. CARTER.

The Governor's message is a statesman-like document, and reflects great credit upon its author's head and heart. It is exhaustive upon all topics of political moment to Louisianians. It treats soundly of State eleemosynary interests, schools, levees, criminal laws, etc., and that chief of criminal subjects, the Lottery. The political tone is comprehensive and moderate, and the literary above praise. We do not remember to have seen a finer body of pure English than that which conveys his unanswerable arraignment of the Lottery. When Morris had heard it read, he doubled his bid for the State.

Roman Catholic Unity and the Trinity of Methodist Missions in Japan.

The Holy Family, a Roman Catholic paper of this city, quotes Bro. Chapman, in a late number of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, about the necessity of an union between the three Methodist bodies in Japan, and then grows dithyrambic, first, over the want of continuity in Protestant effort for the conversion of the world, and then over the oneness of Roman thought and effort in the same direction. We thought this discussion had been tabled long ago when the mighty Bossuet laid down his pen in despair, and when Edgar, the eloquent, swept the field until "the last armed foe expired;" but the editor of the Holy Family proves himself to be no mean exorcist, and will have us to look upon this ghost of centuries once more.

Indeed, the trouble with Roman Catholics seems to be the haunt that that church is what it once was, before the lightning of the Reformation struck it in Germany in Luther's time, and in France, England and Scotland in the time of Calvin and Knox, leaving it a branchless and splintered trunk, and that what it acquired in former times, as an influential branch of the one only and true church, is far more to be considered than its future territorial conquest in the name of Christ. The unity of the church—that is to say, its past unity—must stand for its present inanity and barrenness. Union, it is admitted, is a good thing for a living body, but it is a quite uninteresting feature of a dead one. A body without brain or heart could never communicate life to another body, though it might, with a great deal of truthfulness, insist upon its unity. Alas! the brother can never make us believe that "one Lord, one faith, one baptism," means the Roman Catholic Church. There is one authority in that church, it is true, wielded by one hand of despotism to guard its feeble autonomy, but the matter of union ends there. The voice of the Pope and the priest is mighty in human politics where external unity is everything and the biggest show of hands (wielding ballots) wins the day; but what about an union of hearts? Spiritual union is far more to be desired for both human and divine ends than corporate, and we marvel that on this subject our contemporary should take so little account of it. "Militarism" is a new coinage of the word "mint" of the age, and it expresses what we never desire to see in the church of Christ. What Christ desires in his followers is not a thousand soldiers that stand shoulder to shoulder, but a thousand hearts that beat as one; not an union of submerged and characterless drops, but of free, glad waves catching the sunshine and singing the praises of their Maker.

Rather than be told what physical union can do, we should be glad to hear what it has done and is doing. That the Roman Catholic Church is not at all in the race for world-conquest, as it is expressed in mission fields, is so vital a fact to this discussion that the wonder is that the writer of the Holy Family article did not begin by admitting it. If corporosity proves so much, figures ought to be admitted to prove something, and we should be glad to know from the editor of the Holy Family, how much more Roman Catholicism is doing for the conversion of Africa, China, India, Japan and the countries of the East than Protestantism. Or, failing in this, if he would explain to us how it happens that the periods of missionary renascence that have reached that effete body, though occurring at very rare intervals, have all been communicated by Protestant activity for the salvation of the heathen. Neither—if we may be permitted to continue in this strain, since there is so much at stake—is Roman Catholic unity a good thing for home evangelization if we consider the countries of the world which are dominated by it. That unity has been almost too heavy a burden for Spain, Portugal, Italy, Austria, Ireland, the countries of South America, Mexico and France (its whole dominion), and, if we may except the last, which was more than half Protestant three centuries ago, and which is now most restive under the mere shadow of papal authority that rests upon her bright domain, we should say that that dark array ought to be forever conclusive against her pretensions to a gospel mission to any heathen but her own. For centuries there have been no Francis Xaviers or St. Bernards in the Roman fold, and that aged matron has had nothing to do but to play with her apron-strings in monasteries and convents and to fulminate in decrees the virtue of that sort of unity which the rulers of the earth naturally find it impossible to avoid identifying with the most vulgar kind of political dominion. Some time last year one of her priests died of leprosy, and the thing was so much out of the natural order that it nearly took her patrician breath, and was wafted on the journalistic winds everywhither, yet the same thing is repeatedly occurring (and during this decade) in Protestant mission fields, and not the slightest mention is made of it. Rome should interest herself in beating up a crusade among the nations of Europe against the giant evil of slavery a quarter of a century after it has disappeared from the earth, or in establishing, by archiepiscopal proclamations, the absolute political equality of the Africo-American for an equally extended period of time after it has been grafted upon the organic law of the land, for political effect; or in keeping jesuitical watch upon secular newspapers and upon the treasuries of the republican nations of the earth, great and small, for the promotion of her unity; and let the missionary shibboleth alone for conscience sake, if not for argument's sake. The combined forces of heathendom could not imprison Paul or Peter or the gospel they preached for any appreciable period of time; but, alas! their successor is a close captive to the god of mammon and could hardly find locomotive power enough in Italy to move the vaults of the Vatican beyond her borders. Paul had a chain of iron which his zeal for world-conquest wore in twain; but Leo has one of gold which has bound an hundred Popes to a destiny of slothful inaction. But let us say, in conclusion, by way of explanation, that the only true and apostolical church has been endeavoring to capture Japan ever since the days of the soldier-priest, St. Xavier, and, if it be not wholly impertinent, in the same connection to inquire if she has such a patent right upon heathendom, as a monopoly of this virtue of union ought to confer, why has she in despair turned the job over to the Methodists (?).

Bishop Keener at Centenary.

It was a noble audience that greeted the senior Bishop at Centenary Church on Sunday morning. The great building was crowded on the main floor and in the galleries to its utmost capacity. On the platform sat many distinguished men, including Dr. Waller, of the British Conference. The sermon was worthy of the occasion. It was based on John iv, 21-23, and was as distinct and lofty an assertion of the spirituality of true religion as it has ever been our privilege to hear. A new revelation of God, a new worship and a new worshiper—these were the three organizing thoughts of the discourse; and around them were grouped an array of compact, orderly and luminous truths. Some of the separate sentences were full to the overflow of profound and subtle emotion. As we listened to them, we felt as if we were in contact with a charged electric battery. What could be better than this: "Under the old dispensation, God was always represented by symbols. But in this conversation with the Samaritan woman, Jesus dispenses with all these symbols, and makes a final statement that contains no symbol. There is now nothing between men and God—no wall, no veil, no filament. There is absolute contact!" Could anything surpass this: "As a Father God seeks our worship. He comes to us in infinite mercy, and comes on the danger side. I was always afraid of myself on that side, and I thank him from my heart that he approaches me in that way." There was another utterance to which many hearts said amen: "The Christian is a new creature. The old man in him is not shaded off into the new man, nor polished up into the new man, nor repaired into the new man. The old man dies, and the new man is raised up by a distinct creation."

At many points there was a sensible quiver in the Bishop's lips. He was evidently preaching out of the depths of his heart. We thank God for such deliverances. Coming from one whose whole life has been given to Christ, they have special force. Long may our great leader be spared to march at the head of the Methodist column.—Daily Advocate.

Aberdeen Surrendered to Christ.

From April 13 to 20, 1890, was the most powerful week ever witnessed in Aberdeen. Indeed, it was a week of salvation to hundreds of souls! Rev. Sam P. Jones, assisted by Rev. G. R. Stuart and Prof. E. O. Excell, began their work promptly according to appointment.

They held four services a day for eight days. The interest and congregations increased at every service. The arrangements were complete, the order perfect. Three days before Bro. Jones arrived union services were conducted in the tabernacle, and the Spirit of power was upon the people. The meeting captured the town and surrounding country for Christ. Our presiding elder, Bro. Kendall, was correct when he said this is "New Aberdeen." Thousands of people were convicted of sin; hundreds were powerfully converted. I never witnessed so many Holy Ghost conversions in one meeting. The preaching, singing and praying were just such as we needed, and all the people profited by it. Gambling, drunkenness, saloons, lawlessness, profanity, lewdness, the Louisiana State Lottery—all received a death-blow in this part of the State. Dancing, cards and worldliness generally, in the church and out of the church, were demolished.

The latest and best style in Aberdeen is to get religion, join the church, attend prayer meeting and fight sin! "Come and see."

Up to date ninety-two persons have joined our church, "and many more to follow." Seventy-four were received at one time! Among them were Bishop Paine's younger son and five of his grandsons. Hundreds attend our weekly prayer meetings. Our Sabbath-school has increased wonderfully. A men's prayer meeting, with an attendance of seventy-five, and a ladies' prayer meeting, with forty members, also a young ladies' meeting of seventeen members, are some of the immediate results of the meeting. Our citizens will see to it that the law is executed, and that good order shall prevail.

During the meeting we enjoyed the presence and help of fifty preachers attending the meeting. The railroads report that they brought fifteen thousand visitors. With pleasure we heard a powerful sermon from Bishop Galloway and a good sermon from Bro. Joe Jones during the meeting. The responsibility of properly organizing new members is great. Please pray for us.

J. A. BOWEN.

ABERDEEN, MISS., May 9, 1890.

Reception of the Rev. David J. Waller.

Centenary Church was packed Wednesday night on the occasion of the reception of the Rev. David J. Waller, fraternal delegate from the British Wesleyan Conference. The noble address delivered by him held the delighted attention of the audience from the first sentence to the close, and was applauded freely. It was the expression of a strong, cultured and devout man, who lives in the present.

Bishop Keener's brief response was characteristic and good.

Notes.

The church that pays not, prays not.

Let us change the name of the State to Morrisiana. A name is a thing for use.

Cuba is ripe for revolt against the powers of darkness. Send her the gospel.

Read our thrilling correspondence from Mexico City in this number of the ADVOCATE.

Dr. Talmage's committee of millionaires find it easier to build colossal fortunes than a cheap place of worship for a gospel of freedom.

When the Lottery builds a sugar refinery to bestow its spoils and to reap interest on its financial overflow, is it, therefore, a public benefactor?

Alas! that men should submit themselves to a fetich as age-worn and profitless as the form of godliness. The shadow of a thing is its negative.

The Pope is mad again. Cause: the erection of a statue in Rome, the subject this time being Mazzini, the Italian patriot and religious reformer.

He is a fine preacher and a good pastor, but— He is first-class in all respects, but— And in a very short space of time they had butted the poor man to death.

If our great Sanhedrin, like that which occasionally met at Jerusalem, was compelled to sit on its toes, we should, perhaps, have more of both speed and brevity.

If the Lottery can buy the newspapers of the State of Louisiana and bribe its Legislature now, what could it do a quarter of a century from now, or at the close of the period of its proposed oligarchy?

That body will be consigned to deserved infamy which shall sell and deliver a great State, with all its franchises and revenues and ancient liberties, to a private individual, and that person an alien.

Two hundred copies of the last number of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE were forwarded to Baton Rouge, to be placed on the desks of legislators and State officers. It should have been a good campaign document.

While the monthly, the quarterly, the semi-annual and the annual drawings of the Great Iniquity are a curse to the whole country, it is the daily drawing that, like a tireless maelstrom, sucks the life out of New Orleans.

The watchword of Methodism from the days of John Wesley has been "organization." It will prove the bete noir of Romanism not only in this country, but in every other if it can preserve a more compact organization.

It is said that the word "caucus" has a profane derivation and was originally written "caw-cuss," and literally described the otherwise untranslatable proceedings of a conference of crows over a forbidden corn patch. If so, we can easily account for the absence of the vicious subject from ecclesiastical councils.

The New Delta—the anti-Lottery paper—long expected, appeared last Monday, May 12, and it is to be published, we learn by a card appearing in its columns, daily at two P. M., by the Louisiana Printing and Publishing Co., Limited. Judging from the first number, it will have a neat typographical appearance and be ably edited. We wish it success.

Perhaps the New Zealander now lives who will take his stand upon the remains of that great work of art that spans the Cumberland at Nashville, and group the picturesque fragments of a great Publishing House in ruins into an instructive homily upon the madness which in the effort to acquire sudden riches consumes both the producer and the incubator.

The Southern Methodist Church should join at once the missionary forces who are marching to the reduction of Satan's stronghold on the dark continent. Never was there a religious soil more productive than the African intellect, nor a religious opportunity grander than that which lies behind the flapping sails of British and German commerce in the southern hemisphere.

No wonder that the Methodist ministry has produced so many great men, when it is remembered that it is expected of each that he shall possess the eloquence of Demosthenes, the patience of Job, the courage of Julius Cæsar, the financial ability of John Law, and last, but not least, the diplomatic genius of Talleyrand. While the race continues, no other ecclesiasticism can dominate these Western shores.

Once traveling in a crowded car from the seat of Conference, a Hebrew of education and moderation pointed to a tall minister of the gospel sitting near, and said, "We called him the thunderbolt when he lived in this part of the State." But we apprehend that both this eulogist and the editor of the Wesleyan put it too strong, and that "son of thunder" would be a more fitting term to apply to a prospective Bishop.

Proceedings of the General Conference.

with what a brother said, speaking in a distant part of the house, that this General Conference ought to pick out several men and insist on having a catechism. I wish I could pick out several men who could write a catechism. I don't know how plentiful they are, but they are certainly not as plentiful as blackberries in North Carolina. (Laughter.) I don't think the Lord has raised up a great many men capable of writing a catechism. This vast quantity of catechisms the Book Editor tells you about—I reckon if you look them over you will find they are all about the same thing, copied one from the other. I never knew of but one man, and he lived over the water—Richard Watson—who was capable of writing a catechism. He did write one; he has written one for the ages. I think you might as well pass a resolution that these men should appoint a committee to write Watson's Institutes, as to write a Methodist Episcopal Catechism. There will be about just as much propriety in it. (Laughter.) You told us to write a catechism. We are your obedient servants, and we started in upon it. We did not go very far—not very far, before we saw that we were not specially called to the work. (Laughter.) We found out that in formulating the great thoughts of the church during the ages past, was no easy matter. The Book Editor has very well said, you may get to a word, and never get beyond it. You will expire right there. We expired, along about there. (Laughter.) We had sense enough to expire. (Laughter.) There are a great many men who, if you tell them to do a thing, think they must do it whether they can or not. St. Paul had sense enough to see that all men have not faith. I can say certainly that all men have not sense enough, nor grace enough, to write a catechism. If there is a man in this house that can write a catechism—as it was once said in a meeting, that "a man was not fit to die unless he was very religious, and if there was any man in the house who was ready to die let him stand up." I say if there is any man here who can write a catechism, let him stand up. (Laughter.) I will say to you that we did make a pretty good effort, but we are pretty much like the artist who took his fine painting and hung it in the market place, and upon it he placed a ticket, saying that if anyone found any fault with the painting he should mark it on the picture. By the picture he left a piece of chalk. He went away and came back again shortly, and found that there was nothing on the picture that was not marked. He rubbed out the marks, and changed the ticket requesting that the good points of the picture should be marked. He went away, and came back again and found the picture marked all over as before. So we sent out these blank catechisms with the request that they should be returned with criticisms, and you ought to see them come in. (Laughter.) We have one of the most valuable catechisms that I have known, written by our great Bishop Capers. That great work has not been sufficiently admired—not sufficiently to appreciate its beauty of expression, its accuracy in definition and all the qualities that go to make up a catechism for the young. I do not think if we were to labor for months together, the men of this Conference could surpass it. I wrote a note not very long ago to the Book Agent requesting him to bring the fact before the Book Editor and try to introduce those catechisms generally throughout all of our Sunday-schools. I think the Lord has raised up no man who could produce the like of it, and I hardly know whether the work is surpassed by Richard Watson or not.

(And much more in the same strain.)

NINTH DAY.

The galleries and rear seats of Centenary Church indicated the unabated popular interest in the proceedings of the General Conference. Dr. J. B. Walker, of the Louisiana Conference, conducted fervent devotional exercises. Bishop Key presided with dignity and brotherly kindness, keeping a watchful eye on the members and on the order of business.

An interesting episode of this session was the introduction of the Rev. Dr. E. W. Mosely, fraternal delegate from the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America. His speech was fraternal, anecdotical, humorous and eloquent, and was heartily applauded. The heart of the mother church throbs with kindly affection for this her ecclesiastical child.

Dr. Morton's address to the Conference on church extension matters was earnest, luminous and convincing.

The communication from a representative of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was read and referred to the proper committee, from which a suitable response will, doubtless, be made.

The fraternal delegates from the Methodist Episcopal Church were formally presented to the General Conference at night.

Dr. Bristol, who spoke first, swept all the chords of eloquence, and was applauded to the echo. He was sharp, rapid, coruscating, thrilling. Gov. Patterson was manly, strong and eloquently fraternal. Bishop Keener was especially felicitous in responding to the honored messengers of our sister church.
—Daily Advocate.

TENTH DAY.

The General Conference discussed worldiness to-day. Delegate McGee explained that a Georgia newspaper had published a statement that a resolution condemning card-playing, theatre-going, etc., had been laid on the table by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by an overwhelming vote. He asked for the reconsideration of the resolution because an erroneous impression had gone out over the country as to their real action, and the opinion had gained ground that the Conference was afraid to place itself on record as opposed to worldiness, and boldly face the question as other denominations had done.

Delegate Duncan, of Tennessee, made a long and heated argument against worldiness.

After much hedging a committee of fifteen was appointed to draft a resolution on worldliness and insert it in the book of discipline. A series of resolutions, signed by several delegates, were read denouncing Romanism, and recommending that the Sunday-school teachers be instructed to have such instructions as they deem necessary placed in the catechism, posting the children on Protestantism and teaching them why they are Protestants and impressing on them the great evils of Romanism. They were referred to the Committee on Sunday-schools.

The Committee on Episcopacy made a report recommending the election of two Bishops.

The Committee on Revisals made majority and minority reports on the question of permitting laymen to be represented on all committees of the church; the minority being in favor, the majority against the proposition.

The Committee on Publishing Interests recommended the establishment of a church organ on the Pacific coast.

A memorial was read from Dr. Marshall, of Vicksburg, Miss., recommending the distribution of healthy light church literature.

Personal and Otherwise.

Correspondents must exercise patience until the General Conference has made itself heard.

There has been great delay in getting recent editions of the ADVOCATE through the mails.

Rev. J. T. Cunningham, of North Mississippi Conference, will preach the commencement sermon at Cooper Normal College, Sunday, June 1.

We regret to have been compelled, in this number of the ADVOCATE, to use the hand of discipline upon our neighbor, The Holy Family, which is ordinarily a well-behaved journal, and, moreover, has done yeoman service on the right side in the Lottery contest.

Bro. Wood, pastor of Covington charge, Mississippi Conference, just recovering from a severe spell of typhoid fever, and en route with his wife to more northerly recruiting ground, gave the ADVOCATE a pleasant call on Monday. We trust that he will be speedily restored to health and usefulness.

We learn from the Shreveport Caucasian that Hon. John L. Scales died at his home in Mansfield, La., May 10. Bro. Scales was a landmark of Methodism in North Louisiana, and belonged to one of the oldest and most honored Methodist families of the South. His death will prove a serious loss to both Church and State. An obituary will be furnished in due time.

A charming little book, The Broken Home; or, Lessons in Sorrow, by B. M. Palmer, pastor; and published by E. S. Upton, New Orleans, has been placed upon the ADVOCATE table. The narrative is designed to comfort those who mourn we learn from the publisher's note, while we gather from the subject itself that it is a heart-record of the divine dealing in affliction with the family of the author. The literary clothing of this touching domestic story is, indeed, exquisite, and it abounds in incidents and passages which can but be helpful to the sorrowing. But the book will prove a blessing to all classes of readers, and it could hardly possess a higher recommendation to either a New Orleans or a national audience than the name of its author. Price, sixty cents.

Anyone interested in the sick-benefit, funeral-aid, and death-benefit-ary associations of the United States can help make the statistics of their organizations for the forthcoming census more complete and disseminate the knowledge of the good work they are doing by sending the names of such societies as they may know of, and the addresses of their principal officers, to Mr. CHARLES A. JENNEY, Special Agent of the Eleventh Census, 58 William street, New York City.

Read the advertisement of Prof. Smith, of Lexington, Ky., whose College received the Gold Medal at the World's Exposition for business education. Summer session now open.

A Most Worthy Cause.

MR. EDITOR: In response to Sister Weems' call to build a church in Mexico, I send you a list of names and amounts to publish as a beginning of the work so much needed, feeling sure that other friends will respond. Just consider the money safe. I am responsible for it, and will send it when I collect from a few others I have not yet seen. A word from you at the head of the column, I suggest, would be a help to present the great need of a church, as set before us in Sister Weems' letters. God help us to help them in every effort to do good!

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. W. W. Hopper writes from Meridian, Miss., May 9: "I am assisting Bro. Crymes at West End. Good congregations; church awake and at work; sinners being converted every night. Deep and lasting work being done by the Holy Spirit. I begin with Bro. Rayner at McComb City, May 12."

—Rev. J. W. Malone, Minter City, Miss., writes: "Minter City and Strathmore charge, North Mississippi Conference, reports at the close of the second quarter a net increase of nine members, salaries of pastor and presiding elder paid up to date, collections in full in cash, and fifty dollars for furnishing our district parsonage at Water Valley. We will forward our gift to the Oxford Church in a few days."

—Rev. J. G. Cammack writes from Union, Miss.: "We feel like praising God for the results here yesterday (May 11). Truly it was a great day for this place. We had two delightful services. We raised a collection and secured $4 over the assessment for the entire circuit for all the Conference collections. We have been passing through a trying ordeal here for some months, and our skies were somewhat clouded; but the light has burst in upon us more powerfully than ever. Thank God who giveth us the victory."

—Mrs. E. B. Foust writes from Oak Ridge, La., May 5.: "The money raised by Dr. Hopkins, of Lafayette, for my husband's benefit has not yet been received. My dear husband has been a great sufferer since February 17. At times his case seemed almost a hopeless one. But I believe now that God will yet spare him. For the past week he has been improving rapidly. With all his suffering, I never witnessed such Christian patience and resignation as he has exemplified. It has been a great trial to me; but God's grace has been sufficient."

—Rev. Wilson Moore, writing from Sugartown circuit, reports: "We gladly say, that we are progressing on this circuit. Our water has not become unhealthy, nor our air impure. At some of our appointments, where only 25 or 30 assembled to hear the gospel heretofore, we have a regular attendance of from 50 to 75. The church is being revived, and sinners are being awakened to a consciousness of their guilt and, we believe, will return unto the Lord and he saved from sin. I, therefore, have the satisfaction of knowing that I am not trifling, as some tried to make it appear at the last Conference. We have received six into the church."

—The pastor and official Board of Holly Springs write, May 12, as follows: "We have just closed a three weeks' meeting in Holly Springs, conducted by Bro. George S. Inge, resulting in more than fifty conversions, and forty-two have already joined the church. Bro. Inge preached the closing sermon last night, which was his fortieth on this occasion. Auditorium and gallery were filled to overflowing with anxious hearers, and many could not be accommodated with seats. Bro. Inge preached the doctrine of our church in its purity, but did it in such a manner as to have the hearty cooperation of all Christians. He did not use abusive language, slang phrases or any clap-trap means to count numbers, but preached Christ as the all-sufficient Savior of men from sin which damns in this world and in the world to come. Bro. Inge has returned to the Church, South, to stay; but for reasons satisfactory to himself, he will labor among us as a local preacher, doing such work as may be demanded by the church and his pastor. He will hold his membership in Holly Springs, where the church receives him with open arms and appreciates him as they do no other living man."

CAMP MEETING.

The Nineteenth Annual Camp Meeting on the SEASHORE CAMP GROUND will open JULY 11TH, next, and continue for ten days.

Eminent preachers will assist in conducting the religious services, as heretofore.

Ample accommodations will be provided for all visitors.

Two commodious bath-houses render the finest salt-water bathing on the coast accessible to all.

The Grounds are 78 miles from New Orleans, immediately fronting the beach, and on the line of the L. and N. railroad. All trains stop at the station during the meeting, landing visitors within 100 yards of the enclosure.

Reduced fares will be in force over all connecting roads for the meeting.

The gate fee for entrance into the Grounds is 50 cents for the season, or 25 cents for the day. The revenue thus obtained is used for improving the Grounds.

Preachers will be furnished sleeping accommodation free of charge, and tickets for meals at the restaurant at half rates, as heretofore.

The Fifth of May.

MR. EDITOR: This is a day of great demonstration in Mexico. From every town and hamlet within its bounds there will be patriotic addresses to commemorate this day. The history of the celebration is this: Early on the morning of the fifth of May, 1862, the Mexican forces, numbering 4,000 infantry and 500 cavalry, were drawn up at Puebla in battle array; General Saragossa, the commanding general, and our President Juaz, his subordinate officer. In that encounter the Mexican arms were covered with victory, and this triumph is yearly celebrated with great pomp. This ancient and historic city has put on its holiday attire, and since sunrise the Mexican flag has floated from telegraph pole and housetop, and been saluted by firing cannons and ringing of bells. The President presented each crippled veteran of that battle a gold coin in the name of the city.

At night there was a national feast celebrated in our church. It was beautifully and artistically adorned with the national colors, and pictures and statues of the great men who figured in that battle. We had a string band, and music on the organ. It was a treat to hear the children sing, and see what force was thrown in the national hymn. I never saw a more patriotic people, and their love of country is infectious. The Alemeda is a bower of roses, and all kinds of lovely flowers, cushions of flowers, most beautifully arranged. The red, white and green lanterns to-night make a lovely scene of beautiful lights and flowers.

Mr. Weems held his last quarterly meeting on this round, in our Temple of Messiah, in this city. While in the midst of the business a huge stone was hurled into our midst, making a noise as it struck the bench and then the floor, as if a cannon had been fired among us. Mr. Weems and Bro. Watkins ran out to catch the man; but he was too quick. He came inside the vestibule and threw the stone in the door of the church. Several barely escaped being struck; and if it had struck them, they would have been killed. There was much fear among the Mexicans, and some went home. Mr. Weems restored order and concluded the business of the meeting.

To-night I am informed by our Bible-woman that a Presbyterian preacher has fallen a victim to the fury of the fanatics in a little town near Zacatecas. He was killed as was our Bro. Stevens; he had his head cut off and carried some distance from the body in their blind fury. There is much sadness felt on account of this awful event. The Bible-woman wrote me to "tell dear Bro. Weems to take great care and go well armed on his journeys, and not 'cast pearls before swine.'" These troubles indicate that there is good being done in the Lord's vineyard. For you know at such times the devil is always mad. I hope that you will all pray that no more may have to fill a martyr's grave—no more blood be shed. Alas! alas! poor Mexico! It would make you sad to see how discouraged such news renders the converted Mexicans; they became intimidated, and no wonder, when the priests even cause the children to move against the Protestants.

Mr. Weems is still meeting with success, and I earnestly entreat our friends to pray for us daily for success, for health, for strength and courage.

There were fully five thousand soldiers in the streets to-day being reviewed by the President.

We are well, and hard at work.

The Lottery.

Has It Come to This?

We can as well afford a State Lottery as a John A. Morris Lottery, and the former would be decidedly more business-like. We are surprised that the strictly business advocates of the Lottery do not see it in this light and advocate a State Lottery instead of a Morris Lottery. If we are going into the Lottery business for the sake of the revenue, let the State and not the individuals get the revenue.—Homer (La.) Journal.

"Has our contemporary reflected that it requires the strictest integrity to run successfully such an institution as is proposed? The very highest financial credit is essential to secure purchasers for the tickets? This the Louisiana Lottery Company has gained slowly, but by scrupulous fidelity to its promises to pay; hence its big profits in recent years. Does the financial management of this State, its many unpaid treasury warrants for services and supplies, its dishonored coupons from bonds, etc., warrant the belief that the purchasing world would have that faith in a 'State Lottery' that they exhibit in a 'John A. Morris' Lottery.'"—N. O. City Item.

It is the policy of the Lottery papers to make it appear that the State of Louisiana is but a weak and shattered hulk, only kept afloat by the benign providence of the Lottery Company, and that its only hope of salvation is centered in the fostering care and protection of this institution; that the creature has superseded the creator, and has acquired all of the power, influence and credit originally possessed by the former; that this is no longer the State of Louisiana, but the State of "John A. Morris." This is as they would have it to be, and this is what it will be, unless the State asserts her sovereign power and strangles this ambitious and audacious offspring of her folly. Truly has the Lottery Company proved to be Louisiana's "Frankenstein," and is bringing her to sorrow and desolation.

The Item in casting the reflection above quoted has probably cut deeper than it intended. It has placed the State below the "Cuba Lottery," the "Mexican Lotteries," and other foreign institutions of like character; for heretofore in its columns has appeared the argument that it is natural for our people to indulge in this species of gambling, and unless the monopoly of the Louisiana Lottery was continued they would purchase tickets from these foreign institutions, and the money which (it has assumed) is now kept among us would go to enrich foreigners. Therefore, these infamous and outlawed institutions possess the confidence of our people and can sell their tickets, while our native State has sunk so low in public estimation that she no longer holds its confidence to the extent of the price of a Lottery ticket. Men of Louisiana, shall we tamely submit to this presentation of the case, and like a puny child who has cut its finger run whimpering to the Lottery Company to tie it up with a little brown sugar in a rag? Is it true that the world at large no longer regards us as a manly, independent and honorable people? Can it be that we have no backbone, no "snap," none of that elastic energy which rises superior to adversity, and from the wreck of the past grapples forth the jewel of experience and moves onward to build better and stronger? We can not and will not believe it. On the contrary, we believe our representatives (we speak confidently of our own parish and senatorial district) are imbued with the will and the spirit to make relentless war upon this would-be usurper until it be exterminated. It has come to this: We must fight like men, or, like the weak and simpering courtier, "bend the supple hinges of the knee, that thrift may follow fawning."—Lafayette Advertiser.

Parish Anti-Lottery League.

CLINTON, LA., May 2, 1890.

At a meeting of citizens of East Feliciana parish, held at the courthouse to-day, Dr. L. G. Perkins was called to the chair and J. L. Cravens elected secretary.

Capt. T. S. Adams was called upon and explained the object of the meeting. Upon motion the Anti-Lottery League of East Feliciana was organized with Dr. L. G. Perkins as president, J. L. Cravens, secretary, and A. E. Miller, treasurer.

The following resolution offered by Hon. T. S. Adams, on motion duly seconded, was adopted.

Resolved, That we, speaking for the people of the parish of East Feliciana, declare in the most emphatic terms unqualified opposition to re-chartering the Louisiana Lottery for the following reasons, to-wit:

The Louisiana State Lottery is the child of the trying days of reconstruction, and survives as the last and only nightmare of the dark and dismal night which preceeded the dawn. It is a gambling institution, and gambling is prohibited by the organic law of the State. Thus conceived in sin and born in iniquity, it is perpetuated against law, in vice and crime. Article 176 of the Constitution provides that after January, 1895, lotteries "are and remain prohibited."

It corrupts the youth by inducing the belief that fortunes are to be made by chance, not by energy and economy. It fosters theft by encouraging trusted servants to smuggle money for the purchase of tickets. It debauches governmental functions, defeating the will of the people, manipulating conventions, buying and disbursing officers for their following. To re-charter the lottery would be contra bonam legem, as well as contra bonus mores.

It now proposes the payment of half a million dollars annually to the State while it sells 28,000,000 tickets per annum, realizing therefrom nearly 47 per cent., or $1,000,000 per month, aggregating $12,000,000 a year, and all this without capital or license; such an overture is an affront to the State, declaring by innuendo, that a great commonwealth can not, without artificial and sinister aid, sustain its commercial credit and maintain its public charities.

It has branded the name of Louisiana with infamy such as no other civilized community bears, and it proposes to more indelibly impress the infamy by the expense of an election and a further grant to the disgraceful franchise.

If this great State is to accept overtures, emasculating its autonomy, let it at once establish a syndicate similar to the old East India Company, and sell at public auction its offices and the emoluments thereof.

A resolution was then adopted endorsing the Mirror, and pledging the assistance of the League both morally and financially.

Resolutions instructing the president to appoint delegates to a general convention of the State League, and providing for the future meetings of the Parish League, were adopted.

It was resolved that the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Picayune, of New Orleans, and the press of this parish be requested to publish these proceedings.

L. G. PERKINS, Chair'n.
J. L. CRAVENS, Sec.

YOU CAN'T STRADDLE THE LOTTERY QUESTION.—The keen-scented politician smells danger from afar, and, taking counsel of his fears, argues for inaction thus:

Why make an issue with the Lottery question; why bring it into the Democratic party as a disturbing element? The Republicans of the State are on the side of the Lottery; many Democrats are friendly to the Lottery; and if these combine, may they not defeat the Democracy and destroy white supremacy, and return the State to radical rule and ruin? Had we better not wait until, well—until we have secured a decidedly large majority of white Democrats through immigration and natural increase, and then mash the monster? Bless your precious, doubting soul, who made the Lottery question an issue at this time? Were not the Democrats satisfied with the Constitution, and willing to let the old cat die, according to law? Who revived it; who make it a political question, and is seeking to perpetuate its power? The Lottery Company and its friends.

It is a thing that should be blotted out, you say. Will you wait, for fear you will drive away white Democrats, who so love the Lottery Company that they will give up white supremacy and welcome radical rule rather than oppose the Lottery Company?

No, the Lottery Company won't let you straddle, nor will the true Democracy—one side or the other. Talk out. —Patriot-Democrat.

Lottery Notes.

Among other subjects discussed by Senator Ingalls, in his recent illustrated interview in the New York World, was the Louisiana Lottery. The reporter asked what he thought of the institution, and the Senator replied: "The Louisiana Lottery is a plague spot, a moral ulcer, that should be cauterized; it is a disgrace to our civilization that it is permitted to use the mails and the postoffice department to debauch and plunder the nation to the extent of $20,000,000 or $30,000,000 every year.

We clip the following from the Louisiana Journal, which also publishes an anti-Lottery petition to the Legislature, with many signers:

The two representatives and the senator from this parish will be solid against the Lottery, first, last, and all the time. If every parish would do as well as Claiborne in this respect, there would be no question about the disgrace of the Lottery being removed from the good name of our State forever. We have reason to be proud of the record our parish will make in this matter.

We publish this extract from a correspondent of that paper to the editor of the Mirror:

Dear Sir: I see you are again to the front in an article which defines your position squarely and unmistakably on the Lottery issue. But no part of that article struck me so forcibly as your words "too cheap," and no fact strikes me so forcibly as the one that, instead of offering the people a "magnificent gift" of $12,500,000, they are really only offering that sum in exchange for $500,000,000. A fact! There's no labor required! No capital required! The State would get $12,500,000 out of that charter. The Lottery Company would get $500,000,000! These are the figures. If there's an error in them, its in favor of the Lottery.

The Mirror, of this week, announces a mass meeting of anti-Lottery citizens, and formation of a League.

The editor who wrote this article, having no interest in the paper, goes out with its present issue. Why can such a man not secure distinguished employment on the press of this State. Echo answers, Why?

There is a tremendous boom in country newspaper properties in Louisiana just at present. Several esteemed contemporaries announce the retirement of their old, and the installation of new editors. The writer who has occupied the position of editor of this paper since October, 1885, joins the procession of outgoers. Having no proprietary interest in the paper and no control as to the matter of its ownership, very naturally, perhaps, he was not consulted in the change.

Somebody is bulling the newspaper market in Louisiana!—Patriot-Democrat.

We are in receipt of a notice from Mr. C. Harrison Parker that an anti-Lottery paper will be issued next week in New Orleans. We will readily exchange and comply with request. We hope it will prove a power in the destruction of that great old green bottle fly that pollutes and contaminates all that comes in contact with it. It has now set a price on the people of Louisiana, and it remains to be seen if the people of the State will sell their honor, integrity and morals, to serve a gambling machine. Mr. Morris does not secretly, but openly prices the moral worth of our people, and offers to buy us, morally and politically speaking, both soul and body. He has bought the press of the State, and stands to-day the champion of all gambling institutions. The question is, Will Louisiana sacrifice her honor and her manhood? It is to be hoped that she will not.—Robeline News.

Without a count, we should say that considerably more than one-half of our Louisiana exchanges are uncompromisingly opposed to the Lottery.

There is an "irrepressible conflict" brewing between the old ring-tailed politicians who are determined to turn the State over into the clutches of the Louisiana Lottery Company, in order that they may participate in the "divy" of the spoils, and all citizens who have the true interest of the State at heart, to be fought out in the Republican State Convention and at the polls next fall. The Lottery organs are opening the campaign in a characteristic manner, misrepresenting, traducing and throwing mud at all persons who have been at all prominent in opposing the nefarious designs of the lottery gang. 'Tis a contemptible and unholy cause that is bolstered up by such methods and backed up by such demagogues. He who dodges this issue and fails to speak and act for the cause of right and decency by opposing the designs and machinations of the Lottery looters, is either blind in his duties as an honorable citizen or too cowardly to assert his manhood. 'Let the conflict come! The Lottery hordes of guerillas will be opposed by an army of volunteer patriots, whom they will find to be foemen worthy of their steel!—Casselton Reporter.

KENDRICK—Mr. MARY PAMELIA KENDRICK, subject of this notice, was born in the parish of Washington, January 12, 1806, and died in Franklin parish, La., at the residence of her son, Dudley Kendrick, Esq., November 13, 1889. She was the daughter of Judge Thomas C. Warner and Tabitha Cargill. January 11, 1827, she was married happily to Benjamin Kendrick, who survives her, and of the marriage ten children were born—all of whom died before her, except two, Dudley Kendrick and Mrs. Davis. One of her daughters was the wife of the late Gen. Francis Asbury Harper. Doctors George W. Kendrick and Thomas W. Kendrick, who died in early manhood, were her sons—men of great promise, whose deaths were universally lamented. A number of grandchildren survive, all leading useful and honorable lives.

Mrs. Kendrick was noted for the beauty of her person, for her engaging manners, and her gentle, affectionate nature. Her kind heart and sweet disposition instinctively drew to her all who knew her. She was a dutiful, loving wife, and a devoted, tender mother. Throughout a long useful life she illustrated, in her daily walk and conduct, all the graces that beautify and adorn a noble womanhood. Mrs. Kendrick was of a family of Christians distinguished for true religion and good works. In 1820 she was converted and joined the Methodist Church, of which her husband was also a member. From that date to the hour of her death she was a consistent, whole-souled Christian. Her parents and all of her brothers and sisters, except one, preceded her to the spirit land; and her ten children, beautiful, sweet-spirited daughters, and noble-hearted manly sons—she saw eight pass from this troubled life; so that afflictions and sorrows cast their shadows over her pathway; but, upon their darkness beamed the light of her Christian faith, and her implicit trust in the goodness of God, and resignation to his providence, and her childlike submission to his will sustained her in every trial. Her piety was deep and abiding. She loved the church and the people of God, and was keenly alive to her duties as a church member. Her house was a house of prayer, as it even was the abode of true Christian hospitality.

For some time preceding her death she was afflicted and a sufferer; but trustingly she leaned on the arm of her faith in the Savior, and calmly awaited his call. But for the grief, which her loss would bring to the aged husband—the partner of all her joys and sorrows—there was naught to disturb the closing hours of her life, and even unto that grief and distress came her comforting assurance that the separation would not be long.

Thus dying, as she had lived, her spirit passed away to rejoin her loved ones above, where sorrow and parting and death come not. "With long life" was she "blessed," and its end was "peace." For her death had no sting. What we call death was to her but a happy translation to an enduring and higher life.

Precious memories come to us, even as a living presence, at the mention of her name. She was "pure in heart," and "faithful in all things." Her record stands without reproach. To her sorrowing family, it remains a priceless legacy. Sweet will be her rest till the resurrection morn. E.

DON'T DO IT.

From the "Medical Review." "Upon the first symptoms of Liver Complaint the misguided sufferer applies blue pill, calomel and other mineral poisons, in the delusive hope of obtaining relief, whereas these powerful purgatives but aggravate the disease and debilitate the constitution. Dr. Tutt has had the courage to ignore this killing practice of the old school. His remedies, drawn from the vegetable kingdom, are almost miraculous in renovating the broken down body. The letters of cured patients in the Doctor's possession are a tribute of gratitude to his genius and skill which but few can exhibit. His Liver Pills are used all over the world. They can be found in every town and hamlet in the United States."

Sunday-School Lesson.

(Hurlburt and Simpson's Lesson Commentary; Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

Second Quarter—Studies in Luke.

LESSON IX.—June 1.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN.

Luke x, 25-37.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Lev. xix, 18.

TIME AND PLACE.—A. D. 29 or 30; probably in Perea.

25. A certain lawyer—A "lawyer," not in the modern, but in the Jewish sense—not an advocate or barrister, but a professed student and teacher of the law of Moses. The law embraced in this man's profession consisted of two parts, the oral and the written. The written was contained in the Pentateuch of Moses; the oral was professedly derived by unwritten tradition from the seventy elders appointed by Moses to aid in the government of Israel. (Num. xi, 16.) Both these formed a mass of rules and regulations, civil, moral, and religious, boundless in extent, complicated in character, exercising a controlling influence over the whole of Jewish life, and forming a subject for an infinite variety of subtle distinctions, and questionings. Stood up—In a formal way before the people, for a controversy with Jesus. Tempted him—The evangelist means that the lawyer subjected Jesus to the searching ordeal of a quizzing examination. What shall I do—The case, though similar, is by no means identical with that recorded in Matt. xix, 16-22 and Mark x, 17-22 and Luke xviii, 18-25—a case of one whose still powerful and besetting sin was his love of riches, yet whose spirit at first appeared teachable and hopeful, and of whom Mark reported that Jesus, "beholding him, loved him"—for he could say with honesty (as he supposed) of the great precepts of the law: "All these have I kept from my youth up; what lack I yet?" But the man now before us was more subtle than honest; came rather to show off himself and to entangle the Master than to learn the way of life for his own practice and salvation.

26. How readest thou—Jesus's interrogative reply is a model of wisdom and skill. Each soul must be convicted by its own moral sense, not by that of another.

27. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God—This was the summary of the law. If love to God prevailed there would be no—(1) Idolatry; (2) Superstition; (3) Profanation; (4) Opposition to truth; (5) Corruption of truth; (6) Perjury; (7) Despising the good; (8) Ingratitude; (9) Pride; (10) Discontent; (11) Suicide; (12) Violent deaths; (13) Duels; (14) Wars; (15) Rivalry; (16) Breach of contracts, national or individual; (17) Envy; (18) Wrongs; (19) Slanders; (20) Intrigues; (21) Deceit; (22) Fraud; (23) False statements; (24) Oppression; (25) Injury to person, property, or character; (26) Cruelty (27) Indifference; (28) Disobedience; (29) Unkindness; (30) Resentments; (31) Haunts of wickedness; (32) Social evils; (33) Complaining in our streets. And thy neighbor as thyself—Hillel had given this part of the answer to an inquirer who similarly came to put him to the test, and, as far as it went, it was a right answer (Rom. xiii, 9; Gal. v, 13, 14; Jas. ii, 8); but it became futile if left to stand alone, without the first commandment.

28. Thou hast answered right—Jesus found no fault with his answer, but said: "Do this, and thou shalt have the eternal life of which thou hast inquired of me the conditions." Is this reply unevangelical? Is it inconsistent with Rom. ii, 20? No. He that does this shall live: he needs no evangel; they that be sick need a physician, not they that are whole; the gospel is for those, and only for those, who are conscious that they have not done this, and still desire to enter into life. The preaching of the law here and everywhere in the New Testament is to produce conviction of sin and the sense of the need of a Savior.

29. Willing to justify himself—Determined to vindicate himself. Who is my neighbor—He wants his moral duties to be labeled and defined with the Talmudic precision to which ceremonial duties had been reduced. The element of the genuine love of man is that most pure feeling which does not ask, "Who is my neighbor?" but in every man beholds a brother, and in the unhappy man first of all.

30. Jesus answering said, a certain man—Clearly, as the tenor of the parable implies, a Jew. Went down from Jerusalem to Jericho—A rocky, dangerous gorge haunted by marauding Bedouin, and known as "the bloody way." The "went down" is strictly accurate, for the road descends very rapidly from Jerusalem to the Jordan valley. The journey was of about twenty-one miles, for the most part over rocks and deserts. Thieves—Rather, robbers, brigands. Palestine was and is notorious for those plundering Arabs. Herod the Great had rendered real service to the country in extirpating them from their haunts, but they constantly sprang up again, and even the Romans could not effectually put them down.

31. By chance—Rather, by coincidence; that is, at the same time. The word "chance" does not occur in Scripture. Chance to the sacred writers, as to the most thoughtful of the Greeks, is "the daughter of Forethought." It is God's unseen providence, by men nicknamed chance. A certain priest—Jericho was at this time a priestly city, and so the journey of the priest from Jerusalem, as if returning from his week of sacerdotal offices there, has a touch of vivid naturalness. He, too, like his questioner, had been doing his duty to God, according to his measure of that duty. No less than twelve thousand priests here lived, one or more of whom was daily seen walking this route. Passed by—The priest shrank, it might be, (1) from the trouble and peril of meddling with a man whom robbers had just attacked, and from the risk of sharing his fate; and (2) from the fear of incurring ceremonial defilement by coming into contact with what might be a corpse before he reached it.

32. A Levite was one of the tribe of Levi; a priest was of the family of Aaron in that tribe. The Levites performed the humble services of the temple, as cleaning, carrying fuel, and acting as choristers. Levites were also writers, teachers, preachers, and literati. The scribes and lawyers were frequently of this tribe, which, in fact, was set apart by Moses as the intellectual body in the nation.

33. A certain Samaritan—He was not, as the others were, near a home to which they might have taken the wounded sufferer. Had compassion on him—Thereby showing himself, in spite of his heresy and ignorance, a better man than the orthodox priest and Levite. Christ contrasts the Samaritan with the priest and Levite, not to honor Samaria, nor to do despite to priests and Levites, but to teach that the most despised outcast who fulfills the law of love is better than the most honored minister of religion who disregards it.

34. Went to him—All fear of risk from robbers, or from the police of Romo, who might take him for a robber, is put aside. Bound up his wounds—Bind up a fresh cut immediately in a soft rag or lint, moistened with pure olive oil, and the parts will heal by what is called the first intention, and more speedily than by any other means. Pouring in oil and wine—This was a favorite application for wounds in ancient surgery. It was considered a sovereign remedy, especially for wounds produced by violence; wool, lint, or pounded olive being first laid upon the wound. The wine was supposed to cleanse, and the oil to soothe and heal. The two were sometimes made into a compound. Set him on his own beast—The Samaritan was not, like the others, a mere foot-passenger between the two cities; but he comes upon a beast, doubtless, to be supposed an ass, from a distance. He is himself little likely to be treated with any favor in this latitude. To an inn—This is the only place where "an inn," as we understand the word—a house for travelers, kept by a host, as distinguished from an empty caravansary—is mentioned in Scripture.

35. On the morrow—The Samaritan sets us an example of perseverance in kindness. He was as careful about the man on the morrow as he was when first he saw him, and did not leave him till he had made full provision for his wants. Took out—Literally, throwing out. Two pence—That is denarii, according to Matt. xx, 2, the average wages of a laborer for two days; or, taking the estimate of Mark vi, 37, enough for a meal of twenty-five men. It was, therefore, a sufficient and liberal provision for all probable contingencies. This, however was not, in the Samaritan's judgment, enough, and he gave a carte-blanche for whatever else might be required.

36. Which now—There could be but one answer. The neighbor Jews became strangers, the stranger Samaritan became neighbor, to the wounded traveler. The scribe is not permitted to ride off upon a speculative inquiry about the abstract rights of other men; he is pinned down to a personal practical duty.

37. He that showed mercy on him—By this poor periphrasis the lawyer avoids the shock to his own perjudices which would have been involved in the hated word, "the Samaritan." He will not name the Samaritan, the haughty hypocrite! So, then, it is not place, but love, which makes neighborhood. Here is clear recognition of the principle that he who shows mercy is the real neighbor, irrespective of creed or nation. There seems a significance in this command to go. The lawyer is not to stay questioning about the theory of religion; he is to go out and practice it wherever human need calls for human help. To all captious critics the direction of the Lord is to go and do.

Causes of Failure in Business.

Promises made that can not be kept. Inducements held out that do not exist. Claims that have no foundation. Great promise. Little result. So, when you see a firm prosper, year after year, you know at once that these are not its business maxims.

You will also see that they can not be the principles of Drs. Starkey & Palen, for after 20 years of success with their Compound Oxygen Treatment they have a record of cures that is something wonderful. This record is not a private affair, locked up in the safe, or worse still, one that does not exist. On the contrary, you can see it. All you have to do is to send for Drs. Starkey & Palen's Treatise on the Compound Oxygen Treatment. It is free to you. You will get it by return mail. This book contains a record of diseases removed, tells who have been cured and shows where they live. Send for it. Address Drs. Starkey & Palen, 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa., or 120 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal.

It is filled with such testimony as the following:

Drs. Starkey & Palen:—"I have received remarkable benefit from the use of your Compound Oxygen treatment. I was entirely cured of Neuralgia by it." MRS. G. W. VALENTINE, New Douglass, Ill., July 30, 1889.

Drs. Starkey & Palen:—"Your Compound Oxygen Treatment cured me of Neuralgia. I believe it saved my life." MISS MAGGIE HANNA, Mankato, Minn., Nov. 15, 1889.

Drs. Starkey & Palen:—"By the use of your Compound Oxygen Treatment, my lungs, which were badly affected, are permanently cured." GEORGE S. MURPHY, Cashier First National Bank, Manhattan, Kansas. Drs. Starkey & Palen:—"I can truly say that your Compound Oxygen Treatment has helped my lungs wonderfully." MRS. JAS. SEXTON, Union Hill, Ill., September 12, 1889.

Drs. Starkey & Palen:—"I had consumption of four years' standing, and the doctors pronounced me incurable. But your Compound Oxygen Treatment made a well man of me." JAMES W. ICE, Commercial Point, Ill., Jan. 15, 1889. Drs. Starkey & Palen:—"I have fully proved your Compound Oxygen Treatment to be unrivaled in its immediate effects upon throat troubles of any kind, asthma and catarrh." MRS. A. W. MATHEWSON, 85 Williams St., Providence, R. I., Oct. 22, 1888.

GRANT'S FURNITURE STORE

NEW STORE,

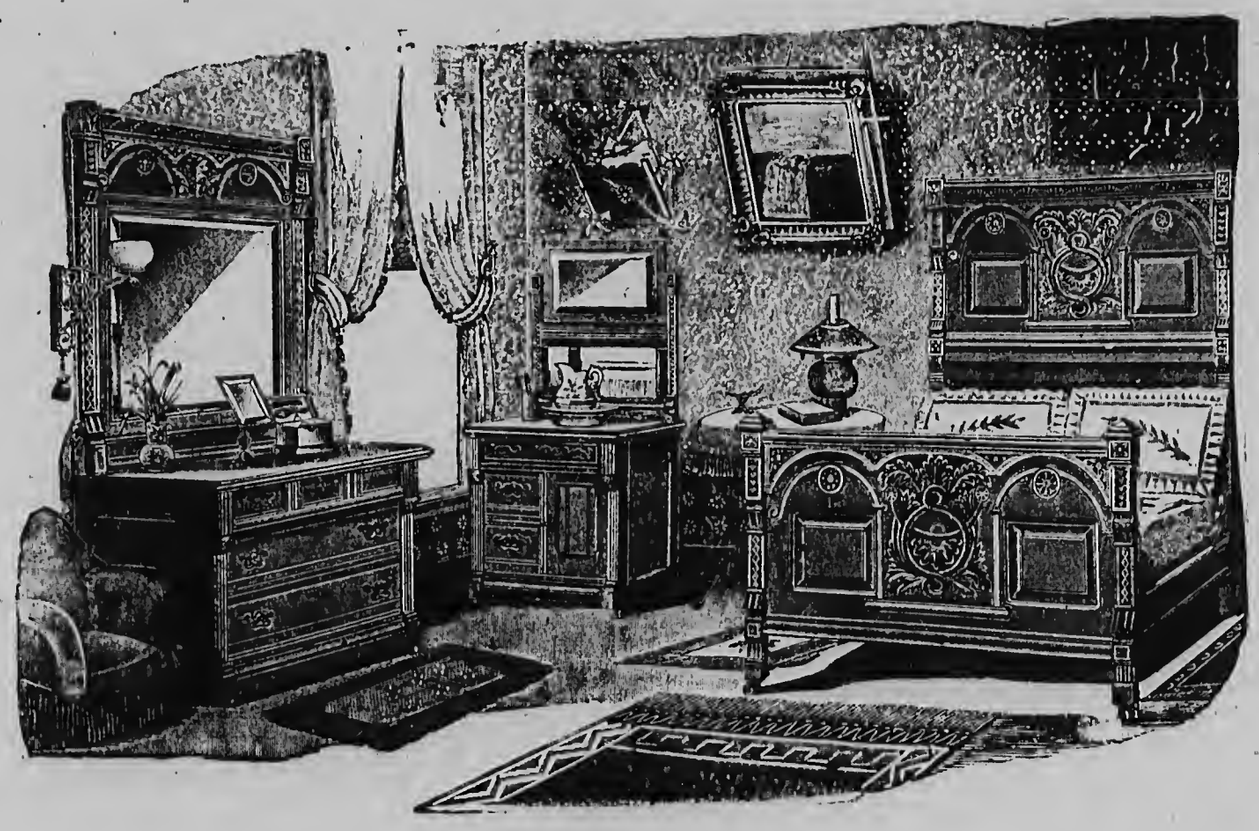
at 44 and 46 Baronne St., into which I have recently moved, is one of the finest buildings in the city, with a floor space of over 25,000 square feet, and is fully equipped with all modern improvements. It is very centrally located, being only one block from Canal St., and I hope to be favored by a call from you when in the city.

BEAUTIFUL PARLOR GOODS.

I have one entire floor devoted to the display of these goods alone, and have over sixty different varieties to select from. Complete Suits anywhere from $35 to $650, and odd pieces—such as Sofas, Divans, Easy Chairs, Patent Rockers, Window and Reception Chairs—at as low prices in proportion as the Complete Suits. I have these goods in Cherry, Mahogany and Walnut, and can give you your choice of any of the following coverings: Crushed, Embossed, Plain and Silk Plushes, Hair Cloth, Mohair, Raw and Spun Silks, Satins, English Tapestries, French Velours, Petit Point, Brocatelle or Damasks. I make a specialty of these goods, have many of the patterns made specially for my own trade, and can offer a greater variety at lower prices than any other house in the South.

NEW STOCK

In all departments, and every grade of goods, from the cheapest to the most expensive, in endless variety. I have all the latest and most fashionable designs, and, as I have only purchased from factories whose goods I have been selling for the past six years, can and do guarantee every piece of Furniture that leaves my establishment.



LOW PRICES

are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.

A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and whether you wish to pay $40 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs.

I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.

I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The Universal Association Bank and Trust Company will begin its operations in New York City before the summer ends. Nearly every preliminary detail has been completed for the establishment of a great financial enterprise upon a wholly new system and little remains to be done excepting to carry out the plans. Officers have been elected, capital subscribed and applications for the indorsement of not less than $100,000,000 in bonds have already come up for consideration.

In consequence of a disagreement with the faculty, the graduating class of the State University (of Louisiana) resigned in a body on May 15. The dispute is said to have grown out of the selection of a valedictorian.

Hon. John G. Carlisle has been nominated to succeed Senator Beck by the Democratic caucus of the Kentucky Legislature.

The chances of the levee appropriation bill, now in the Senate Commerce Committee, are regarded as favorable by the Louisiana members and the delegates from the Vicksburg convention.

Heavy frosts in Kansas and Missouri, last week, did some damage to the crops of early vegetables and fruit.

In response to requests from reliable people, Gov. Stone, of Mississippi, has recommended to Capt. Weston the distribution of government rations to 1,200 people for twenty days, at Gum Ridge, Jefferson county.

Silver will be the principal topic of discussion in the Senate this week. The Silver Coinage measure, it is said, can not pass without Democratic votes, and will not be permitted to pass unless the bill providing for federal control of elections is shelved.

Bishop Hurst, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has left Washington for a four months' tour through Europe, during which he will visit the principal universities of Great Britain and Ireland for the purpose of securing plans and ideas for the proposed Methodist University just outside of Washington.

The Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor, in session at Detroit, decided to meet in New Orleans next year. A special invitation was extended by General Alger, commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, to the ex-Confederate soldiers in the Supreme Lodge to attend a grand reception at his residence. The ex-Confederate soldiers were taken special care of by the Grand Army men, and the treat was mutually enjoyed.

The President has sent to the Senate a letter of the Secretary of State submitting the plan for the preliminary survey for a railway line to connect the principal cities of the American hemisphere in accordance with the recommendations of the Pan-American Conference. The President recommends prompt action by Congress to enable this government to participate in the promotion of the enterprise.

FOREIGN.

It is announced that the Pope has addressed a circular letter to a hundred bishops of various countries asking whether they considered the time opportune for proclaiming the dogma asserting the temporal power of the holy see. Sixty-six bishops answered in the affirmative, but all the Italian prelates opposed the dogma. The Jesuits urge the Pope to proclaim the dogma without delay.

A syndicate has been formed of wealthy French Jews, for the purpose of purchasing for the custody of the Jews the copy of the Hebrew Bible which is in the Vatican. The offer which has been made for it is $200,000. It is the most famous Bible there is in existence, and this is not the first time that the Hebrews of Europe have tried to purchase it.

France is showing more activity in Africa than any other power, not excepting Germany. Besides her conquests in the Soudan and the war with Dahomey, France is taking steps to extend her interests in Madagascar, where the French have had for many years a precarious foothold.

It is said that France and Germany, in order to avoid frontier disputes, have agreed to strip a wide space of ground on either side of the frontier and to place large boundary stakes in conspicuous positions.

The Dominion Parliament, at Ottawa, Ont., adjourned on May 16. The governor in his address reviewed the most notable legislation and practically expressed the belief that whatever was was good. He said the Behring Sea differences were being adjusted.

In the German Reichstag, on May 16, General Von Caprivi said he believed that the foreign policy of the government continued more and more to harmonize with the feeling of the people. The army bill did not deal with the question of impending war, but rather with the question of providing against the burdens of possible war. He advised longer military service for German youth.

The Argentine Republic and Chili are said to be firmly determined to reject Mr. Blaine's proposition for a delusive commercial convention to dictate their internal and external policy.

Horrible scenes are reported as having occurred during the burning of Tomsk, the capital of Western Siberia. The place was visited simultaneously by a conflagration and a cyclone, the result of the combined disasters being the destruction of three-quarters of the buildings, which were of wood, and the loss of hundreds of lives.

General Boulanger has written a letter from the island of Jersey, in which he says that he no longer desires an intermediary between himself and his supporters, and he therefore, dissolves the Boulangist National Committee.

The nuns in a Catholic convent at Durno have been evicted by the Russian authorities, and the nunnery has been converted into a magazine.

Notice.

All contributions and communications intended for the Transit and Building Fund Society of Bishop William Taylor's Self-Supporting Missions, should be sent to Richard Grant, treasurer, 181 Hudson St., New York.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policyholders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

It is well known among successful merchants that liberal advertising is indispensable to the economical and successful working of their establishments.—Price Current.

A general invitation is extended. J. I. McGINNIS for Com.

The Destruction of J. G. Grant's Furniture House on Baronne Street.

The burning of the handsome structure occupied by J. G. Grant as a furniture emporium attracted a large throng of people on Saturday night, and Baronne street for hours was made impassible by the blockade of human spectators. It must have been gratifying to Mr. Grant to hear the expressions of sorrow from those present at the burning of his magnificent establishment. Mr. Grant is not an old resident of New Orleans, but since he has been in this city he has endeared himself to a very large class, who recognize in him not only a thorough business man, but a public-spirited citizen and Christian gentleman. The destruction of his immense stock will be a serious blow to a large class of dependents who rely upon him to help them in their efforts to make home comfortable and attractive. It is to be hoped that this enterprising gentleman will soon be re-established in business, and that his success will be as great in the future as it has been in the past. —Times-Democrat.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS
Cures Indigestion, Biliousness, Dyspepsia, Malaria, Nervousness, and General Debility. Physicians recommend it. All dealers sell it. Genuine has trade mark and crossed red lines on wrapper.

Advertising is evidently becoming an art, and its development may yet lead to the establishment of special courses of training in business colleges. Already nearly $25,000,000 are spent annually in the United States in newspaper advertising, every dollar of which if used judiciously has returned a large interest to the investor. One feature of the advertisements of to-day forms an agreeable contrast to the advertisements of a generation ago. It is the evident sincerity in which they are written and the consequently greater confidence the searcher after information can repose in them. That the advertising page is becoming one of the most interesting pages of the daily newspaper is one of the striking proofs of the growth of intelligence and refinement among the people.—Philadelphia Press.

COMING INTO PORT.

I have weathered the turbulent cape of storms,
Where the winds of passion blow;
I have sheered by the reefs that gnash to foam
The shadows that lurk below;
I have joyed in the surge of the whistling sea,
And the wild strong stress of the gale,
As my brave bark quivered and leaped, alive,
To the strain of its crowded sail.
Then the masterful spirit was on me,
And with nature I wrestled glad;
And danger was like a passionate bride,
And love was itself half mad.
Then life was a storm that blew me on,
And flew as the wild winds fly,
And hope was a pennon streaming out
High up—to play with the sky.

Oh! the golden days, the glorious days
That so slavish of life we spent!
Oh! the dreaming nights with the silent stars
'Neath the sky's mysterious tent!
Oh! the light, light heart and the strong desire
And the pulse's quickening thrill,
When joy lived with us, and beauty smiled,
And youth had its free, full will!
The whole wide world was before us then,
And never our spirits failed,
And we never looked back, but onward, onward
Into the future we sailed,
Ever before us the fair horizon
Whose dim and exquisite line
Alone divided our earth from heaven,
Our life from a life divine.

Now my voyage is well-nigh over,
And my stanchest spars are gone;
And my sails are rent, and my barnacled bark
Drags slowly and heavily on.
The faint breeze comes from the distant shore
With its odor dim and sweet,
And soon in the silent harbor of peace
Long-parted friends I shall greet.
The voyage is well-nigh over,
Tho' at times a capful of wind
Will rattle the ropes and fill the sails
And furrow a wake behind.
But the sea has become a weariness,
And glad into port I shall come
With my sails all furled, and my anchor dropped,
And my cargo carried home.

Proceedings of the General Conference.

ELEVENTH DAY.*

A resolution was introduced, signed by J. W. Lewis, J. C. Morris, B. H. Greathouse, T. McKennon, S. B. Nicholson, W. C. Black, H. M. Winslow and others, condemning Sunday papers.

The resolution said that it was a lamentable fact that the circulation of Sunday papers was on the increase, that they contain accounts of crimes and matters of worldly interest to such an extent, that readers are not fitted for the proper observance of the Sabbath. The resolution also charged that the preparation of Sunday papers involves a large amount of work on the Sabbath.

The Committee on Fraternal Correspondence, to whom was referred a communication asking the General Conference to appoint commissioners, to confer with commissioners to be appointed by the House of Bishops and House of Deputies of the Protestant Episcopal Church, for conference on organic union, etc., reported, recommending non-concurrence. The committee held that the spirit of the church had always been broad and catholic. It had welcomed to membership all who wished to be saved and had resolved to lead a new life, without regard to race or color. That policy would never be abandoned. As for organic union with the memorialists, the committee would regard it as an unmixed evil.

The M. E. Church, South, had never divided from any church, and the committee wanted those who had made division to make overtures for reunion.

The report was very tart in tone, and excited smiles from the Bishops and delegates. The vote of the Conference was unanimous in favor of the report.

The relations of the church to the colored people was discussed.

Mr. D. C. Kelley, of Tennessee, said:

The messenger from the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, who spoke here the other day, spoke the truth when he said his people depended upon us for material and spiritual benefits. We have shown the North and the West that in the South we do not talk sympathy with the negro: we practice it. The Southern people are the friends of the negro, and it is from them and from this church that colored people expect and will receive help.

TWELFTH DAY.

Conference met at the appointed hour, Bishop Wilson in the chair.

Devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. J. H. McLean, of the North Texas Conference.

Minutes of Saturday's session were read and approved.

Bishop Granbery took the chair.

J. W. Hinton, chairman, submitted Report No. 8 of the Committee on Episcopacy, recommending that the Bishops elected at this General Conference shall reside, one on the Pacific slope and one on the Mexican border.

S. Rodgers, chairman, submitted Report No. 4 of the Committee on Missions, which was read and placed on the calendar. The report recommends changes in the Constitution of the Woman's Board of Missions.

The hour of ten A. M. having arrived, after appropriate religious services the following ballots were had for the two Bishops ordered by a previous vote of the Conference:

FIRST BALLOT.

Whole number of votes cast, 272; necessary to a choice, 137; of which A. G. Haygood received 171; O. P. Fitzgerald, 53; David Morton, 32; H. C. Morrison, 29; P. A. Peterson, 26; R. N. Sledd, 25; W. T. Harris, 20; B. M. Messick, 20; W. A. Candler, 17; J. D. Barbee, 16; E. E. Hoss, 16; E. M. Bounds, 12; C. W. Carter, 9; J. D. Hammond, 9; R. H. Mahon, 9; A. C. Smith, 7; J. H. McLean, 6; J. E. Mann, 5; J. H. Pritchett, 4; J. Atkins, 4; W. D. Anderson, 4; W. C. Black, 3; J. J. Tigert, 3; J. A. Kern, 3; J. W. Hinton, 3; S. Rodgers, 3; H. A. Bourland, 3; M. H. Neeley, 2; Paul Whitehead, 2; E. A. Yates, 1; J. O. Branch, 1; A. H. Sutherland, 1; R. Smithson, 1; T. Christian, 1; J. W. Lewis, 1; I. S. Hopkins, 1; A. S. Andrews, 1; A. Hunter, 1.

The chair announced that A. G. Haygood, having received a majority of the votes cast, was duly elected a Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

SECOND BALLOT.

Whole number of votes cast, 270; necessary to a choice, 136; of which O. P. Fitzgerald received 91; D. Morton, 40; R. N. Sledd, 35; H. C. Morrison, 28; P. A. Peterson, 18; E. E. Hoss, 15; B. M. Messick, 14; W. T. Harris, 8; W. A. Candler, 7; J. D. Barbee, 3; J. R. Brooks, 2; E. M. Bounds, 2; James Atkins, 2; C. G. Andrews, 1; S. P. Wright, 1; R. H. Mahon, 1; Z. T. Bennett, 1; W. C. Black, 1; J. D. Hammond, 1.

The Chair announced that there was no election.

THIRD BALLOT.

Whole number of votes cast, 270; necessary to a choice, 136; of which O. P. Fitzgerald received 135; R. N. Sledd, 58; D. Morton, 43; H. C. Morrison, 13; P. A. Peterson, 5; W. A. Candler, 4; E. E. Hoss, 3; W. T. Harris, 2; J. Fred Cox, 1; W. P. Harrison, 1; W. M. Leftwich, 1; C. G. Andrews, 1; B. M. Messick, 1; A. R. Wilson, 1.

FOURTH BALLOT.

Whole number of votes cast, 270; necessary to a choice, 136; of which O. P. Fitzgerald received 159; R. N. Sledd, 91; David Morton, 15; W. T. Harris, 3; C. G. Andrews, 1; H. C. Morrison, 1.

The Chair announced that Oscar P. Fitzgerald, having received a majority of the votes cast, was duly elected a Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The Conference adjourned after announcements, with the benediction of Bishop Granbery.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

Conference met at the appointed hour, Bishop Granbery in the chair.

Devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. J. M. Binkley, of the North Texas Conference.

Minutes of yesterday's session were read and approved.

Bishop Hargrove took the chair.

S. H. Dent, chairman, submitted Report No. 9 of the Committee on Publishing Interests, which was read and placed on the calendar. And also Report No. 10, which is as follows:

Your committee beg leave to submit Report No. 10, as follows:

The general condition of the Publishing House as shown in the quadrennial report of the Agent and Business Manager:

1. The available assets over and above all liabilities are estimated to be worth the handsome sum of $560,739 75—an increase for the quadrennium of $227,172 56. The liabilities of the House are so small, to wit: $6,746 81, that we may safely consider this institution free from debt.

The volume of business for the four years ending March 31, 1890, amounting to $1,253,708 20, shows an increase in the sum of $293,091 06 for the quadrennium.

The financial status and continued prosperity of our Publishing House should fill our hearts with thankfulness to Almighty God, the Supreme Author of all our blessings.

Among the available assets above referred to we find outstanding accounts of $164,491 45, of which sum $25,325 16 has been charged to loss and gain. Your committee recognize the fact that it is almost, if not altogether, impossible to conduct a business of the magnitude shown by the report on a strictly cash basis; yet we do think this amount outstanding should be reduced as rapidly as possible.

PERIODICAL LITERATURE.

2. The Christian Advocate has reached a circulation of 27,000, and has recently been enlarged and improved.

We regret that the quadrennial report does not give us the fiscal exhibit of the Advocate for each year of the quadrennium just past; but for the year just closed we have the following facts:

Cash received	$42,125 20
Cash paid out	40,266 67
Balance in favor of Advocate	$1,858 53

We further find that of the sum credited to the Advocate, to wit: $42,125 20, that $2,750 was credited to it on account of advertisements of the publications of the Publishing House itself.

As the editor expended only $3,911 75 of the $10,000 allowed him for contributions during the past quadrennium, your committee conclude that so large an appropriation is unnecessary, and, therefore, recommend that the Book Agent be authorized to furnish the editors $1,500 per annum for this special purpose.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW.

6. We regret that this valuable publication has been issued at a loss. We find that the loss for the year ending March 31, 1890, is $1,270 64. Notwithstanding this loss, we regard this as a valuable publication for the church, and have in a former report recommended its continuance and the sum to be allowed for its maintenance.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL PERIODICALS.

7. Our Sunday-school periodicals have yielded for this year the sum of $101,426 57; paid out on account of same, $65,917 03; showing a net gain of $38,509 54, in addition to which profits have been made on our Standard Sunday-school Libraries, of which the number of 900 have been sold in the last eighteen months. The phenomenal increase of our Sunday-school work, and the large profits made on sales to our Sunday-schools, imperatively demands a more abundant supply of Sunday-school periodicals and standard literature.

REVISED HYMNAL.

8. The House has printed 310,000 copies of this book since April 1, 1889; of this number 235,055 were sold prior to April 1, 1890, at profit.

We rejoice to know that this book has met with ready sale and been received with great favor in our churches.

While the general condition of our Publishing House, as shown in the general report of our Book Agent and Business Manager, shows gratifying increase, the membership of our church has increased during the quadrennium more rapidly than have our facilities to supply them with a sound, religious literature.

The inauguration of a system of colportage, it is hoped, will give our books and periodicals a much wider field and a more thorough circulation.

Our Church Extension and Missionary Boards are opening now a fruitful field, and creating new and increasing demands for Southern Methodist literature, which our Publishing House must prepare to meet with large and enlightened enterprise and liberality. Your committee deem it important to have a comparative statement at the end of each quadrennium, giving the facts and figures of each year, so the General Conference can compare every year of the last quadrennium with the corresponding year of the preceding quadrennium.

We further recommend that said reports be made out separately for the Advocate, the Review, the Sunday-school literature, merchandise department and any other periodical ordered by the church, so everyone will show cost of production and proceeds, and consequent profit or loss.

Respectfully submitted.

S. H. DENT, Chairman.
B. F. HAYNES, Secretary.

W. H. Goodale, chairman, submitted Report No. 4 of the Committee on Temperance, which was read and taken up under a suspension of the rule, and, on motion, was adopted by a unanimous vote. The report is good reading, and warm enough for the strongest friend of the cause.

The Committee on Fraternal Correspondence, to whom was referred a communication signed David S. Monroe, secretary, on the subject of the Ecumenical Conference proposed to be held in the fall of 1891, made their report, to which was appended the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of two Bishops, three ministers and three laymen be appointed by the college of Bishops as the Committee of Correspondence from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and that the names of the members of said committee and the address of its chairman be forwarded by the secretary of this Conference to the Rev. David S. Monroe, D. D., secretary, Altoona, Penn.

Respectfully submitted.

SAMUEL B. JONES, Chair'n.

Also Report No. 5 of the same committee, which was read, and under a suspension of the rule was taken up and adopted.

Following is the report:

REPORT NO. 5.

The Committee on Fraternal Correspondence begs leave to submit the following preamble and resolutions, and asks for its immediate consideration:

Whereas, The Rev. David J. Waller, D. D., fraternal delegate from the Wesleyan Methodist Conference of Great Britain and Ireland, has won the heart of this Conference not only by the brotherly message which he brought us, and the spirit of love in which he delivered it, but by the power of his preaching and the charm of his social intercourse; And, whereas, He is now about to leave us for his distant home; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, cordially reciprocates the expressions of brotherly love and friendship brought to us by our brother from the eastern shore of the Atlantic, and rejoices with him in the success and enlargement of the mother of us all.

Resolved, That the visit of Dr. Waller has been to us a source of unmixed pleasure; that we have listened, with glowing hearts, to his eloquent words of wisdom and truth; and that in parting with him, our prayers shall ascend to the throne of Grace, that he may be returned, in safety, to the home he loves, and to the church in which he is so honored a minister.

Respectfully submitted.

SAM B. JONES, Chair'n.

The report of the special committee on the spiritual state of the church was read by the chairman, J. J. Tigert, and provoked a lively and protracted discussion.

The proceedings of the morning were suspended at this point by Bishop Hargrove, who stated that Dr. Frank M. Bristol, who had been in regular attendance upon the sessions of the Conference as a fraternal delegate of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was about to take his departure, and now wished to say a word of farewell.

Dr. Bristol said:

Mr. President and Brethren of the General Conference: I desire to thank you for the cordiality with which you have met me as the fraternal delegate of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and to say that every day of my stay in your midst has been made delightful by the fraternal courtesies of your laymen, of the delegates, and of your honored Bishops. While I have been flattered with the kindly attentions that have been showered upon me, I feel the greater honor and the greator satisfaction in the belief that your kindly attentions to me have been but your expressions of Christian love for and your fraternal feeling toward the Methodist Episcopal Church. (Applause.) As your honored senior Bishop suggested, I have found that this beautiful Southland is, indeed, a goodly land. And, sir, I must also carry the report back with me that the land is full of giants (laughter and applause); not the giant sons of Anak, however, but veritably the giant sons of God, as gentle as they are strong, and as fraternal as they are full of affection and kindness. I thank you and bid you farewell. (Applause.)

On motion the Conference adjourned, after announcements and the doxology, with the benediction by Bishop Galloway.

FIFTEENTH DAY.*

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, sat down very hard this morning on the Episcopal Church. The question of accepting or declining the proposition of the Episcopal Church to appoint a committee to confer with a committee from that church on Christian unity was opened by the motion of Dr. Hammond, of Missouri, to reconsider the report of the committee which rejected the proposition, and declared that such a conference was not desirable.

Dr. Hammond's motion awakened rather a lively debate, and some sharp remarks were made concerning the church which made the proposition, and undertook to say that the Methodist Church should recognize historical orders, and admit that it was without orders.

One of the members said that Dr. Phillips Brooks himself, a man who stood like Saul above the others in the convention of the Episcopal Church, had declared that the proposition was "a piece of impotent impertinence," and he agreed with Dr. Brooks.

The report of the committee declining Christian unity was adopted.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

Several matters of interest were up for discussion during the day. By a nearly unanimous vote the Conference resolved to postpone for, at least, another quadrennium the subject of Methodist union in Japan. This action has much significance, and insures, as we think, the growth and enlargement of our missionary enterprises in that quarter. By a large majority it was determined to elect three Missionary Secretaries—one for the office and two for the field. The election of a Treasurer was committed to the Board. After much debate the project looking to the publication of a youth's paper was indefinitely postponed.

Rev. Dr. Schaffer, of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, was introduced, and delivered an excellent fraternal address, to which Bishop Galloway responded in fitting terms.

At 3:30 P. M., Bishops Haygood and Fitzgerald were ordained in Centenary Church. There was a great crowd present. Bishop Keener preached an admirable sermon on Ephesians i, 3-6, after which Dr. Haygood was presented for ordination by Rev. Warren A. Candler and Rev. H. J. Adams, and Dr. Fitzgerald by Rev. E. E. Hoss and Rev. Sam Brown. When the services were over, the new Bishops received many congratulations from their friends.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.*

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was presided over by Bishop Haygood to-day. A great debate arose over a committee report recommending that the Board of Church Extension establish a system of mutual insurance for churches. The regular order was suspended in order to approve this report, as it was thought there would be no difficulty in securing approval.

David Morton, secretary of the Board of Church Extension, opposed the report vehemently.

He said that the plan was not practicable. The Board could not have local agents because it would then be compelled to pay licenses, commissions, and in many States deposit a guaranty fund in the hands of an insurance commissioner. It might adopt another plan. It might have central agencies in Louisville. But insurance companies adopting this scheme send adjusters out when a fire occurred. These adjusters have been arrested in some States for violating the insurance laws. They have escaped from penalties by pleading technicalities; but the speaker wanted to know what would be the position of the church if it was placed in the same situation. An insurance business was an entirely secular business, in which a religious organization should not engage. The speaker continued at some length and turned the tide against the report, which was not passed.

A proposition was made to establish a paper on the Pacific coast, and it was recommended that the Book Committee and Publishing Agent do this. An editor was to be elected by the General Conference, and $10,000 for the quadrennium was to be allowed to establish the paper.

Delegate Paul Whitehead recalled the failure of the Richmond (Va.) Advocate, which had been subsidized by the General Conference, and warned against similar mistakes.

J. J. Lafferty told how, by hard work, he and another had resuscitated the Richmond paper after the subsidy had been withdrawn. His speech was full of homely proverbs.

"What was the reason Kentucky had no more four-mile horses?" he asked, and was told why. Formerly the colts were turned out in the lot in winter to forage for themselves, to find the nubbin that had been overlooked—to rough it. Then they were strong and capable of running four miles. Now the colts are tenderly cared for in the stable, their food prepared and served for them, and they run one mile. A paper that has to root and forage for a living may make a living, and it will tell the truth; but a subsidized paper stops rooting and drifts.

The Californians advocated the report, as did also Judge Dent, the chairman of the committee bringing in the report. It was adopted.

Rev. E. E. Hoss, of Vanderbilt University, was elected editor of the Advocate, the church organ.

EIGHTEENTH DAY.*

The General Conference elected a number of officials to-day. D. M. Smith, who has been manager of the Publishing House, was elected assistant book agent at a salary of $2,500. Two missionary secretaries at the same salary—I. G. John, of Galveston, and A. Coke Smith, of Wofford College—were elected.

E. M. Bounds, of St. Louis, was elected assistant editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, and J. D. Barbee, the present incumbent, was elected Book Agent at $3,000 a year.

The General Conference received a communication from the National Reform Association, addressed to the Bishops and delegates, calling their attention to the question of divorce, and asking some action, such as would aid in the elevation of public opinion on the subject.

Rev. Samuel Rodgers, of Baltimore, prepared and presented a response in the form of a resolution. The whereases contained the information that in the past twenty years 378,716 divorces had been granted in the country. In that period the population of the country had increased 66 per cent., while divorces had increased 157 per cent. There are forty-six sets of laws in the States and Territories, no two being alike. Thirty causes for divorce are recognized in these laws.

The resolution was that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, recognized but one (the scriptural) cause of divorce; and it will rejoice in the day when the laws of all States accord with the law of the church in the matter.

The report of the Committee on Boundaries was taken up. The report recommended the creation of a new Conference by separating part of New Mexico from Colorado. There were two reports, the majority giving the Conference power to divide itself, and the minority making division mandatory. The latter was adopted. The States of Illinois and Indiana, with the exception of Jeffersonville, Ind., which is added to the Louisville Conference, now make the Illinois Conference.

Rev. J. E. Mann, a delegate from Newbern, N. C., died suddenly to-day.

PHUSSANDPHRET.

Have you ever heard of the land called Phussandphret,
Where people live upon woes and regret?
Its climate is bad, I have heard folks say,
There's seldom, if ever, a pleasant day
'Tis either too gloomy from clouded skies,
Or so bright the sunshine dazzles one's eyes;
'Tis either so cold one is all of a chill,
Or else 'tis so warm it makes one ill;
The season is either too damp or too dry,
And mildew or drought is always nigh,
For nothing that ever happened yet,
Was just as it should be in Phussandphret.

And the children—it really makes me sad
To think they never look happy and glad.
It is "O, dear me!" until school is done,
And 'tis then, "There never is time for fun
Their teachers are cross, they all declare,
And examinations are never fair.
Each little duty they're apt to shirk,
Because they're tired or 'tis too hard work
Everyone is as grave as an owl,
And has pouting lips or a gloomy scowl;
The voices whine and the eyes are wet
In this doleful country of Phussandphret.

Now, if ever you find your feet are set
On the down-hill road into Phussandphret,
Turn and travel the other way,
Or you will never know a happy day.
Follow some cheerful face—'twill guide
To the land of Look-at-the-Pleasant-Side.
Then something bright you will always see,
No matter how dark the way may be,
You'll smile at your tasks and laugh in your dreams,
And learn that no ill is as it seems;
So lose no time, but haste to get
As far as you can from Phussandphret.

—Our Youth.

Speeches of Fraternal Delegates from the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Bishop Keener introduced the Rev. Dr. Frank M. Bristol, of Chicago, as follows:

We have met to-night, brethren, to hear the fraternal greetings of the Methodist Episcopal Church, our neighbor, and to cultivate a good neighborly feeling. We shall have pleasure to-night in hearing from both Dr. Bristol and Gov. Pattison.

Fathers and Brethren Beloved:

In the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church, I have the honor to bring fraternal greeting and the assurances of profound esteem and hearty good-will to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, representatively assembled in General Conference.

In this agreeable duty I have the honor to accompany that distinguished layman, honored alike in Church and State, the Hon. Robert E. Pattison, of Philadelphia, ex-governor of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

In the olden time an embassador would be expected, on occasion of great moment, to bear his message in a case of precious fabric, and in sentences enhessed with gold. We bring our fraternal greeting in our hearts, and only with the golden language of sincerity would we adorn the expression of our Christian love.

As a ministerial delegate I am not expected to address nor to represent ecclesiastical politicians.

I do not speak to nor for that happily decreasing element of hyper-conscientious agitators whose self-imposed mission it is to "tear agapo the bleeding wounds afresh."

I come a messenger to and of that great progressive Methodism, which is spiritual-minded enough to see that "there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit, there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord, and there are diversities, but it is the same God which worketh all in all."

Permit me, sir, to assure you that your fraternal delegates are most cordially welcomed by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The messages they bring grow in interest and importance. More and more unction blesses their words, closer and closer do they seem bound to us in Christian fellowship, and our people take increasing delight in entertaining them with a generosity which we will allow none can excel except those who were born and bred to the graces of Southern hospitality.

We have reason to acknowledge the considerate wisdom of your choice in sending as your last fraternal messenger to the Methodist Episcopal Church, Rev. Samuel A. Steel, D. D.

You knew by happy experience that Methodist preachers and Methodist laymen admire that charming combination of human power, the thoughtful mind, the generous heart and the eloquent tongue.

And while with vigor of thought, and remarkable felicity of expression, your delegate delivered your message, we were assured that it came not only from the lips of an eloquent speaker, but also from the great heart of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Brethren, I shall count it one of the joys of my life if I may be able to convey to you the message of good-will with the warmth and sincerity with which the Methodist Episcopal Church has sent it.

These fraternal meetings and interchanges of Christian courtesies are not meaningless formalities.

They grow significant. God grant they may preserve a spiritual, if they may not result in cementing an organic union between us that will prove a blessing of joy and power to our entire American Methodism.

I can not speak of these two great sister churches as of two Methodisms any more than I can speak of the two great political parties of this country as of two Americanisms. In the spirit of Methodism, as in the spirit of Americanism, we are one—one in the inheritance of the faith delivered to the saints, one in the genius of a liberty-achieving Protestantism, one in the wealth of our holy Methodist traditions, one in kinship with the mighty men "that made the old time splendid," one in that diviner unity for which the Savior prayed, one in our hopes of the ultimate triumphs of the cross, and of the everlasting glory of the saints in light.

Mr. President, we have heard from the eloquent lips of your messengers, and not from them alone, that God has given you great prosperity in the conversion of souls, and the large increase of your church membership, in the development of your educational facilities, in the growth and success of your missions in Mexico, South America, China, Japan and all the regions beyond.

We have watched your triumphant advances against the strongholds of sin and idolatry and a world's unrighteousness not with the eye of envy, but as Lafayette at Yorktown watched the gallant assault of Hamilton upon the works of the enemy, with an eye of grateful admiration. We hail your achievements with thanksgivings, and pray the blessings of God upon you and your great work in multiplied grace and power. We felicitate ourselves that this joy in the success of Methodism is mutual, and our congratulations are reciprocal. As a people and a ministry that glory in nothing but the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, we have reached "the purer air and broader view" where we can join each other to hail the victories of the cross, and we are ever ready to raise the holy paean, whoever may be the honored head to plant the crimson standard on the heights, and win another field for God and righteousness.

We congratulate you, dear brethren, on your maintenance of the genuine spirit and purpose of Methodism. In origin and development this Methodism has been a revival movement, educational and missionary in method. It will not be claimed that it introduced a new theology, though it gave a new emphasis and spirit to the doctrines it taught, and, to its glory be it said, Methodism has carried from the rear to the fore-front of theological thought the standard of the Arminian scheme. To that rational and scriptural standard is now rallying the progressive faith of evangelical Christianity. It can not be said that Methodism has found its chief strength in its polity, nor that its boast should be in the splendor of its ecclesiasticism. It has not attempted to formulate for the people their expression of religious hope and feeling in an elaborate ritualism, but has believed in the holy power and influence of religious spontaniety of free, independent and individual expression of religious conditions in personal testimony, in voluntary prayer, in congregational singing, in the exultant hallelujahs that signal the victories of faith and the triumphs of redeeming grace.

Our Methodist Episcopal ecclesiasticism is proving itself to be the most efficient machinery that has ever been invented by human wisdom for utilizing all its available forces for all they are worth, in reaching all men, at all times, in all places, with all the light and power of the all-sufficient gospel. We do not believe in the ecclesiastical tinker. We believe in the machine, as we believe in keeping the rules and not mending them. But as with the Cunarder, so with Methodism, we know that her progress, her speed, her ability to breast the waves, wrestle with the tempests and bear her precious burden havenward, depend more upon the power within than upon the machinery. Great, staunch, sea-worthy as may be our Methodist Episcopal ecclesiasticism, without the controlling presence and power of the Holy Ghost it would soon become a lumbering and useless hulk. Evangelistic life, missionary spirit and educational power, these are still and ever must be characteristics of a progressive and aggressive Methodism.

Brethren, we rejoice with you that Methodism is still a revival. From the Northern lakes to the Southern gulf, from Atlantic to Pacific, from Mexico to Brazil, from Brazil to Africa, from Africa to China, from China to the uttermost parts of the earth, Methodism means revival. This it has meant to their two great sister churches by whose efforts 650,000 souls have been brought to their altars during the last four years. Our cry has been, "A million dollars for missions," but the grander cry in trumpet tones rings forth from all our American Methodism, "A million souls for Christ."

In 1735 John Wesley came to Georgia as a missionary to the Indians. Missionary zeal was the first characteristic manifestation of the newly awakened religious genius of the founder of Methodism. On that missionary journey, and in that unhappy missionary adventure Wesley was providentially led to see his deepest spiritual need, and to seek for that experience of the witness of the Spirit without which there could have been no Methodism. American Methodism is indebted to the missionary spirit of British Methodism. In the Conference held at Leeds, in 1769, Mr. Wesley said: "We have a pressing call from our brethren in New York to come over and help them. Who will go?" Richard Boardman and Joseph Pilmoor volunteered to go as missionaries to America, and a collection was then and there raised to pay their passage and to assist the brethren in New York. Since that day the Methodists have heard from India, China, Japan, Africa, Italy, Mexico, South America, and the isles of the sea the same Macedonian cry: "Come over and help us." And the same spirit which sent Boardman and Pilmoor with financial aid to our great-grandfathers is inspiring American Methodism to send missionaries to the great-grandsires of coming Christian empires.

Christianity is missionary. Jesus said unto his church: "Go." "Go ye into all the world." "Go disciple all nations." In obedience to that command, the missionary has carried the gospel to every land, and with the gospel every civilized good. There is no philosophy of modern history worth the writing or the reading that does not recognize the history-making power of the Christian missionary. The most tremendous force for righteousness and moral revolution in modern progress has been the teacher divinely sent. The torch-bearers of new eras, the heralds of new enlightenments to the nations of the earth, have not been conquering soldiers, not commercial adventurers, not clever diplomats, but consecrated missionaries. When I began a serious study of history I scanned the battlefields to find the most powerful fashioners of social manners and national destinies. But the more I studied the profounder grew the conviction that back of famous generals, making their greatness possible, were wise statesmen and legislators. So I began to look into senates and parliaments for the truly great end, the historically potential. But I found that these framers of constitutions and architects of states were largely what they had been religiously taught to be. Therefore Alfred, Charlemagne, and the signers of '76, there laying the superstructure and law-protected liberty, could not have been possible without the work of certain taller men—men who stood back of them, men lifting the cross before the eyes of savagery, men heralding the divine Christ to idolatrous tribes, men opening in the darkness of heathenism that heavenly Word, which was destined to become a lamp to the feet and a light to the path of every nation's progress.

And so to-day the men who crowd our admiring vision as the mighty of the past, as the truly heroic, as the "men with Christian empires in their brains," are those missionaries who have gone forth into the darkness ere the prophecy of morning had touched the hills or the stubborn soil had yielded the promise of a harvest, and with their giant stride and swing have planted great hereafters in the now, have scattered the vital seed from which have sprung the constitutions, the sociologies, the letters, arts and laws which make each dawning day more splendid than the past.

Carlyle insists that, "The true epic of our time is not 'Arms and the man' but 'Tools and the man,' an infinitely wider kind of epic." But he who shall give us the profoundest philosophy of our modern history must come to say: "The true epic of our time is not 'Arms and the man' nor 'Tools and the man,' but the 'Cross and the man,' infinitely the widest kind of epic.

Study St. Paul to find the most potent instrument of Divine Providence in the overthrow of Pagan empire and the founding of a new and righteous sociology.

Follow the missionary routes from Paul's day to this and you follow the course of civilization. Twelve centuries ago Augustine left Rome to evangelize the Anglo-Saxons, the barbarous ancestors of Bacon, Shakespeare, Milton, Wesley, Newton and Gladstone. A century later Boniface went from England as a missionary to the tribes of Germany, the pagan ancestors of Goethe, Schiller, Luther, Mozart and Bismarck. Yes, we are the descendents of idolators, and less than forty generations removed from an ancestry of barbarians. But to-day, with a literature greater than the Greeks, a science greater than the Egyptians, a jurisprudence greater than the Romans, and a moral genius and purpose greater than the Hebrews, this dominant Anglo-Saxon civilization becomes the miracle of his story, wrought by Divine Power through the heroic agency of the missionary. The same missionary spirit that came with light to the heathen darkness of our ancestors thrills the bounding heart of the nineteenth century Methodism, and forth from our fire-touched altars pour consecrated missionaries toward all the gleaming horizons, crying, "The world for Christ," "The heathen for his inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession." Back of this consecration stands the most benevolent Christian laity the world has ever known, crying to the advancing missionary hosts in the very spirit and language of the Lord Jesus, "Ask and it shall be given unto you," and unto these two missionary treasuries annually pours the golden stream of $1,700,000, and the fountain of this grand benevolence is as deep and exhaustless as the manhood and womanhood of Methodism. We rejoice, brethren, to report with you a glorious advance along all our missionary lines. Not only Christianity, but Methodist Christianity seems remarkably well adapted to every clime, and color, and tongue, and name, of all the sons of man. It is one of the highest civilizing agencies of history.

Methodists are not given to a blind idolatry of John Wesley, but with all intelligent people they appreciate the fact that this revival and missionary movement called "Methodism" originated in the brain of a Greek lecturer of classic tastes and profound erudition. It is worthy of note that the moral reformation of the Italian Renaissance was attempted by Savonarola, a professor of the College of Bologna. The Bohemian reformation was started by Huss, a professor of the University of Prague. The German reformation was championed by Luther, a professor of the University of Wittenburg. The reformation in France was promoted by Calvin, a professor of the University of Strasburg. And the reformation in England was brought to its highest spiritual expression by John Wesley, a professor of the University of Oxford. John Wesley's father and his grandfathers and great-grandfathers on both sides were not only ministers, but college-bred men of classical tastes and liberal education. The first people that were called "Methodists," though often of the humbler class, were instructed in the faith of the gospel by scholars of profound learning, and orators who spoke with the eloquence of a classic English. Not that all those early Methodist preachers were scholars, but the chief among them were men of educational training. It gave no little pleasure, on one occasion, to listen to Archdeacon Farrar, as he preached his annual charity sermon in St. Margaret's Chapel, Westminster. The discourse was replete with all those graces of thought and diction for which that preacher is justly distinguished. But in that sermon of rare beauty he came to his most impassioned climax with a quotation from John Wesley. I am confident that it was not my Methodism alone that took pride in the sentiments and language of Wesley quoted from a Church-of-England pulpit. It was intellectual admiration for the genius, learning and eloquence of the man that brought to my mind the simile: "Wesley's words in Farrar's sermon are like apples of gold in pictures of silver." The history of the Methodist pulpit is adorned with the names of men who, either by self-training or the advantage of the schools, have achieved a fame for pure and lofty eloquence that will live forever with the best traditions of the church. With legitimate pride American Methodists recall the sacred fire of McKendree and the wit of Jesse Lee, Asbury's resistless logic and Capers' golden speech, the stately eloquence of Bascom and Thomson's classic grace; Soule's astute legal wisdom and Summers' scholarship; the philosophic depth of Whedon and the learning of McClintock, Simpson's pathetic unction and the rare acumen of McTyeire.

"We sprung from loins of stalwart men," and have inherited from our fathers the conviction that no language is too pure, no style too chaste, no logic too vigorous, no scholarship too thorough, no eloquence too rich and copious to convey the divine beauties and heavenly charms of the gospel of him who spoke as never man spake in wonderful words of life.

Methodism believes in an educated ministry. And, though eloquence seems to belong by nature to this warm and luxurious Southern genius, you believe in an educated eloquence, in a scholarly eloquence, in a Wesleyan and Pauline eloquence, an eloquence that is eloquent with sanctified wisdom, knowledge, truth and earnestness. In this respect the Methodist Episcopal Church would unite with you in maintaining a high standard of ministerial education. Our thirteen theological institutions, and conspicuously Drew, Garrett, Gammon and Boston, prosperous beyond the dreams of their noble founders, are sending into our pulpits and mission fields a class of men whose gifts, graces and attainments fit them for a nineteenth century success.

Methodism believes in an educated people, and in this it possesses the true enlightening and elevating genius of Christianity. Literature, science and art have followed the church of Christ in its evangelizing progress. The revival of Greek learning in England is due to Theodore, Archbishop of Canterbury. The first library in that country was established by Egbert, Archbishop of York. Oxford, the cradle of Methodism, was founded by William, Rector of Durham. Glasgow University was founded by Bishop Thornbull, and Cambridge by Joffred, a Christian abbot. From those centers has streamed the light by which nations have found their way to greatness. When the religion which had been planting schools and colleges throughout Europe came on into America, it brought the educational spirit and purpose. Harvard University was founded by a minister who consecrated £700 to the enterprise. Ten clergymen brought their books together, and Yale was founded on those books. Methodism born in the halls of Oxford, nourished on Greek roots, rocked in the cradle of sacred poetry, introduced to church history by classical scholars, came with a power not only to melt the heart of humble and unlettered toil, but also to charm the highest intellectuality of the age. At one and the same time it began to build the mourner's bench and the student's desk, the chapel and the college. When it swept on into America stigmatized, nay, glorified as the church of the ignorant and the poor, it came with an educating light, and in a single century it has built in this country not only fifty thousand churches, but also more than two hundred educational institutions. Humble, indeed, have been the beginnings of these schools. Cambridge University, of England, began in a barn. Many a Methodist college was begun at a hitching post or a stump in the frontier forest. But now by hundreds rise the flourishing schools, in which American Methodism has invested more than thirty million dollars.

The Methodist Episcopal Church prides herself on the fact that with you she has preserved the educational no less than the evangelistic genius that ennobled her origin. With you she believes that by the power of sanctified knowledge, by the enlightenment of universal education, the Spirit of God would lead the people into all truth, and the truth shall make them free. From these colleges of Methodism are to come poets, statesmen, scientists, teachers, reformers, ministers, presidents, the ornaments of the age to be. Think of the influence of Oxford on English history in sending forth from her halls such men as Tyndale, Bacon, Raleigh, Sidney, Johnson, Addison, Whitefield, Wesley. Think of the power of Cambridge in her sons, Chaucer, Coverdale, Spencer, Milton, Dryden, Cromwell, Newton, Pitt, Macaulay, Wilberforce and Tennyson. Dream, if you can, with all the extravagance of bright imagination, of the greatness and glory which these colleges, even of Methodist planting, may yet reflect upon this people and this nation. The living church, the church of the present, the church of the future, the eternal church, must be an educating light and intellectualizing power to the race. Such must be our beloved Methodism.

Brethren, do not think that I have been delegated to boast of our development and prosperity more than to congratulate you in the name of our common Lord upon the splendid success of your devout labors. Indulge me, however, in the privilege of calling your attention to some of the new features of our growing church. New days bring new problems. An aggressive Methodism must adjust itself to its opportunity. In the growth of our large cities, centers of power and centers of danger, the immigration of vast numbers of foreigners who pour into these centers has pressed upon the church the problem of their evangelization. It has been found that in cities of rapid growth, like New York, Chicago, and St. Louis, these foreign populations will often mass in localities to the number of twenty, thirty, or even forty thousand souls without an evangelical church or Sunday-school. By the wise and tireless benevolence of our laymen, local city mission and church extension societies have been organized in several cities. They plant and support missions in the neglected districts, open Sunday-schools, gather in the children by thousands, conduct preaching and revival services, form classes which rapidly grow into self-sustaining societies, and build chapels, or make possible by assistance the building of churches for the accommodation of these societies as they grow to need them. Methodism is making a rapid and healthy growth in all the cities where these societies have been established. Chicago Methodism is putting $15,000 into this work annually, while New York Methodism has reached thirty or forty thousand dollars. There is no work of a local character, in the estimation of our thoughtful and benevolent laymen, where a dollar will go farther in its evangelizing power, or where the church can reach the race more quickly with the gospel, or be of great service as a safeguard to the peace of society and the stability of the nation than in this city mission work.

We invite your congratulations on another newly-developed gospel agency in our church. It has doubtless been a frequent question with the thoughtful why, in a polity so ambitious, so extensive and complicate, so world-wide and heaven-high in its aim, so liberal in genius as our Episcopal Methodism, has there been such scant provision made for utilizing the next-to-divine powers of womanhood? The noble activity and success of woman in gospel temperance, and in home and foreign missionary work have swept away the old prejudices, which were once called arguments against the more public Christian activity of woman. Many new doors have been providentially opened to invite her to a wider usefulness for Christ and humanity. Out of the women missionary idea grew the training-school idea, and out of the training-school idea, which has prepared women for city, home and foreign mission fields, grew the revival of that Christianizing agency of the apostolic age, the office of deaconesses. And almost before history knew it the Methodist deaconesses were here, just as before Wesley knew it or could prevent it, the Methodist lay evangelist was here. The Methodist Episcopal Church had the pious wisdom to interpret the providential character of this movement, and the last General Conference, recognizing the fact that there were and were to be deaconesses in the church, said: "The duties of the deaconesses are to minister to the poor, visit the sick, pray with the dying, care for the orphan, seek the wandering, comfort the sorrowing, save the sinning, and, relinquishing wholly all other pursuits, devote themselves in a general way to such forms of Christian labor as may be suited to their abilities." These devout women are educated to this work by a two years' course of training. A large proportion of them take special instruction in scientific nursing in our hospitals. For the accommodation of these workers, homes for deaconesses have been established in Chicago, Boston, New York, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Washington and Minneapolis. These homes are not nunneries. These deaconesses are not nuns, not bound by any oath to continue in the work for life. They are free to lay aside this mode of activity at any time. The homes are open to visitors at all hours of the day. There is no Romishness about them. They are centers of heavenly light to the dark places. And these fleet ladies, free as your own daughters, are God's gentle and gracious ministers to the poor and sick and dying. They go to where our poor humanity are suffering in squalor, sin and wretchedness. No filthiness is so loathsome, no disease so contagious as to daunt the courage of their kindness or check the zeal of their devotion. They toil without recompense of gold, but they are growing rich in the abounding favor of God. The name of deaconess is the synonym of charity in all the churches, and the blessings of the people follow these angels of mercy as, in the spirit of their Master, they go about our cities doing good.

Another branch, blossoming with the promise of abundant fruitfulness, has sprung forth in the growth of our church. It is well known to you that in this age of intense activity, intellectual, social, spiritual and evangelistic, there have been developing in the church various young people's societies. Each has sprung into existence vitalized by some newly emphasized idea that may have been growing in neglect. It was the social idea, or the literary and educational idea, or the holiness idea, or the revival idea. The development of these societies was a sign of the times. It demonstrated the existence of a power in the church that was growing restless of its limitations and was demanding greater and more varied opportunity. It also said: "There is more power in the youth of the church than is being utilized; there is more lightning here than you have harnessed." Doubtless each society had its own indisputable raison d'etre. But it came to be seen that the broadest Christian culture and usefulness of the young people of the church demanded their organization into one society all-comprehensive in its moral and educational scope. A society was demanded combining the ideas of Christian and denominational education of sociability, and of evangelistic activity, a society broad enough to give room to our young people for the freest intellectual and spiritual growth, and for the most extensive Christian activity. Such a society has been realized in the Epworth League. It is now one year old and has a membership of one hundred and fifty thousand and of the most progressive young people in Methodism. In the interests of this society and of the young people generally, the Epworth Herald has been founded, a bright, thoughtful, spiritual paper, published weekly and promising a wide circulation. We expect the Epworth League will be a social power in the church to largely settle the vexed question of worldly amusements. We expect it will be a power for a higher intelligence and broader culture to counteract the influences of pernicious, infidel and impure literature. We expect it will be a power for revival and salvation, a power for evangelical propaganda, and a power for a more fraternal unification of American Methodism. Pardon me if I have the desire to find this power in every new thing.

And now, my brethren, to approach a vital theme, may I not make bold to affirm that the time has come when to be progressive, to measure up to the demands of the age, to realize the highest prophesied destiny of our glorious Christianity, we must hail with sincere joy every honest, legitimate agency which promises to close up the ranks and unify the aims and purposes, if not the methods, of this growing and aggressive American Methodism?

It is said that our fathers will never see eye to eye; in the nature of the case the memories of the past will retard the growth of fraternity. But, sons of Wesley and sons of God, we believe in the regenerated nature of the case, that the hopes of the future will dominate the memories of the past, and fraternity is the precious burden of the brightest prophecy. I find that the most irreconcilable men of the country on both sides, whether in the church or out of it, are not the men who measured swords upon the field of battle, but men who would measure ink bottles over the tombs and monuments of the brave and gallant dead; politicians who care more for place than peace, more for the spoils of office than for the sanctity of law and order. Those braver, grander men of the chivalric spirit urge us out of the dust and out of the stars; they urge us to a broad and generous fraternity. Two soldiers rose in my congregation during a revival to give their testimony. One had fought with Logan, the other with Stonewall Jackson. The latter was a Virginian, and the son of a Methodist preacher, and he had recently been converted at the altar. That night, with an eloquence that electrified the congregation, he cried to the other soldier: "Brother, we fought under different banners during the war, and followed different generals; but to-night we march together, keeping step to the same music; the cross alone is our standard, and Jesus leads us on." It was Southern; it was Christian; it was thrilling. The praises of God filled the sanctuary. Oh, brethren, have not the greater soldiers met beyond the taps and reveille to grasp each other's hand in lasting brotherhood?—and does not the very pathos of their earthly sleep and silence urge us to the moral greatness of universal fraternity?

What we have neither the conscience nor the courage to do, we should never have the audacity to demand. But is it not possible for a wise and divinely enlightened people to bury their prejudices without burying their principles?

May not our fraternity last a quadrennium—nay, a millennium? If, as its delegate, I extend to you the fraternal hand of the Methodist Episcopal Church, I do not propose to withdraw it from your warm grasp when I depart. Hold it. We must be in touch. It is in the prayer of all Methodism; it is in the grand "Amen" of God. Brethren, we hear a great deal in these days about the "New South." There is magic in the words. They made the lips of Grady eloquent; they graced the speech of Gordon; they fell like music from the lips of Dr. Steele. But is there not a "New North?" Is it the "New South" and the old North? God forbid. Let it be the New South and the New North, the New East and the New West, and let the voice of the reconciling Providence be heard in the progress, prosperity and fraternity of the land: "Behold, I make all things new."

There are vast problems for this new age to consider, possibly to solve. And Methodism stands related to every moral issue of the times. She has held her proud position in the van of God's advancing hosts by a thoughtful study and candid discussion of every social question that has affected public morals. What is Christianity here for if not to Christianize sociology and save the community as well as the individual?

The temperance question, the labor question, the race question, the question of social purity, of the Sabbath, of the common school, and of foreignisms, are all here. They will not down. We are face to face with them. Methodism can not, without moral suicide, assume an indifferent nor an unrighteous attitude on any of these great issues. Do not think that I speak without premeditation when I submit that not one of these problems is a local issue. They are all vital questions, affecting the very integrity of the social fabric and of Christian civilization. They are not Northern issues, nor Southern issues merely—they are American issues—nay, moral issues—are universal issues.

The temperance war is on. It is not a local problem. Kansas is but one of the battlefields; Iowa is but one of the battlefields; Georgia is but one of the battlefields. The map of this war covers the continent. The recent decision of the Supreme Court has opened our eyes to the fact that Prohibition Iowa is not safe so long as Illinois can pour her "original packages" of bottled hell into that temperance State, and so long as Missouri may distill whisky for Kansas, and Massachusetts may brew beer for Maine. The Prohibition State becomes a lamb in the midst of howling wolves, to be torn to pieces and devoured. The temperance sentiment of the country must be a Christian sentiment, united sentiment, a universal, a national sentiment. In its development no organization on the continent has a greater opportunity, a greater responsibility, a greater power, than our total abstinence and prohibition Methodism. I am not pleading for a political Christianity, nor for a political Methodism. I am pleading for such a universal development of conscience and sentiment on this temperance problem as that legislators who are paid to make laws for the people, and not for parties, will give us temperance laws, and mayors and governors who pledge themselves to execute the law will not dare, even for party ends, to violate their oath of office. It has been stated by no less an authority than Theodore L. Cuyler, that the first important publication in this country in the direction of temperance, was "An Inquiry into the Effects of Ardent Spirits upon the Human Mind and Body," written in 1785 by Dr. Benjamin Rush, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. I respectfully challenge the historical correctness of the statement in the name of a little book known as the Methodist Discipline," wherein from the founding of the Methodist Episcopal Church total abstinence has been demanded of the people called "Methodists." The General Rules were not in the first edition of the Discipline of 1785, but in the questions and answers was the doctrine of total abstinence for ministers and laymen. It may be doubted whether any agency has been more potent in the development of temperance sentiment in this country than Methodism, including its founder—that leader in the vanguard of reform—John Wesley. We belong to the apostolic succession of teetotalers and to the school of the prohibition prophets. Methodism stands for prohibition, as it stands for God, and home, and native land.

Brethren, I know—for it belongs to our best traditions, to our proudest history, to our highest song—that Southern manhood cherishes above every other institution the home; he honors before every other jewel the good name of woman, and he is the last of all the sons of men to violate by crime, or by the tricks of the law, the sanctity of marriage. But let it not seem out of place for me in such a presence to plead for the development of a more universal Christian sentiment against the increase of divorces in our country. The very existence of the Christian American home is threatened by the laxity of our divorce systems. It may be that at the present time this evil is more characteristic of certain States than of others, and of the North than of the South. It may be that a citizen of Chicago should speak with reserve on this subject. But the moral contagion of easy and numerous divorces spread from city to city, and from State to State. Like gangrene in the body physical is the spread of any social evil in the body social. Divorces are increasing more rapidly in the United States than in any other country. Divorces are increasing in their ratio to marriages and population. During the past ten years the population of the country has increased 25 per cent., marriages 28 per cent., and divorces 100 per cent. Methodism is pledged by her Discipline, by her doctrines, by her history, by her hopes, to stand for the integrity of the home, and resist every encroachment made upon the sanctity of marriage.

Every person who is awake to the signs of the times acknowledges that in the labor question the church and the nation are face to face with one of the most difficult economic problems of history—a problem whose solution will test not only the stability of our free institutions, but the civilizing adequacy of our holy Christianity. There can be no doubt that the genetic force at the heart of this rapidly evolving problem is moral. Superficially, this is a problem in political economy; but in the last analysis it is a problem in manhood, fundamental in sociology, in government, in Christian evangelization. It is not difficult to find the influences that must wear the blame or glory for the uprising and self-assertion of golden-palmed, sweet-jeweled American industry. If there be any blame, the very genius of our free institutions is to blame, our common schools are to blame, the enlightening, educating power of the press is to blame, the growth of our common manhood is to blame, and, in a very large measure, Methodism is to blame. Yes, Methodism is to blame—that Methodism which went to the colliers of Kingswood, the sinners of Cornwall, and the potters of Wedgewood, to the brawny tollers felling the forests and throwing up the highways, to the swarthy sailors of the seas, to the mechanics of the workshop and spinners in the busy mills, and, in England and America, with its educating and ennobling power, has proven to be a pillar of cloud and fire to the advancing hosts of the sons of toil. But are the times so changing that struggling industry no longer feels the warm sympathy of the church of Christ? Is Methodism losing its spiritual hold on the poor? Have the workingmen and women become alienated from our communion? Is there any justification for the charge that the churches court wealth and snub poverty, look up deferringly to capital, and look down disparagingly or condescendingly on toil? If so, it was not always true. I am aware that Wesley and Whitefield, like their divine Master, attracted to their ministry many of the learned and wealthy; but the divinity of their ministry, like that of their Lord's, was demonstrated by the fact that the poor had the gospel preached unto them. It was once the glory of Methodism that it was the poor man's church. Gray sang of "The short and simple annals of the poor." If I were a poet, I should study the best history of the church of God, array the names of the great in the religious progress of the world, and then sing of "The long and glorious annals of the poor."

I'd sing of John, the fisherman, and Paul, the maker of tents; of Luther, the son of a miner, and Bunyan, the tinker of Bedford; of Carey, the English cobbler, and Livingston, the spinner of Blantyre. Yes, I'd sing, too, of Clarke, the son of the cotter, and Asbury, the humble mechanic; of Emory, the carpenter, and Strawbridge, the brawny backwoodsman; of Abbott, the butler's apprentice; of Kavanaugh, the printer, and Morris, the clerk; of the pump-maker Bascom, the farmer-boy Hedding, the poor orphaned Simpson, and the artisan's son, the silver-tongued Jones. Surely from the homes of obscurity and the sturdy loins of the toiling poor have come not a few of those great souls who ornament the history of the church. And if Methodism to-day can boast of wealth, social refinement, culture and learning, these belong to a generation that have sprung from the humble. However aristocratic Methodism may assume in some quarters to be to-day, it certainly has not an aristocratic ancestry. If there is a proof possible that Christianity is a saving, refining, educational, uplifting power in human life, that proof is found in the history of Methodism where the gospel has been preached to the poor for their salvation, their refinement, their moral, mental and social uplift.

Are we losing the wisdom of our fathers? Are we neglecting the poor? Is our message only to the rich and the cultured? Do we think that the power of the church resides in wealth, refinement, social station, and culture alone, and not also in the hard palm of meanly toil, in the modest virtues of humble life, in the integrity and devotion of our common manhood, and in the fervent, effectual prayer of the righteous poor? There is no Christ in a religion that neglects the poor; there is no divine life in a church that turns its back upon the laborer. The living church of Christ must come to the poor, the struggling, the sorrowing, or Christ's kingdom can make no progress, his cross can make no conquests. The rich and educated and influential and benevolent of the future will be the children and grandchildren of the converted toiling poor to-day. A church without the poor is a church without a future. The church that stands sympathetically near the home and the workshop, and gives a heart of courage to the honest man of toil, will dominate the coming age. It was one of the conspicuous evils of Israel's decline that the wealthy oppressed the hireling in his wages. It was one of the crimes of the best civilization of Greece and of Rome that the laborer was despised, and the workshop was looked upon as a place of inferiority. But, thanks to the gospel of the divine Carpenter! a better sociology has dawned. And it is for the church to preserve the humane element of the new ethics, and to impress the rising generation with the dignity of labor, the Christian manliness of faithful industry. It is also the duty of the church to so guard the interests of home and manhood as that the hireling shall not be oppressed in his wages, nor so ground down by excessive toil as to find no time for personal improvement in mind and heart. It is the mission of the church of God to protest when wealth becomes so greedy, ambitious and tyrannical as to treat labor as a mere commodity and the laborer as a soulless machine. It is just as undeniably the duty of the church to warn labor of the dangers of socialism, the ruinous expense of strikes, the crime of the interference of organizations with the personal liberty of the individual, and the damnable treason of the doctrine of anarchy.

Brethren, you are certainly too brave and manly in your own thoughts and utterances to suppose that I could be silent on this sad and pathetic race problem. You know too well the attitude of the Methodist Episcopal Church toward the negro for me to attempt an analysis of the situation. I am not ignorant, brethren, of the fact that the colored people of the South are indebted to your fathers for their Christianity, and for their Methodism. Sir, the time is not too remote, nor will it ever be for the church to remember the days when Andrew, and Massey, Honour, Capers, Dougherty, McKendree and Ashury were foremost in zeal for the evangelization of the negro. And knowing the devotion of my own grandmother to the religious training of her servants, I can not, for a moment, believe that there was any other than the very spirit of Jesus Christ in the efforts of those godly men to Christianize the negro. But the time came when your altars were in ashes. Think not, my brethren, that your people alone wept over the desolation of your beautiful Zion. But out of the crimson dust came forth again this mighty Southern Methodism, and the growth of your church since 1865 is one of the marvels of history. Do us not the injustice to suppose that your people alone look with wonder and gratitude upon your last twenty-five years of magnificent development. There came a time when the Methodist Episcopal Church owed it to you, owed it to the memory of your fathers, owed it to the country, owed it to the negro, owed it to posterity, owed it to the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ to assist in the religious and intellectual training of the colored people of the South. We have looked upon this difficult problem of the education and evangelization of the negroes, not as a local problem, not as a Southern problem, but as an American problem—nay, as a problem of civilization. It may be a false philosophy, but we have proceeded on the assumption, and still do, that, whatever may be the social, or the ethical elements entering into the problem, if the church of Christ, if our united Methodism can only in the providence of God solve the moral, the spiritual, the educational parts of the problem, the other parts will solve themselves. I know the hearts of our laymen who are contributing to the support of the Freedmen's Aid Society. I knew that rarely, very rarely, is a benevolence prompted by a political prejudice. I am safe in saying that with our people their freedmen's aid contributions are as unpolitical and as disinterestedly benevolent in origin and in aim as their missionary or church extension contributions. Some of our noble-hearted, finest-brained men and women are giving themselves to this educational work among the negroes, and with most encouraging success. They are leaving the best pulpits and most promising professorships in the North, not to come into your midst and boorishly strut about with the chip of impudent challenge on their shoulder, but to put their shoulder side by side with yours beneath the burdening problem that oppresses the whole land, and to lift the heavy night from the soul of a race. Our prayers are with them. Our money must back their devotion. Your sympathy will multiply their power. Sir, when Dr. Steel affirmed with an eloquent sincerity, "We believe as firmly as you do, that the negro is a man, a redeemed man, a freeman, and is entitled to all that manhood confers," the splendid sentence and noble truths were greeted with the enthusiasm which they deserved. Remembering those words, the charm and music of them, O Methodists of our great and free America, may we not join hands, and hearts, and brains, and prayers in as great a work as saving India, in as great a work as evangelizing China, in as great a work as Christianizing Japan, in the work of the most thorough spiritual regeneration and most liberal education of the colored people of the United States? Were you not men of a ripe wisdom, men bred to the most generous courtesies of debate, men as true to the promptings of the Divine Spirit as those I represent, I might ask for your indulgence in thus expressing my personal feelings and the attitude of the Methodist Episcopal Church toward this great problem.

I have already taxed your courteous patience and can only emphasize by a word the importance of what we may call the problem of foreignism. It involves the question of the existence of the common-school system, of the preservation of the Christian Sabbath, of the dangerous power of great cities, of the integrity of labor, of the security of capital, of the political domination of Romanism. It goes without the saying that the purest Americanism is in the South. But the marvelous industrial developments of the South will soon fill your cities with foreign population. And one of the serious questions, universal, national in its importance, is this: "How shall we make a homogeneous body politic out of our heterogeneous population? The common school is doubtless the greatest secular factor in the solution of this problem. But the spirit of foreignism is attacking the common-school system. And Romanism, foreign in genius and method, is joining every other form of foreignism to close the common school and obtain public moneys for the support of sectarian education. There is a purpose on the part of certain alien-spirited citizens to foreignize the very language in which United States history is to be taught to the coming generation. But a vigorous Americanism is asserting itself and demanding that the common school shall stand unfettered by any sectarian restrictions, unembarrassed by any denominational interference. This Americanism, broader than any mere Northernism or Southernism, is also demanding that the Sabbath of Paris, or of Berlin, shall not be substituted for the quiet, peaceful and holy American Sabbath, the Sabbath of the best Puritans and the best Huguenots. And this Americanism is also protesting in no uncertain tones against the political intrigues of the Romish hierarchy and the cunning attempt of an Italian citizen to make the Mississippi a tributary of the Tiber. Free conscience, free speech, free press, free schools, free church, free ballot, free men—these are the priceless jewels of a free State, and these are the gifts of a free gospel. It becomes us as Methodists, as five million of Methodists, to stand strong, firm, united, invincible, against the tide of godless, Sabbath-breaking foreignism, and against the political ambitions of undemocratic, un-American, unrighteous Romanism.

These, it would seem to me, are some of the most pressing problems of this age, and in their attempted solution we may unite our energies and push toward the better understanding and the conquering power of Methodist unity. Methodist unity means Methodist might.

"I am not to fight the battles of my fathers, but of my boys. I am not to vindicate the yesterdays, but to emancipate the to-morrows. The past is dead, the future is to live. I may send myself on, but never back. Standing on the summit of this hour, give me nerve for the next." This is the language of that great Methodism whose outlook is toward the sun risings and the destinies. Hail, Sister Methodism of the South, crowned with your million stars! Hail, royal priesthood, whose feet are beautiful upon the mountains! Hail, fathers of a noble line whose descending mantles still are charged with power! Hail, spirit of fraternity, as we have sat with discord in sackcloth, let us walk with thee in white! I bring you, dear brethren, the blessing of our people; you have the blessings of our God.

At the conclusion of Dr. Bristol's address, Bishop Keener responded as follows:

I have not forgotten that we were—

"One people in our early prime,
One in our stormy youth,
Drinking one stream of human thought,
One spring of heavenly truth;
One in our earliest home on earth,
One in our heavenly home—
We'll fight the battles of our Lord,
Until his kingdom come."

You are ahead of us, sir, in a great many things; but in some things I believe we are before you. This great problem of deaconesses, etc., we have long since solved. Our church is full of deaconesses. We found an easy route for making them; we simply marry a deaconess to a deacon, and it is done. (Great applause and laughter.)

Dear brother, I think we got ahead of you on the great matter of temperance. I know that you drink spruce beer, but we drink it unfermented. It has been found out that all fermentation is an abomination according to Pasteur. We go to the bottom: we employ the Pasteur filter, which filters out the microbes. We drink the purest water in the world, and it is the assurance and the insurance of an entire deliverance from everything connected with the fermentation.

Now as to fraternity: Ah, my brethren, mighty ashes sleep in the North and sleep in the South, awaiting the resurrection morn. And when that trump sounds, there will be a true fraternity. We are willing to wait till then. So far as concerns those that are gone, I shall not tear down the Vendome Column, as the Communists did to their own eternal shame. I will let the column stand. We have a hearty, good feeling, a brotherly feeling, a spiritual feeling, but it takes the grace of God to have it. (Applause and laughter.)

It is well for us that the apostle says that we have grace and more grace. Now, sir, there are other great points in which you are ahead of us; you certainly are in your missionary movements. We look at you, sir, with admiration. I know you look at us with admiration. I have no doubt in the world, that the admiration of the North for the South, and the South for the North, was vastly increased by the events of the war—no doubt of it. That is good out of evil. During the war we were brethren; like Romulus and Remus, we sucked the same wolf. (Great applause and laughter.) I congratulate you and congratulate myself that we are all wonned. (Applause.) I want no more of that for a long time. Now let us sing Hymn 733:

"All praise to our redeeming Lord,
Who joins us by his grace."

Gov. Pattison's address followed, which, like Dr. Bristol's, was read from manuscript. Bishop Keener made the following response, which was received with great demonstration of laughter and applause:

Dear Brother: We believe you are a sincere man, and you have struck a true chord, sir. We want nothing but deep Christian sincerity to bring all our differences together, in so far as they need to be softened and neutralized. It can only be done through the blessed Savior. It can only be done through that divine antagonism to sin which God gives to us. On that great battlefield we are one. We have the same harness, we have the same standard, we have the same hope of victory. Never mind the division, never mind whether one moves forward and marches under the standard of the lion, and another under the standard of the eagle. Even Israel had her banners and her clans. Never mind, we are following the same mark: we move along in parallel lines; we attack the same foe, and when victory is gained at one end of the column it will be heard in its shout and pean at the other. (Applause.)

We have had very great pleasure, sir, in hearing both you and your distinguished colleague; very great, indeed, and we are very hearty in expression. We mean all we say, and, sir, I believe, as I have said, that we can stand up and look at each other and admire each other, and if we were melted together we should have no audience. There are very mysterious forces at work in the South, the attraction of cohesion reducing all to solidity, so that they speak of the "Solid South," I declare to you I can not analyze it. You sit off and wonder at it, and look at us as we sit off and look at the Pension Bureau, and can't get in. (Great applause and laughter.) I have but a word to say, lest there might be some misunderstanding upon a great question of a great problem. I have my own way of solving it after very long acquaintance with the elements necessary to its solution. I may say, sir, in the first place, that be well assured, we are spending more money in the South for common schools in proportion to our property than you are in the North, and I speak by the census, and know what I say. And be assured that we are spending $4,000,000 a year for the education of this brother in black of whom you have heard. Now, we are very glad to see the help that is coming, but it is a mere nothing as compared with what we are doing. Who pays these four million dollars? Who constitutes the great body of the people of the South? Why, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. (Laughter and applause.) We are doing a great deal—in fact, I won't say we are doing too much; but our own children, sir, are at school but a very small part of the year. We do for others—those who pay no taxes—what you good friends are praying, and wishing and wondering is not done. It is done. We have a good record there, a very fine record. We have a good conscience. (Laughter and applause.) I just mention this lest there might be some misunderstanding. As a church we have done a vast amount for the colored man. I preached for twenty years every Sunday afternoon to a colored congregation, and had in my care a great part of that time two thousand negroes. I know what I am talking about. We did a magnificent work. We do not allow anybody to undervalue it. There it stands. There it is, speaking for itself. We have had the care of these wards, or whatever you might please to call them, for a great while; we raised them up from Dahomey to where they are. We have 250,000 of them under our care, and they came from Africa. I do not know what they were when they came, but when we got through with them they were Bishops and Senators. (Great applause and laughter.) And if you are educating a people, you can not be expected to educate them forever and ever and ever. As with the missionaries in the Sandwich Islands, when their work is done let them retire. We have done our work grandly, conscientiously, and we have now a solidly white church, for which we thank God. (Applause.) We have four or five hundred colored people, sextons generally (Laughter), who have joined out of compliment to us; but then we have alongside of us, as you heard to-day, a grand body of men united to us, who are running along upon parallel lines—our own colored people—and we have solved that problem as far as the church is concerned. Do not let anybody deceive you; there is nothing to be done. Do not send down to the waste and neglected places, as if nothing had been done. It is all a mistake, sir. There are 25,000 public schools for the colored people, and of this number 15,800 are taught by colored teachers. What tremendous work that is. No sir, these people have graduated; they have gone off to themselves, and God is with them. I just mention this for your encouragement. You live a little beyond the border, and it is hard to get news exactly true, but I am in a position to convey the truth. (Great applause and laughter.)

I repeat, sir, that we are glad to have had you with us, and we hope when you go back home you will carry a good report from this land. There are two of you, and you can carry the bunch of grapes between you. As of old, but two had faith.

After singing the doxology, Rev. F. M. Bristol pronounced the benediction, and the audience was dismissed.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is a peculiar medicine. It is carefully prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Pipsissewa, Juniper Berries, and other well-known and valuable vegetable remedies, by a peculiar combination, proportion and process, giving to Hood's Sarsaparilla curative power not possessed by other medicines. It effects remarkable cures where other preparations fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best blood purifier before the public. It eradicates every impurity, and cures Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Boils, Pimples, all Humors, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, General Debility, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Kidney and Liver Complaints, overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, and builds up the system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Has met peculiar and unparalleled success at home. Such has become its popularity in Lowell, Mass., where it is made, that whole neighborhoods are taking it at the same time. Lowell druggists sell more of Hood's Sarsaparilla than of all other sarsaparillas or blood purifiers. Sold by druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. MANY A LIFE

HAS been saved by the prompt use of Ayer's Pills. Travelers by land or sea are liable to constipation or other derangements of the stomach and bowels which, if neglected, lead to serious and often fatal consequences. The most sure means of correcting these evils is the use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills. The prudent sailing-master would as soon go to sea without his chronometer as without a supply of these Pills. Though prompt and energetic in operation, Ayer's Pills leave no ill effects; they are purely vegetable and sugar-coated; the safest medicine for old and young, at home or abroad.

"For eight years I was afflicted with constipation, which at last became so bad that the doctors could do no more for me. Then I began to take Ayer's Pills, and soon the bowels recovered their natural and regular action, so that now I am in health."—Mrs. C. E. Clark, Tewksbury, Massachusetts.

"I regard Ayer's Pills as one of the most reliable general remedies of our times. They have been in use in my family for affections requiring a purgative, and have given unvarying satisfaction. We have found them an excellent remedy for colds and light fevers."—W. R. Woolson, Fort Worth, Texas.

"For several years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than upon anything else in the medicine chest, to regulate my bowels and those of the ship's crew. These Pills are not severe in their action, but do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect for the cure of rheumatism, kidney troubles, and dyspepsia."—Capt. Mueller, Steamship Fellcia, New York City.

"I have found Ayer's Cathartic Pills to be a better family medicine for common use than any other pills within my knowledge. They are not only very effective, but safe and pleasant to take—qualities which must make them valued by the public."—Jules Hamel, Perfumer, Philadelphia, Pa.

Editorial Correspondence.

When you sit in Conference from 9 A. M. until 1:30 P. M., and then work in a committee meeting from 3:30 P. M. until 6 P. M., and then attend a Board meeting which lasts from eight until 10 P. M., you do not feel much like writing an article for a newspaper. The above has been the regular routine for the past week. The seventh day revealed the fact that the brethren were on the watch and ready to tackle anything that made its appearance. A report of the Committee on Publishing Interests, in regard to Sunday-school publications, brought various guns to bear, and so vigorous was the firing that the friends of the report succeeded in having it retired in good order to the Committee on Sunday-schools. The main point in the discussion seemed to be the difficulty or easiness of writing a Catechism. Bishop Keener gave the Conference to understand that the college of Bishops had tried to accomplish that work and had—not yet done it.

The Conference received fraternal greetings by letter from the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, of Baton Rouge, being the bearer; and also greetings by telegraph from the Southern Baptist Convention assembled at Fort Worth, Texas.

The Committee on Education reported in favor of a General Board of Education, similar in form and constitution to the other General Boards of the church.

The evening session was devoted to hearing the fraternal messengers from the Methodist Episcopal Church—Rev. F. M. Bristol, of the Rock River Conference, and ex-Governor Pattison, of Pennsylvania. Dr. Bristol is quite a youthful looking man, but his address seemed to reach the popular ear. It was a most fluent address, touching upon almost everything under the sun with which a church has had or can have anything to do. The address of Gov. Pattison was quite the opposite, being a sober statement of the salient points in Methodism and its history. Both addresses were read. Bishop Keener's reply was the most felicitous thing we have heard in many a day. Thus ended the seventh day.

The first thing after reading the Minutes on the eighth day was the adoption of the report of the Finance Committee authorizing the treasurer of the Conference Fund to pay the actual traveling expenses of each delegate. So if the money holds out, the delegates will have their expenses paid, which is something new; it having never been done before. The most important matter acted upon to-day was the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That a commission consisting of three persons be appointed by the college of Bishops to revise chapters seven and eight of the Discipline, relating to trials and appeals, and that said commission be authorized to make such changes in said chapters as they may deem advisable and report the result of their labor to the General Conference of 1894.

Resolved, That all the papers which have been presented to this General Conference, looking to changes in the before-mentioned chapters, be preserved by the secretary and placed in the hands of the commission.

Resolved, That the Book Agent be directed to print 350 copies of the completed work of the aforesaid commission, for the use of the General Conference of 1894.

Friday, the ninth day, was no less a busy day than any other. Memorials and resolutions did not come in as fast, but more reports of committees were considered. A committee of fifteen, to be appointed by the chair, was ordered to formulate for publication in the appendix of the Discipline a deliverance of the church on the subject of amusements. The Conference adopted a resolution inviting the second Methodist Ecumenical Conference to convene in the United States in 1891, to hold its session in Nashville, Tenn. To-morrow I go to visit an old friend and college-mate who resides somewhere near the rim of this great city. I expect to spend the Sabbath with him and his family, and talk over old school days, and then return in time to participate in the election of two new Bishops; the Conference to-day having ordered the election of two men for that office, and made the election the order of the day for Monday, at ten A. M.

As it is now past eleven P. M., and the flesh is weak and weary, I say, Good-night! C. W. C.

ST. LOUIS, May 16.

Saturday found the members of the body filling their places and ready for action. A good deal of preliminary business seems to be an absolute necessity before the members settle down to the day's work. To-day a part of Report No. 1. of the Committee on Revisal, which had been passed, was reconsidered and debated at considerable length by Binkley and Morrison for the report, and Sullivan and others against. The question was, whether the law should be changed so as to give the presiding elder the authority to nominate the district steward. The committee had reported in favor of the change, and the Conference adopted the report.

The Committee on Colportage brought in a report favorable to the introduction of a new section in the Discipline on the subject of colportage, empowering each Annual Conference to organize a Conference Board of Colportage. Whereunto will this thing of having a Conference Board for every department of church work grow?

The tobacco question came up again in the form of a preamble and resolutions, and there were evident signs of a stirring time when some brother moved an "indefinite postponement," which was carried, and the storm passed around over on the other side. The question of authorizing the unordained preacher to administer the sacraments has been settled by this body in favor of the present law and practice on that subject. The vote on the subject of deaconesses showed that our church is not yet ready for that departure. Thus ended Saturday, the tenth day of the session.

I had the great pleasure of spending the Sabbath with my old school-mates, Dr. James E. Gibson and wife. In the old log school-house on the bank of the Tensas river, under the guiding hand of Gen. Francis A. F. Harper, Miss Ellen D. King and myself plodded through the "ordinary branches of an English education," and for three years James E. Gibson and myself learned Greek roots and Latin endings and tried to master the intricacies of conic sections together at Centenary College. It was a rare treat to enjoy the hospitalities of these old and true friends. This visit to their elegant and beautifully situated home was a most agreeable episode to the wearying work of Conference routine, and I was not permitted to leave without a promise to return before the session closes.

Monday was the great day of the Conference. The order of the day was the election of two new Bishops, and the Conference-room was crowded with expectant and eager visitors. The knowing ones predicted that Dr. Haygood would be elected on the first ballot, and they prophesied correctly. The voting was done by calling the roll of Conferences, when the chairman of each delegation announced the number of ballots cast, and when all were cast the tellers counted the votes. On the first ballot 272 votes were cast, and it required 137 votes to elect. Dr. Haygood received 171 votes, and was declared elected. On the second and third ballots there was no election. On the fourth ballot Dr. Fitzgerald received 159 votes, and was declared elected. The election occupied the Conference for three hours and a half.

It is needless for me to say anything in regard to these new Bishops. Dr. Haygood has been a frequent contributor to the columns of our paper, and our readers have already recognized him as one of the foremost men in our church. For twelve years Dr. Fitzgerald has been editing the Nashville Christian Advocate, and is known far and wide through the church. Thus one question has been settled for, at least, four years.

The work will move forward more rapidly now, for the reason that after this no new business is allowed to come in. The committees are pretty well through with their work, and the Conference has only to act upon reports already brought in. The impression prevails that we will come to the end about the second or third day of next week.

C. W. C.

MONDAY, May 19.

Tuesday's session was spiced by several spirited debates. The report of the Committee on Spiritual Interests provoked an animated discussion, which was participated in by quite a number. After many motions and much parliamentary tactics, the report was adopted.

There was adopted, with a hearty enthusiasm, a ringing paper on the subject of temperance. This deliverance is couched in strong words, and its meaning is unmistakable.

The Conference, with a rising vote, passed resolutions complimentary to Dr. D. J. Waller, the British delegate. This gentlemen, by his eloquence on the platform and in the pulpit, and by his suavity and dignity in the social circle, won the esteem of everybody, and he returns to his home with the good wishes and prayers of all for his welfare.

Wednesday was another busy day. The committees having about finished their work, and no new business being allowed to be introduced, the Conference addressed itself to the consideration and passage of reports already made. A motion to reconsider the adoption of the report of the Committee on Fraternal Correspondence in regard to the overture from the Protestant Episcopal Church, sprung a lively debate. After various speeches and many motions, the report was reconsidered, but the motion to recommit was lost, whereupon the report was adopted the second time. The report of the Committee on Publishing Interests, recommending two Agents for the Book Concern, was adopted.

The evening was devoted to a general missionary mass meeting held in Centenary Church. Representatives from our foreign fields occupied the platform. Short speeches from these missionaries gave the audience a pretty good idea of the nature and extent of our work in those lands. As these men of God from other nations rehearsed the doings of God among their people, and showed that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation even in China and Japan, it sounded very much like a chapter in the Acts of the Apostles. The progress of our work in distant lands is very gratifying and produces larger hope and greater expectation for a more rapid progress in the future.

Thursday, the report of the Committee on Missions, which recommended the election of three missionary secretaries, was discussed fully and freely, and was adopted by a decided majority. Thus our church takes a very decided step forward on the missionary line. Some seem to think that this is a rather perilous experiment; but the vote was so hearty and heavy in favor of three secretaries instead of one, that it may be taken as the mind of the church on this question.

The report of the Committee on Sunday-schools, authorizing the Book Agents to establish a weekly paper of high literary and religious character for the young people of our church, elicited a warm and general discussion. It was shown that nearly all efforts made in this direction in time past by other denominations had been failures, and that while we needed some such weekly journal, we were not in a condition to make the experiment, and so the matter was indefinitely postponed.

In the evening the new Bishops were consecrated to their office and work. Bishop Keener preached the sermon from Eph. i, 3-6, after which A. G. Haygood and O. P. Fitzgerald were consecrated Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Thus ended the fourteenth day. C. W. C.

Not Elected.

To our brethren who were not elected to the first office in the gift of the church we wish to speak a few words by way of congratulation. The honors of that office they already possess, being veritable New Testament episcopoi; and now that the election is over, they can well afford to despise its toils. What temptations to pride, selfishness, ambition, luxury; the unlawful use of power, the corrupt use of patronage, lurked in that main chance which resolutely turned away from them! What a snare of Satan swept by them, perhaps, far to leeward, when the vision of an annual draft, signed by the Book Agent, resolved itself first into smoke and then into thin air! What long absences from home, what pains of palace-car solitude, what perils in the sea, of ocean steamer wrecks; what perils on the shore of railway collisions; what "perils among false brethren:" what "perils among the heathen;" what "journeyings often;" have disappeared from their gaze like retiring shoals in the wake of a prosperous voyage! What weight of obligation to preach not only big sermons, but the biggest; to have treasured up in memory not only some ecclesiastical law, but everything that has been written on that subject, together with a vast fund of precedents both recorded and unrecorded; to be a Cushing in that most mysterious of sciences that reveals when the previous question is or is not previous at the exact moment, and when a motion to lay on the table may be laid on the table without a motion; to look dignified on the most undignified occasions; and to give the best appointment to the man whom we are afraid the Lord did not intend to honor thus; is forever sunk in the mire of unsuccessful electioneering! How are they delivered, by the trifling circumstance of a few misdirected ballots, at once and forever, of personating the difficult office of a smoked herring in midnight cabinet meetings; of flying in terror on midnight trains from the tumultuous scene where every man received a good appointment but the presiding officer; of having to submit to be reviewed in the public prints in that impersonal way which succeeds so signally in saddling all the sins of the episcopal office, present and past, upon each of its living members, without reply; and of having constantly to bear about with them all that sense of grandeur which, we have sometimes imagined, must bear like another world upon the spirits of the man "up in a balloon!" And then, moreover, they never wanted the office, and have always thought each of himself as the man of all men who, under the most provoking circumstances, could smite his breast, and say, with interjectional fervor, "Nolo episcopari!"

Yes, yes, let us one and all be consoled by these remembrances and by the fact, which we can not have overlooked, that the church is the greatest loser after all. Time, it is said, rights all wrongs and extinguishes all sorrows, besides being exceedingly swift of wing; and when another quadrennium shall have swept by like a sand-storm in an Arabian desert, there will be another distribution of mantles and prizes, and until that time we are permitted to indulge the hope that we or our candidate will be unanimously elected on the first ballot.

American Bible Society.

The following resolutions were adopted by the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church at the recent session:

Whereas, The distribution of the Scriptures among the people we recognize to be a most important department of Christian work, essential to proper success in evangelizing the world.

Whereas, The American Bible Society, organized by our fathers to be the representative of the Protestant Churches in America in promoting this work, has often been endorsed by our church as an aid in this department of Christian evangelization, and as such has been and is still serving in this capacity.

Whereas, This society, according to a provision, circulates both at home and abroad only the pure Word of God without note or comment, leaving it altogether to the church and the individual to interpret; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this assembly again recognize the American Bible Society according to the constitution upon which it is organized and the principles upon which it is at present conducted as an aid of our church in the distribution of the Scriptures, and as such commend it to the confidence and support of all our people.

Resolved, That we recommend our churches to place the Bible cause among the objects of beneficence and to make an annual contribution for it, to be turned over to the auxiliary societies in their neighborhood or directly to the parent society in New York.

Resolved, That the stated clerk of the assembly be instructed to add to the blanks sent out to the stated clerks of the Presbyteries statistical tables for contribution to the Bible cause in order that our churches may be reminded of their duty, and an annual exhibit may be made of their contributions.

Resolved, That the General Assembly at each meeting appoint a standing committee on the Bible cause in our own and other lands, especially in our own church.

The modesty of the editor pro tem., Rev. J. M. Beard, forbids his mentioning that the title of "D. D." was conferred upon himself by the Illwassee College. It will be as worthily worn as it has been justly bestowed. May the shadow of our brother never grow less!—S. S. K.

The General Conference was nonconcurrent to an alarming degree. It showed its back squarely to the Protestant Episcopal memorialists for union, and it laughed in the face of the fraternal delegates of the Methodist Episcopal Church when they so far forgot the purport of their mission as to advocate union instead of fraternity. Who else wants a rich and coquettish bride?

The New Bishops.

The two men who were elected to the office of Bishop have been more prominently before the church for a decade past than any of her sons. She knows them and trusts them, and they will delight to honor her as she has thus and aforetime signally honored them. They are equally distinguished as writers and orators, and each, if it were not for the other, might be almost primus inter pares among the honored of the church in each sphere. They entered the ministry in the same Conference, resemble each other closely in their views upon all theological and political questions, both failed of an election to this General Conference, and their separate careers as servants of the church have been synchronous in many other particulars besides those mentioned here, and their election and ordination simultaneously to the chief office in the gift of the church. Dr. Haygood was once before elected to the office, but declined it for adequate reasons, and four years ago Dr. Fitzgerald received the largest vote of any candidate who failed of election. They are hard-working and energetic, as well as brilliant accessions to our episcopal college, and the church is to be congratulated upon the event of their election.

Rev. Atticus G. Haygood was born at Watkinsville, Ga., November 19, 1839. He graduated at Emory College, Oxford, Ga., in 1856. In 1870 was elected Sunday-school editor. In 1876 he was made president of Emory College, and remained there until 1884. He was also for years the successful administrator of the Slater Educational Fund.

Rev. O. P. Fitzgerald was born in Caswell county, N. C., August 24, 1820; was converted while employed on the staff of the Richmond Examiner during a severe spell of sickness; joined the Georgia Conference in 1854, and was sent to Savannah as junior preacher. Upon a call for volunteers in that (then) distant field, he went in 1855 to California, where he served with distinction as station preacher, editor, college agent, and superintendent of public instruction. In 1878 he was elected editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, the official organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, where he continued until his election and ordination as Bishop.

Notes.

The Mexican Lottery blind deceives nobody.

The man who enjoys religion does not enjoy controversy.

The man who listens to an argument will not listen to a bribe.

If the Methodists hold Louisiana, they must build churches.

Tell your neighbors what great things the Lord has done for you.

Perhaps Gov. Nicholls "came to the kingdom for such a time as this."

The single-tax advocates seem to be people of one idea, but many words.

The United States will give millions for levee defense, but not a cent for lottery tribute.

The New Delta, from present appearances, will prove a good campaigner. "A little more grape, Mr. Bragg."

The church that does not hold, at least, one revival service during the year is not bothering Satan much.

Let the patriotic thirty-eight stand firm and earn for themselves and their applauding fellow-countrymen what money could never buy.

Man was made for variety; let him stay in one place and commune with the same objects from year to year and he will inevitably diminish in soul power.

Why can not somebody get up a public lottery meeting in New Orleans? An orator who could discourse an hour on the virtues of that corporation would be worth hearing.

What a friend the preacher has in the ADVOCATE! It pleads for him at every hearthstone, and when he is silent it lifts an eloquent voice and discourses to his scattered flock.

If we could only convert Joseph Cook, the negro politician, into Joseph Cook, the African missionary, for once "the wrath of man would be caused to praise the Almighty." In comparison with Cook, Wendell Phillips was "child-like and bland."

The more we reflect upon the subject, the more are we convinced that the gospel was made for the human voice. Who was ever successful in reading one of Whitefield's sermons through without ennui? and is there a duller book than the latest volume of sermons by the pulpit celebrity?

Some one quotes Bishop Seabury (with a view to influence sentiment in favor of the Lottery) as thanking God for a winning ticket in a lottery, in continental times. Why, bless you! in that age the clergy of the church to which this prelate belonged were hardly quotable on the law and order side of any question.

Personal and Otherwise.

The names of those legislators who oppose the demands of the Lottery will make a roll of honor that will be read with applause from sea to sea and from the gulf to the lakes.

Bro. J. W. Malone writes that Minter City and Strathmore station has just forwarded $66 50 for Oxford Church, in addition to $5 previously contributed.

Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D., will preach the commencement sermon at Centenary College on Sunday, June 1. Wednesday thereafter will be commencement day.

The ADVOCATE has received the report of the treasurer of Louisiana State University and A. and M. College.

The ADVOCATE has received an invitation to attend the fifth annual commencement of Centenary College, Cleveland, Tenn. Bishop C. B. Galloway will preach the commencement sermon, June 1, at eleven A. M. Rev. J. A. Richardson will deliver a sermon to the Y. W. C. A. on the evening of the same day, and Gov. R. L. Taylor an address before the Literary Society, June 4, at ten A. M.

The Epworth Herald, New York, has been received at this office. It is a new journal in the interest of the Epworth League, a young people's society in the Methodist Episcopal Church. It is ably edited by Dr. Berry, and will be a success in its line.

Rev. A. W. Mangum, D. D., of the North Carolina Conference, and professor of moral and mental science in the University of North Carolina, died May 12. Dr. Mangum was one of our strong men, and his death will be a subject of lament throughout the entire church.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. N. J. Roberts writes of Utica charge, Mississippi Conference, as follows: "We had a good day yesterday. Children's Day at Cayuga Church; collected $8 40. We are moving on nicely. The revival influence is being felt all over the circuit; some applicants for membership at nearly every service. I send you four names for the ADVOCATE—two new subscribers."

—Rev. R. M. Bloeker reports from Plaquemine Brulee, La., May 15, 1890: "Our quarterly meeting at this place, last Saturday and Sunday, was largely attended. Presiding Elder Miller did fine preaching, and his sermon on Sunday, at 11 A. M., contained a clause against the Louisiana Lottery that ranks with the best I have heard on the subject. We have many strong friends who stand up against this monster evil. Yet there are lottery advocates in all this parish. Bro. Carter and I have our hands and hearts full, and are overrun with work."

—Rev. J. H. Evans, writing from Williamsburg, Miss., says: "We are through with our second Quarterly Conference, which was held May 17 and 18, 1890. The presiding elder was not with us. The Confereuce was well represented. We had 13 officials and 3 itinerant preachers—Rev. M. H. Moore, G. D. Anders, N. B. Young—and we had a good sermon out of each of them. We were disappointed on account of the absence of the presiding elder. We had a good meeting. Sacrament on Sunday at eleven o'clock, with a number of communicants that partook of the emblems while they were praising God."

—Rev. J. H. Callaway writes from Eden, La.: "I send you a postal card report of our meeting at Trout Creek Church in Bro. Phineas Whatley's neigborhood. We started the meeting Friday night, and closed Sunday night amid shouts of victory. One brother—E. G. Whatley—told me it was the best meeting that was ever at Trout Creek Church since it has been a church. Some say we had the largest congregation that was ever at the place. About 200 people, I suppose, attended on Sunday. Praise the Lord! We had five services, and a good time every service during the meeting. Received four into the church, baptized six children; received some money. We are so glad the people were stirred so. God bless the dear people here!—especially Bro. Samuel Whatley, who is afflicted with heart disease. I am preaching holiness straight, all the way through."

Missionary Notice.

READ.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conferonce will convene in Senatobia (instead of West Point), on Saturday, June 28, 1890, at seven A. M.

All auxiliaries and juvenile societies are earnestly requested to send delegates to this meeting. All societies sending delegates should notify the corresponding secretary of Senatobia Auxiliary (Mrs. R. F. Porter) at once, so homes can be given them.

The brethren and all friends of our work are cordially invited to attend our meeting.

MRS. W. H. WALL,
Rec'g Sec'y W. M. S., North Miss. Con.

Revival at Houston, Miss.

We have just closed a meeting of wonderful power. The services began two weeks ago and continued twelve days without any abatement of interest. Congregations were large and increased to the close. The church was most powerfully revived and Christians of all denominations were put upon a higher spiritual plane. A great many cold church members were reclaimed and began anew to work for God, and many sinners professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. The preaching was attended with power at every service and the church worked faithfully. There were 50 accessions, and a number of students expressed a determination to join the church immediately after going home. Thirty-six joined the Methodist Church. Only 6 out of the 49 joining the different churches were students from abroad, and hence we reasonably expect a number of accessions from this class. This was a great meeting, and eternity alone will reveal the good done. The singing was conducted by Rev. J. R. Roberson, and was most excellent.

It would pay any of our brethren to secure the services of Bro. Roberson to assist them in their protracted meetings. We were assisted also at different times by Rev. Amos Kendall P. E.; Rev. R. A. Burroughs, Rev. W. D. Bass and Rev. T. J. Lowry, and all did faithful and efficient work. We thank these brethren. We give God all the glory.

HESLEP R. TUCKER, P. C.
HOUSTON, Miss., May 19, 1890.

P. S.—The meeting has been transferred to the Presbyterian Church, and may continue some days.

The National Temperance Congress.

Circulars will be ready for distribution June 1, in which will be given full particulars as to railway and hotel reductions to persons attending the National Temperance Congress, to meet in New York, June 11 and 12. These circulars will also give the programme for the sessions of the Congress. For copies of the circular address the secretary of the committee, Joseph A. Bogardus, 167 Chambers St., New York.

The programme will open at 10 o'clock, June 11, with an address by Gen. Neal Dow on "State and National Prohibition," to be followed by Robert Graham, the secretary of the Church Temperance Society. On all questions like the above, over which there is controversy among temperance men, the rule adopted by the committee is to permit a representative of either side to open the question, and then these addresses to be followed by five minutes' "talks."

Among those who have already agreed to participate in the Congress are ex-Pres. McCosh, of Princeton; Joseph Cook; Gen. Greene Clay Smith, of Kentucky; Gen. Palmer, of Pennsylvania; Judge Bonney, of Chicago; Judge Noah Davis, Col. Cheves, Mary A. Hunt, N. S. Davis, M. D., of Chicago; Howard Crosby; the Silver Lake Quartette; Eugene Clapp, of Boston, and a host of others representing every shade of temperance opinion. All persons opposed to the saloon will be welcome.

Revival at Byhalia.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed one of the most successful meetings ever held in North Mississippi. We began a union meeting in the Methodist Church on Sunday, April 20, and continued for ten days; the different pastors alternating in holding service. On the tenth day we were reinforced by Bro. Joe J. Jones and singer, and then on three times a day for eight days we had the grandest revival I was ever in. More than fifty persons were brought to Christ and united with the different churches. All ages from twelve to eighty and all classes were converted. It is the general verdict in Byhalia that Bro. Jones is a true man of God. Not vulgar and rough, as some have said; but a bold, courageous, faithful minister of Christ, dividing the Word, giving each his portion in due season. Our people—both saints and sinners—unite in thanks to the Almighty Disposer of events for sending Bro. Jones to our midst.

The meeting closed on Tuesday night, and while the choir sang, "God be with you till we meet again," numbers, with streaming eyes, bade adieu to Bro. Jones and his sweet-spirited wife. To God be all the praise!

Invaluable to Clergymen of All Denominations—New Evangelical Work.

The Statistical Bureau of Religious Information was organized in the year 1880, and is principally devoted to a plan of obtaining the most accurate facts, in the most practical manner, as to the moral and spiritual condition of the people both of city and country in the interest of a larger church and Sunday-school attendance. This new evangelical work is the outcome of a plan suggested by the late Henry Ward Beecher. Its present efficiency has grown out of the experience of communities here and abroad in which it has been tested with the most fruitful results. The adoption thereof will enable the church both of city and country to enter every avenue of usefulness and make her presence felt in all grades of society.

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has made a name and record in the past fifty years that is enviable. Thousands of people having tried it for coughs, colds, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis and consumption know its value, and would not be without it. Why? Because it cures where other remedies fail. We recommend it for children subject to croup and whooping-cough. It will give relief and cause speedy cure. The medical profession recognize it, and physicians frequently prescribe it for lung troubles. These facts have pushed Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar to the front rank. It is the best remedy for coughs, colds, all throat and lung affections, and no family should be without it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

Life of Bishop Simpson,
OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.
BY GEO. R. CROOKS, D. D.
The early years of Simpson's life are described in a modest and charming style by the Bishop himself. It was fortunate that he was led to do this. Otherwise much that he has written of his boyhood days would have been lost, and we should have missed some very entertaining chapters. The story of how this awkward, bashful young man finally made his way to the topmost round of pulpit fame is a captivating one. His autobiography shows in how unpromising the beginnings were; but for his successes we must depend on the full and glowing descriptions which his diligent biographer has gathered from various sources and woven together with true literary and dramatic skill.

Parsonage Extension in New Orleans.

MR. EDITOR: For the encouragement of our co-laborers in other districts, and all who are in sympathy with the work known as "Woman's Department of Church Extension," and at the same time, hoping to engage the interest of those who have not heretofore given the subject much thought, we would like to make known through the ADVOCATE what we have done, under the blessing of God, for the parsonage cause in the New Orleans district. Since March 1, last, we have organized parsonage societies in the following named churches: Rayne Memorial Church—members, twenty; Carondelet Street Church—members, fifteen; Felicity Street Church—members, fifty-eight; Moreau Street Church—members, fourteen; Parker Chapel—members, fifteen; Dryades Street Church—members, thirty; Carrollton Church—members, fourteen; Crsps Street Church—members, thirteen; Algiers Church—members, sixteen; Gretna Church—members, nine—making in all ten societies. It is in no spirit of boasting that we make this statement, but with a feeling of humble thankfulness to our blessed Master that he has crowned and blessed our labors thus far.

While the Woman's Department of Church Extension is comparatively a new enterprise, its object is very generally known to those who are readers of our church papers. And the summary of the last two years' work shows that it is no longer an experiment, but an established work of the church.

Because of circumstances over which the church had no control, this work in the Louisiana Conference has fallen behind that of other Conferences of the Southern Church; but now we have the opportunity of showing what we are willing to do. And we trust that every true-hearted Methodist will rally to the work.

One church may not be able to accomplish great things; but a combined effort will produce a result that we, as a Conference, need not be ashamed of.

It only remains for us to say whether we will unite our efforts with those of our sister Conferences in advancing this cause to a grand and glorious success, or sit idly by and see them carry forward the good work, and receive the just reward of their labors, the great blessing which surely comes of doing unto others as we would have them do unto us.

Remember the words of our dear Lord and Savior: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." SALLIE L. KING,

Cont. Sec., Woman's Dept. of Church Ex.

Hiwassee College.

MR. EDITOR: I write from this well-known seat of learning to inform you that the past year has been one of great success in the administration of this institution. A full school has been in attendance, and six young men have been graduated this commencement. Several handsome donations have been made to the college property, the principal one being that of E. W. Marsh, of Atlanta, Ga., who purchased for us eighty acres of beautiful land adjoining the old grounds. This will afford an opportunity for persons desiring to build near the college to obtain lots on a lease-hold that may be improved and transferred to others, or sold back to the college. A large new building was erected last year, and the facilities for boarding and instruction are constantly increasing.

In the reorganization to-day Dr. F. M. Grace was added to the faculty, and will at once enter upon his new duties with the consent of the church authorities in Louisiana.

Rev. C. A. Hyland, of your city, will deliver the alumni address to-night.

The degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon Rev. James M. Beard, of Rayne Memorial Church, New Orleans.

Dr. Brunner remains at the head of the college, and in due season will send you his annual announcement.

Yours truly, CORRESPONDENT.

Seashore District Conference.

Pursuant to announcement, the Seashore District Conference met in Pearlington, Miss., May 9, 1890, with about fifty per cent. of the members present. After reading a short lesson from the Word of God, singing and prayer, the Conference was called to order at 9 o'clock, A. M., by the presiding elder, Bro. T. W. Cooper. Bro. T. W. Adams was elected secretary of the Conference. The first day's session was occupied in receiving reports from the preachers relative to the spiritual condition of their respective charges. Some gave flattering reports, others encouraging, but not so flattering, while others reported their work as not measuring up to a very high standard in the divine life. Taken as a whole though, the district is in a fair spiritual condition and steadily moving upward. To say that the Conference was a grand thing from beginning to ending would be faintly describing it. The business of it was transacted with caution, system and dispatch. Bro. Cooper filled the chair with an ease and dignity that would do honor to those who have been working in the presiding elder's harness for years, and with his suavity drew all hearts to him. The pulpit was filled, from time to time, by Rev. D. L. Mitchel, business manager of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE; Dr. J. W. Harmon, of Ocean Springs; Miss.; Rev. George D. Anders, of Hattiesburg, and Rev. J. H. Holland, of Whittington circuit, and the presiding elder. The preaching of these brethren was according to the gospel of the Son of God, and was accompanied by his Holy Spirit, his two-edged sword cutting its way into the hearts of the hearers, bringing joy and gladness to the Christian, and stamping conviction upon the heart of the sinner. It was remarked by many that it surpassed any District Conference they had ever attended, and even several old veterans, who had been in the heat of the battle over forty years, said that they "never before saw it on this wise.", in a word, our District Conference was a "season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

I can not think of closing this article, Mr. Editor, without slipping in a word of commendation for the good people of Pearlington. They are proverbial for their religious principles, hospitality and good looks. Never was a set of preachers and delegates more royally entertained than those of the Seashore District Conference by the kind people of Pearlington, Miss.; and may everyone of them continue to enjoy religion, die happy, and go home to glory at last! is the prayer of

G. R. ELLIS.

The following resolutions were passed unanimously by the Seashore District Conference:

Whereas, The Louisiana Lottery business is now prominently before the public in the State of Louisiana seeking an extension of its franchise; And, whereas, We regard it as a great iniquity, and a great burthen upon our country; And, whereas, We regard the war now being waged upon it by the good people of the State of Louisiana as a righteous one, calling forth our sympathies and helpful efforts to give it success; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the brave and noble men and women of Louisiana in their unremitting efforts to suppress this monster evil, and give them assurance that our prayers shall constantly ascend unto him whose ears are open to the cry of the righteous for their complete success.

Resolved, That we most heartily endorse the course of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE in this matter, in heaping unqualified and unmeasured condemnation upon the Louisiana Lottery, the pampered child of the prince of darkness. T. W. ADAMS.

All books received will be acknowledged in this column. A fuller notice will depend upon the interests of our readers.

BOOKS.

CRESCENT CITY ANTI SERIES (No. 1). Consisting of two addresses, by Rev. H. Carradine, D. D., on the Louisiana State Lottery Company.

This is a good campaign document and should circulate. The second address is the sermon already published, which reached a circulation of three thousand. It is to be regretted that in this second edition what is there said of the attitude of the church towards the Lottery is not rendered more definitive. To serve the ends of hyperbole, even in the most righteous undertaking, is not sufficient cause for classing the innocent with the guilty. But Bro. Carradino's ricochet shot will break up the soil wherever it strikes, and where it slays one honest man will kill an hundred rogues. It is profusely illustrated and means business. It is cheap at twenty-five cents, the selling price.

PERIODICALS.

—From the National Railway Publication Company, 46 Bond street, New York, we have received a copy of the Traveler's Official Guide of the railway and steam navigation lines in the United States and Canada, copiously furnished with maps and schedules. A vast deal of information for travelers and others is furnished in this volume, which is sold at the reasonable price of fifty cents.

—Owing to the great demand upon our space by the proceedings of the General Conference, our literary notices are necessarily curtailed. Among readable monthlies that have reached us this week and last, none are more interesting than Wide Awake, Cassell's Family Magazine, The Journal of Art, Harper's Young Folks, Our Day, Literary Digest, Ladies' Home Journal, Demorest's Ladies' Magazine, and the Chautauquan. The country in which we live has no rival among the nations of the earth in her magazine literature.

—The ADVOCATE has received the Biennial Report of the Board of Administrators of the Insane Asylum—a pamphlet; and also, with the compliments of the Commissioner, the Biennial Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture of Louisiana—a large volume of six hundred pages, neatly bound in library style. Of the latter we hope to give a more extended notice.

The Lottery.

Anti-Lottery Mass Meeting at Franklin.

In response to a call made by some of the citizens of Franklin, a large and enthusiastic meeting of the citizens of Franklin and vicinity was held in the court-house for the purpose of protesting against the extension of the charter of the Louisiana State Lottery Company. Dr. J. D. Saint called the meeting to order and proposed the name of Hon. Don Caffery as chairman, and Mr. G. B. Shepherd as secretary. They were elected. The Committee on Resolutions retired, and on returning presented the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, That monstrous iniquity, the Louisiana State Lottery, is now seeking an extension of its charter for a period of twenty-five years, by offering one million dollars per annum to the people under the cloak of pretended sympathy and charities.

Whereas, This institution is a moral leper and gangrenous ulcer permeating every part of the moral, social and political body with its unholy virus, degrading the old and young, debasing honest labor by holding out inducements to idleness and dishonest practices in the alluring hope of obtaining something for nothing.

Whereas, The people of the State have already, in the Constitution adopted in 1879, placed the seal of condemnation upon the proposition, declaring "gambling to be a vice," and that no Lottery shall exist after the year 1895.

Whereas, This offer of one million of dollars being an open attempt to bribe and corrupt the people of the State, in their present calamitous circumstances, and flagrantly violative of law and morals, should be rejected with scorn and contempt, as unworthy of acceptance or even consideration; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the people of the town of Franklin and vicinity, in mass meeting assembled, that we hereby denounce the proposition to extend the charter of the Louisiana State Lottery as being contra bonos mores, and call upon our senators and representatives in the General Assembly, now in session at Baton Rouge, to use their utmost endeavors, by all honorable means, to defeat the proposition, and to preserve the fair name of our beloved State from the infamy and disgrace sought to be placed upon it; be it further

Resolved, That we heartily approve and endorse the manly, upright and patriotic stand taken by Gov. Nicholls, and bid him God-speed in his opposition to the proposed degradation of the State.

The chairman, being called on to address the house on the subject of the resolutions, made an effective speech, touching on every feature of the case; after which Mr. Don Caffery, Jr., moved that the body go into a permanent organization, to be known as the Franklin Anti Lottery League. This motion was carried. A call was then made for members, and about fifty of the principal citizens enrolled themselves as members. Officers were then elected, and it was decided to push the fight into the country roundabout. BRISCOE CARTER.

Anti-Lottery in Feliciana.

CLINTON, La., May 2, 1890.

To the Editor of the Picayune: At a meeting of citizens of East Feliciana, held at the court-house to-day, Dr. L. G. Perkins was called to the chair, and Captain J. L. Cravens requested to act as secretary. Captain Thos. S. Adams was called upon and explained the object of the meeting.

Upon motion, the Anti-Lottery League of East Feliciana was organized with Dr. L. G. Perkins as president, J. L. Cravens, secretary, and E. A. Miller, treasurer.

The following resolution, offered by Hon. Thos. S. Adams, on motion duly seconded, was adopted:

Resolved, That we, speaking for the people of the parish of East Feliciana, declare, in the most emphatic terms, unqualified opposition to rechartering the Louisiana Lottery.

A resolution was then adopted endorsing the Mirror and pledging the assistance of the League both morally and financially.

Resolutions instructing the president to appoint delegates to a general convention of the State League and providing for the future meetings of the Parish League were adopted.

It was also resolved that the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Picayune, of New Orleans, and the press of this parish be requested to publish these proceedings.

Eloquent speeches were made by Hon. T. S. Adams, president of the State Farmers' Alliance, Colonel J. H. Stone, General G. W. Munday, Mr. A. E. Miller, editor of the Mirror, and others.

LOUISIANA'S PROBLEM.—The Louisiana State Lottery Company has long been a disgrace to the State. It has used its money successfully in the past to corrupt the Legislature, the Judiciary and the Executive, and has been able to secure all the privileges and protection it has needed for its monster gambling shop. It has now the audacity to ask of the Legislature, which met at Baton Rouge yesterday, the initiation of a constitutional amendment which shall recognize and legitimatize its nefarious business in the organic law of the State. Gov. Nicholls in his message, we are pleased to see, plants himself squarely against giving new life to the grasping monster.

It is believed, though, that a majority of the members of the Legislature have been secured in favor of the Lottery. But if there are any reputable citizens in Louisiana, do they not reflect on the infamy their State will incur by being known as the only gambling State in the Union and sanctioning in its Constitution what is branded in every civilized community as a crime? Are they blind to the fact that this Lottery is a curse to the State; that its allurements tempt its citizens from lawful business pursuits by impregnating them with the insane passion for gambling and by stealing their money and impoverishing them in their hopeless effort to win a sudden fortune? Have they not sense enough to know that honest business men will avoid a State which sanctions gambling in its organic law and throws the shield of its Constitution over Lottery monopolists and their decoy ducks?

If there is any self-respect, any honesty or any patriotism left in Louisiana, the Lottery gamblers will be scourged from the halls of legislation. No money inducements they can offer could compensate the State for the loss and disgrace it would suffer by yielding its government wholly into the hands of these cormorants.—New York World.

Sunday-School Lesson.

Second Quarter—Studies in Luke.

LESSON X.—June 8.

TEACHING TO PRAY.

Luke xi, 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.—Luke xi, 9.

TIME.—After the third passover, probably; between the feast of tabernacles and that of the dedication.

PLACE.—Possibly Bethany.

1. Teach us to pray—The prayer here related by Luke is not precisely the same as that mentioned by Matthew; and indeed it is not likely that it was given at the same time. That in Matthew seems to have been given after the second passover; and this in Luke was probably after the third passover, between the feast of tabernacles and that of the dedication.

2. When ye pray—It is evident that this order does not mean that the formula was to be slavishly repeated on every occasion of prayer; it was the type which was to give its impression to every Christian prayer, but in a free, varied, and spontaneous manner. Our Father—First, God is to be addressed, not precisely as Creator, or Ruler, or as providential Disposer, or as the omnipotent One—but as Father. This comprehensive word gives us virtually all the rest. Hallowed—The hallowing of God's name includes reverence, honor, homage; and forbids us to rush into his presence with no just sense of his majesty, purity, and ineffable glory. Thy name—The child of God prays him to assert his holy character effectually in the minds of men, in order that all impure idolatry, gross or refined, as well as all Pharisaic formalism, may forever come to an end, and that every human being may exclaim with the seraphim, in rapt adoration: "Holy, holy, holy!" Thy kingdom come—That the first petition should be, not for ourselves, but for the interests of his kingdom, is supremely appropriate. This petition can be presented with perfect intelligence only by such as have formed for themselves a clear conception of the ideal spiritual republic or commonwealth. The term "kingdom of God" denotes an external and social state of things, but one which results from an inward and individual change.

3. Give us this day our daily bread—The fathers in general understood the word "bread" in a spiritual sense: the bread of life (John vi); but the literal sense seems to us clearly to flow from the very general nature of this prayer, which demands at least one petition relating to the support of our present life. The asking each day for the bread of the day—for so much and so much only—is beautifully suggestive of dependence on God for the common comforts and necessities of life; of modest, moderate desires as to the amount of earthly good; and of the wisdom of merging all anxious solicitudes for the future in a daily trust for each day's supply.

4. Forgive us our sins; for we also forgive everyone—The prayer that God would forgive us because we also forgive our fellows indebted to us should raise in every mind the question, Upon the condition, what will be my chance of forgiveness? Lead—Rev. Ver. gives bring us not, which, beside being a more accurate rendering of the word, avoids the invidious hint of seducing or enticing which attaches to lead. Not into temptation—As the prayer for daily bread raises us above care for to-day, and the prayer for the forgiveness of sins is meant to quiet us concerning the past, so is the prayer against temptation a weapon for the uncertain future. The temptation is here the more critical probation occasioned by the previously-named guilt, and the "Lead us not into it" the consequence of the "Forgive us." Let us not experience the consequences of our guilt in intenser probationary trials. The word "tempt" takes two meanings in Scripture: to put a free being in the position of deciding for himself between good and evil, obedience and rebellion; it is in this sense that God tempts: "God did tempt Abraham" (Gen. xxii, 1); or, to impel inwardly to evil, to make sin appear in a light so seducing that the frail and deceived being ends by yielding to it; thus it is that Satan tempts, and that, according to Jas. i, 13, God can not tempt. If the occasion of sinning presents itself, grant that the desire may not be found in me; if the desire is there, grant that the occasion may not present itself. Deliver us from evil—The words of the original may be either masculine, so as to indicate a person (namely, the devil), in which case the true rendering would be "the evil one" (as in Rev. Ver.), or they may be in the neuter gender, and then the phrase would signify evil in general, or perhaps more specifically the "evil" into which the deprecated temptation might lead. This is the sense expressed in our Auth. Ver., and it fully answers all the requirements of the case. The prayer does not end, as our prayers now commonly do, with the formula, "for Christ's sake;" nor could it, consistently, with the supposition that it proceeded from Jesus. No prayer given by him for the present use of his disciples, before his death, could have such an ending, because the plea it contains was not intelligible to them previous to that event. The twelve did not yet know what "Christ's sake" meant, nor would they till after their Lord has ascended, and the Spirit had descended and revealed to them the true meaning of the facts of Christ's early history. Hence we find Jesus, on the eve of his passion, telling his disciples that up to that time they had asked nothing in his name, and representing the use of his name, as a plea to be heard, as one of the privileges awaiting them in the future. "Hitherto," he said, "have ye asked nothing in my name; ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." And in another part of the discourse: "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son."

5. And he said—Now follows a parable on continuing instant in prayer, of the same nature as that in chap. xviii. 2. In both parables the argument is that called a fortiori "If selfish man can be won by prayer and importunity to give, and unjust man to do right, much more certainly shall the bountiful Lord bestow, and the righteous Lord do justice."

6. In his journey—In the East it was and is the custom to travel late at night, for coolness' sake.

7. My children are with me in bed—A whole family—parents, children, and servants—sleep in the same room. Jesus states the case as disadvantageously for himself as possible; he selects for illustration not good samples of men, but persons below the ordinary standard of human virtue.

8. Importunity—A very striking word to describe persistence, literally, shamelessness, used only here in New Testament. As related to prayer, it is illustrated in the case of Abraham's intercession for Sodom, and of the Syro-Phenician woman. It is presupposed here that the postulant goes on knocking and asking. Let none overlook the connection of this entire passage with the prayer that precedes. Certainly it bears on prayer to God, and is part of Christ's answer to the request, "Lord, teach us to pray." The case for illustration puts the utmost stress upon persistent importunity.

9. I say unto you, Ask—He argues from their own thoughts of God that they should still hope in him. "Suppose," he says in effect, "God to be what you fancy, indifferent and heartless, still pray on; see. In the case I put, what perseverance can effect. Ask as the man who wanted loaves asked, and ye shall also receive from Him who seems at present deaf to your petitions. Appearances, I grant, may be very unfavorable, but they can not be more so in your case than in that of the petitioner in the parable; and yet you observe how he fared through not being too easily disheartened." Ask, . . . seek, . . . knock—The three repetitions of the command are more than mere repetitions; since to seek is more than to ask, and to knock than to seek. Here also, as so often throughout the Old Testament, we have a God who permits himself to be entreated, and in the conflict with praying faith to be voluntarily overcome.

10. This verse declares to us not merely a result observable here among men (in which sense it is not universally true), but a great law of our Father's spiritual kingdom: a clause out of the eternal covenant, which can not be changed.

11. In this verse our version scarcely brings out the full force of the question; indeed the idioms of our tongue will hardly bear an exact reproduction of the Greek. The appeal is made more impressive and pointed if we put it thus: Of which of you, being a real father, will his son ask bread and he will give him a stone? Do you think a father can do that? Is there a father among you all who would or could? Put the case to your own hearts. And then when your parental, loving heart has made its answer, consider that your heavenly Father loves his child more than you love yours, and that he has one great gift to bestow which is beyond all comparison better than even bread for your hungry son.

13. If ye then, being evil, . . . give good gifts—Since our natural affections are only imperfectly good, and therefore relatively evil, how much more shall God, who is, in his very nature, essential goodness, bestow the best gifts upon his favored creatures who seek him in prayer. Your heavenly Father—Mark how the force of this illustration is heightened by this heaven-wide difference between "evil," imperfect, sometimes petulant and passionate human fathers on the one hand, and the perfectly loving, compassionate, and wise heavenly Father on the other! The Holy Spirit—God has one great blessing in store which is always a good; which is always bread for the life of human souls; which can never be to men what a stone would be for bread, or a serpent or scorpion in place of fish and egg. The best good gifts which human fathers know how to give to their children are gloriously surpassed in value by this one great gift which God has for his children. Observe what is supposed to be the leading subject of prayer in connection with this argument. The thing upon which Jesus assumes his disciples to have set their hearts is personal sanctification. He takes for granted that they seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. Therefore though he inserted a petition for daily bread in the form of prayer, he now drops that object out of view; both because it is by hypothesis not the chief object of desire, and also because, for all who truly give God's kingdom the first place in their regards, food and raiment are thrown into the bargain.

There is but one pursuit in life which it is in the power of all to follow, and of all to obtain. It is subject to no disappointments, since he that perseveres makes every difficulty an advancement, and every contest a victory—and this is the pursuit of virtue.—Colton.

What Our Friends Say.

"If all men knew what others say of them there would not be four friends in the world." But this is what our friends say: "I believe it to be a blessing from God, to help weak and suffering humanity." "It is certainly a great relief to the suffering." "Your Compound Oxygen Treatment has done more for me than any medicine could, and I feel very grateful for the relief." "No return of the disease, nor any other complaint." "It is a restorative and curative agent whose power can not be overestimated." "I regard Compound Oxygen as one of the greatest boons to suffering humanity, and speak from some observation, as well as personal experience. I regard it as a wonderful remedy." "I was entirely cured of Neuralgia by it." "I am now as well as ever, by God's blessing and your Compound Oxygen Treatment." These are a few extracts from patients' letters, published in our quarterly, "Health and Life." Write for it. It is sent free, as is also our Treatise on Compound Oxygen. GRANT'S FURNITURE STORE at 44 and 46 Baronne St., into which I have recently moved, is one of the finest buildings in the city, with a floor space of over 25,000 square feet, and is fully equipped with all modern improvements. It is very centrally located, being only one block from Canal St., and I hope to be favored by a call from you when in the city.

NEW STORE,

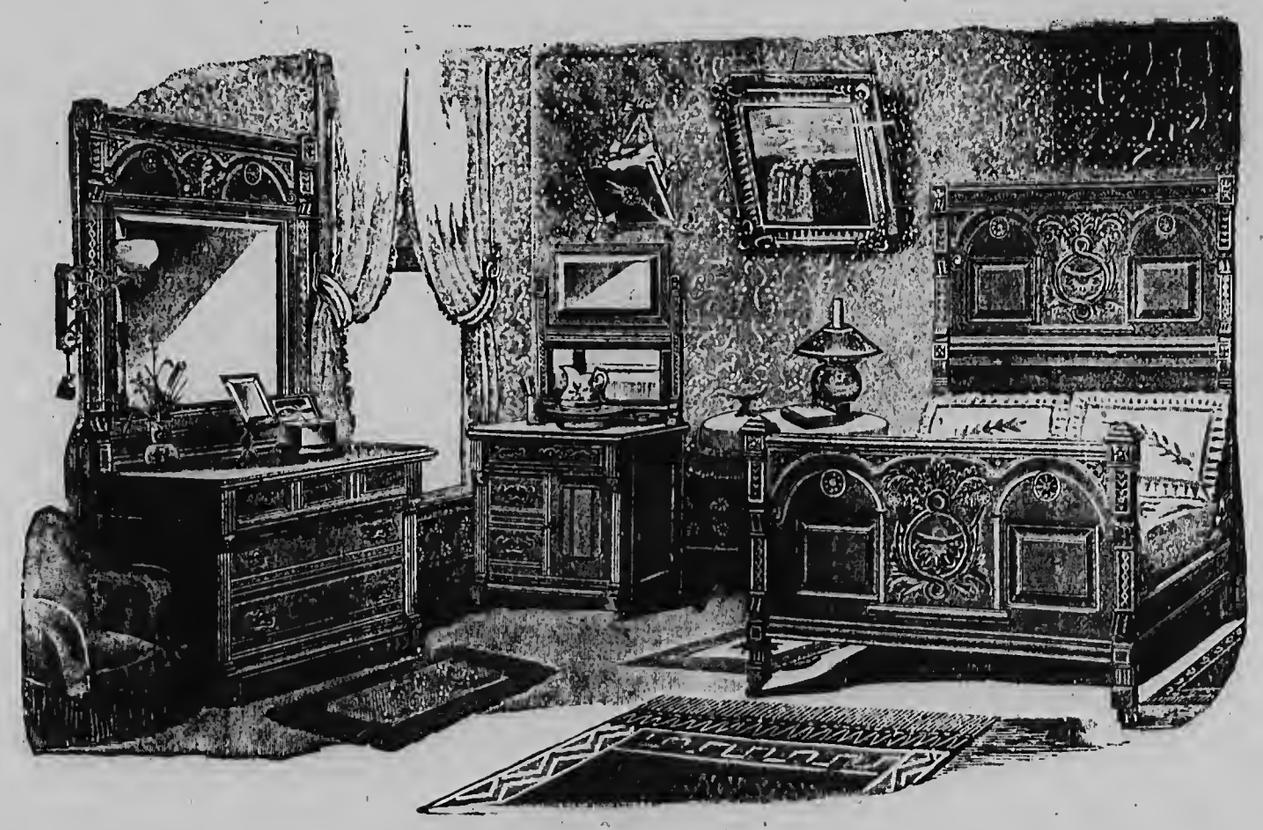
BEAUTIFUL PARLOR GOODS.

I have one entire floor devoted to the display of these goods alone, and have over sixty different varieties to select from. Complete Suits anywhere from $35 to $650 and odd pieces—such as Sofas, Divans, Easy Chairs, Patent Rockers, Window and Reception Chairs—at as low prices in proportion as the Complete Suits. I have these goods in Cherry, Mahogany and Walnut, and can give you your choice of any of the following coverings: Crushed, Embossed, Plain and Silk Plushes, Hair Cloth, Mohair, Raw and Spun Silks, Satins, English Tapestries, French Velours, Petit Point, Brocatelle or Damasks. I make a specialty of these goods, have many of the patterns made specially for my own trade, and can offer a greater variety at lower prices than any other house in the South.

NEW STOCK

In all departments, and every grade of goods, from the cheapest to the most expensive, in endless variety. I have all the latest and most fashionable designs, and, as I have only purchased from factories whose goods I have been selling for the past six years, can and do guarantee every piece of Furniture that leaves my establishment.



LOW PRICES

are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.

A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and whether you wish to pay $40 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs.

I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.

I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

For the first time in the history of the House Judiciary Committee a majority of the members, on May 22, agreed to a favorable report upon a joint resolution (introduced by Representative Baker, of New York) providing for a constitutional amendment to grant the right of suffrage to women.

The delegation of the Pan-American Congress were in Virginia, last week, where they visited the Natural Bridge, the grave of Stonewall Jackson and the mausoleum of Gen. Lee.

In the Louisiana Legislature, on May 22, Senator Foster introduced a resolution calling for a full investigation into charges of attempted bribery of members of the House and Senate by the lobbyists of the Louisiana and Mexican Lotteries. The resolution has been made the special order for Thursday, and lively times are expected.

The Piedmont Exposition directors have decided to invite as guests President Harrison, President Diaz of Mexico, ex-President Cleveland, and Secretaries Blaine and Rusk, Senator Carlisle; Governor Campbell, of Ohio; Colonel Polk, president of the National Alliance, and other prominent gentlemen.

In the general session of the American Medical Congress, in Nashville, Tenn., on May 22, Washington was selected as the place for the next annual meeting. Dr. Samuel Logan, of New Orleans, delivered the annual address on general surgery.

The school book publishing trust has been completed, and ninety per cent. of the entire business of the United States has been taken in. Negotiations were begun with Harper Bros., who threatened the perpetuity of the trust, and the announcement is made that for a consideration, estimated at between $750,000 and $1,000,000, that firm has consented to go out of the school book publishing branch of the business.

An anarchist plot was discovered in Chicago, on May 24. A quantity of dynamite was found at the base of the Haymarket monument. It is believed that the heavy rain of the night previous prevented an explosion, which would have been most disastrous in its consequences.

George Francis Train completed his trip around the world on May 25, arriving at Tacoma, Wash., on that date. The time was sixty-seven days, thirteen hours and three seconds.

Conservative members of Congress are beginning to feel a little uneasy about the way the appropriation bills are piling up this season. The amount of appropriations on bills already passed and pending point to an aggregate that will exceed government revenues by many millions during the coming fiscal year.

The first of July has been fixed as the date of the unveiling of the monument of the late Vice-President Hendricks, in Indianapolis.

Johnstown Valley (Pa.) is flooded again by rain storms. The rivers are rising rapidly, but it is not thought they will do much damage.

Mercie's magnificent statue of Robert E. Lee will be unveiled in Richmond, Va., May 29, with impressive ceremonies.

Hon. John G. Carlisle, of Kentucky, ex-speaker of the House of Representatives, appeared on the floor of the Senate, May 26, and was sworn in.

The Blue and Gray reunion at Vicksburg will be an unqualified success. On May 26 visitors were arriving by every train from all parts of Louisiana and Mississippi.

FOREIGN.

It is stated that Chancellor Von Caprivi intends to submit a measure to the Reichstag imposing a tax upon all Germans who are ineligible for service in the army and upon all German residents who reside abroad.

Labor riots occurred in Ravenna, Italy, on May 22. Three peasants were killed and numerous soldiers and peasants wounded. The latter only earned 7 pence a day. The anarchists are fomenting the trouble among the workers.

Emperor William has subscribed 20,000 marks to the Evangelical Missions for a school at Zanzibar.

The English Liberals are anxious to force a general election at as early a date as possible, owing to the discontent aroused among the British taxpayers by the land purchase bill, and the belief that that discontent would involve a liberal victory. Lord Salisbury, however, shows no disposition to accept advice from antagonists. He has a safe working majority in Parliament and a legal lease of official life for three years longer, unless a failure to support the ministry on some vital question should involve an appeal to the country. His partisans stand by him on every vote.

The Japan Mail says about 100 earthquakes were felt on Myake Island, in the Izu group, from April 17 to 19. Many houses were destroyed and landslides occurred in various parts of the island.

President Carnot, who is making a tour of the provinces, arrived at Montepelier on May 24. The town was gayly decorated with flags in his honor.

The National Japanese Exhibition during April was visited by half a million people, the receipts from the sale of tickets amounting to about $50,000. It is now expected that the exhibition will remain open until August.

The Emperor of Germany will depart for Russia on August 14. He will be the guest of the Czar about ten days.

Father Muller, of the Jesuits, at Malgore, claims to have cured several lepers by Count Matei's system. An agent of the government at Calcutta has had similar success, it is said.

The British, German and American consuls in Samoa have established the new government and have opened a custom-house.

Quicker than anything else on earth, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment will reduce inflammation.

Notice.

All contributions and communications intended for the Transit and Building Fund Society of Bishop William Taylor's Self-Supporting Missions, should be sent to Richard Grant, treasurer, 181 Hudson St., New York.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

It is well known among successful merchants that liberal advertising is indispensable to the economical and successful working of their establishments.—Price Current.

In three of the Southern States movements of a political nature are under way which may effect a complete change in the control of affairs. In Alabama and South Carolina the candidates for the farmers are preparing for a struggle to secure the Democratic nomination, and against them is arrayed the field of office holders, while in Louisiana the Lottery, backed by the most influential portion of the press, is seeking to retain or increase its influence in the Democratic party of the State. Taking advantage of the disasters which the floods in that region are occasioning, the Lottery is posing as an angel of merey, and the checks which in every direction it is offering are increasing its popularity, while the governor, who is simply striving to do his duty, is exposed to the harsh criticism of the papers. Whoever may win or lose in Alabama or South Carolina, the result is trifling in comparison with what will follow upon a possible triumph of the Lottery in Louisiana. The people of that State are put to the severest test—to refuse the lottery grant will seem an act of ingratitude; to make the grant will be perfidious.—Wichita Eagle.

Advertising is evidently becoming an art, and its development may yet lead to the establishment of special courses of training in business colleges. Already nearly $25,000,000 are spent annually in the United States in newspaper advertising, every dollar of which if used judiciously has returned a large interest to the investor. One feature of the advertisements of to-day forms an agreeable contrast to the advertisements of a generation ago. It is the evident sincerity in which they are written and the consequently greater confidence the searcher after information can repose in them. That the advertising page is becoming one of the most interesting pages of the daily newspaper is one of the striking proofs of the growth of intelligence and refinement among the people.—Philadelphia Press.

Mansfield Female College
Conservatory of Music and Art.
MANSFIELD, LA.

One of the most popular and flourishing institutions of the South. The Sixty-sixth Session opened September 11, 1889, and the Spring Term begins February 1, 1890, with an able and experienced faculty. Curriculum comprehensive, instruction thorough. Advantages in Music unsurpassed, as in the best conservatories. The pianos are new and of the best make. The Technicon and the Technichone are used to facilitate the work in the music department, placing this department beyond competition. Departments of Fine Arts and Industrial Arts under specialists.

The location is unsurpassed for beauty and attractiveness, and the school is celebrated for the remarkable record for good health maintained. The climate is the best in which to educate, and the place is the safest for girls. The main building is of brick, massive and commodious, with a large and well-shaded campus. Rooms large, well furnished, warmed and ventilated. Ample provision for the table of the best the market affords. All necessary comfort secured. Expenses very low and the school very economical. A new building with a large audience hall is in contemplation, and extensive improvements are in progress to make this the grandest institution in the State.

Proceedings of the General Conference.

SEVENTEENTH DAY—AFTERNOON SESSION.

David Morton, chairman of the committee to report nominations for the Book Committee, made the following report, which was on motion adopted:

E. H. East, Nashville, Tenn.; R. A. Young, Nashville, Tenn.; George A. Dazey, Nashville, Tenn.; T. D. Fite, Nashville, Tenn.; B. D. Macrae, Clarksville, Tenn.; B. J. Tarver, Lebanon, Tenn.; John A. Carter, Louisville, Ky.; R. W. Millsaps, Jackson, Miss.; James Odell, Greensboro, N. C.; T. J. Pearce, Columbus, Ga.; Rev. H. A. Bourland, Northwest Texas Conference: Rev. T. S. Wade, West Virginia Conference.

Bishop Fitzgerald, rising to a question of privilege, presented Dr. T. M. Finney with a silver bowl as a testimonial from the General Conference, in view of his faithful and courteous attention during the session.

Bishop Fitzgerald said:

I am suddenly called upon to suddenly call on you. If I had known what was coming, I would have carefully prepared myself for a few extemporaneous remarks. (Laughter.) But while you are listening to me, you will have the advantage of making a premeditated response to the very brief, but brilliant address which I am now about to make to you. (Laughter.)

In view of your services as the chairman of the Committee on Entertainment; in view of your long and efficient services, and of the character that you have established as being as wise as a serpent, as harmless as a dove, with an eye like an eagle, and as steady as a well-trained Missouri ox (laughter); and in view of the high appreciation of the members of the General Conference of your unremitting assiduity in looking after their comfort—your patience, your imperturbable good nature, your constant oversight of all those innumerable details that make up the duties of a host of a body so large, comprising so much dignity, eloquence and other characteristics that belong to a General Conference not equaled by any other assembly of equal numbers in the world; in consideration of all this, we propose, the members of this General Conference, to present you with this silver bowl (applause), with the prayer that it may be long, my dear brother, before the golden bowl shall be broken and your footsteps that have led our hosts so long in this part of the militant church of God, and that your last days may be the best; and when you cease to serve the church of God on earth, you may join the ransomed millions in the church triumphant in glory. (Applause.)

Dr. Finney responded as follows:

It is usual on such occasions as this to profess embarrassment. The only embarrassment in the case just now is this—I scarcely knew who I am. (Laughter.) Some of the brethren wanted to know what had become of their resolutions; but I would like to know who I am! (Laughter.) I have understood that by name I belong to the finny tribe; but in your speech it seems that I belong to various orders, inhabitant of earth and sky—ox and eagle. In a body like this it is very common to define your position. I am at a loss, sir, to define mine now—the classification of the animal creation to which I belong. (Laughter.)

Now, I am not in the least embarrassed in saying that I appreciate the kindness and courtesy involved in this proceeding. If it were remuneration for services rendered, in any commercial sense, I should not appreciate it at all. I recollect that in my earlier ministry that I heard this expression from the lips of the sainted Bishop Pierce—that he thanked God that he had opportunity, in the course of his public life and ministry, to render unpaid services. And I incorporated that sentiment into my thoughts when I was a young man and a young minister; and it is my delight to render services to the church everywhere and in anything in which I may be of service. You are mistaken in supposing that I am the chairman of this committee, and the embarrassment I have in this case arises from this circumstance—that it singles me out as the author and the source of all the courtesies, kindnesses and favors that you have received. I can not allow this without a disclaimer; your thanks are due alike to the chairman of the committee, to the pastors of the churches in this city, and to the members of the Local Committee, who have heartily co-operated. And I want to say I receive your expression in this as made to them as well as to myself. (Applause.)

And now, let me say that the chief value of what I hold in my hand is that it is a token of the success of our efforts to accommodate the business of the Conference, and to promote the comfort and enjoyment of the delegates during their sojourn in our city. And I shall be gratified beyond all expression if you shall leave this city with pleasurable recollections of your sojourn. I thank you heartily for this token and expression of your kindness. (Applause.)

On motion of H. V. Philpott and E. S. Smith, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, This General Conference has been served by a company of handsome, polite boys in the capacity of pages, whose presence has been a pleasure to us all, and whose services have added much to our comfort; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the thanks of this General Conference are due to these courteous boys, and they are rendered to them in connection with the expressed wish that they may live long to serve in the church in whose service they take such delight.

On motion of S. B. Jones and A. B. Smith, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That the college of Bishops be requested to appoint fraternal delegates to the approaching sessions of the Wesleyan Conference of Great Britain and Ireland, the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Church of Canada, the African Methodist Episcopal Church, the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America.

Resolved, That the Book Agents are instructed to arrange for the expense of said delegates.

On motion of T. J. Duncan and others, the following resolution was adopted:

Whereas, The schools under the fostering care of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are often the property of corporations or individuals, and not the church; And, whereas, These schools are sometimes built up by Methodist patronage, and afterward handed over to educational management of other than Methodists; therefore, be it

Resolved, That all schools seeking the fostering care of the Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, be required to file with the Conference Board of Education a guarantee that the presidency or principalship and educational control of said school shall not pass out of Methodist hands until the property shall have changed ownership.

W. A. CANDLER,
A. COKE SMITH,
C. W. CARTER.

NINETEENTH DAY—MORNING SESSION.

The Conference was called to order by Bishop A. W. Wilson at the usual hour.

Dr. J. W. Lewis conducted the religious exercises of the morning by reading six verses of the fiftieth Psalm, and announcing the 47th hymn:

"Jesus, my truth, my way,
My sure, unerring light."

Bishop Hendrix took the chair.

J. N. Brown offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Book Committee be and they are hereby authorized to employ an assistant editor for the Sunday-school literature, whose duty it shall be to aid in editing the same; and they are also authorized to appropriate $2,500 annually in payment for such services, or as much of said sum as may be found to be necessary.

H. Hainsworth:

I move to amend by substituting the words, "shall be elected by the General Conference," instead of being appointed by the committee.

The motion was declared out of order on the ground that it proposed a change of the Discipline, which could not be made now.

W. P. Lovejoy offered a substitute for the resolution, which was also declared out of order on the ground that it embraced the same matter substantially that had already been acted upon by the Conference and indefinitely postponed.

J. J. Tigert:

I move to amend the resolution of Brown (of Texas) by striking out all after the words, "Sunday-school literature," so that the resolution shall read:

Resolved, That the Book Committee be and they are hereby authorized to employ an assistant editor for the Sunday-school literature.

The amendment was adopted, and the resolution of J. N. Brown, as amended, was adopted.

On motion Report No. 4 of the Committee on Boundaries was taken from the calendar and put upon its passage. Section 1 was read and adopted; Section 2 was read and adopted; Section 3 was read and adopted; Section 4 was read and adopted; Section 5 was read and adopted; Section 6 was read and adopted. The report, as a whole, was adopted.

On motion Report No. 6 of the Committee on Boundaries was taken from the calendar and put upon its passage. E. E. Wiley moved to amend by adding to that part of the report which defines the boundaries of the Western North Carolina Conference the following words: "Except that part of North Carolina which now belongs to the Holston Conference." Dr. Wiley having the floor, and his time having expired, it was extended. R. N. Price took the floor, and his time having expired, it was extended. E. E. Hoss took the floor, and his time having expired, it was extended. On motion the session of the Conference was prolonged until the matter under discussion could be disposed of. The previous question was ordered. R. H. Mahon, chairman of the committee, took the floor, and his time having expired, it was extended. The question recurring on the amendment of E. E. Wiley, it did not prevail. The question recurring upon the report of the committee, it was adopted.

The Conference then adjourned with the benediction by Dr. A. H. Mitchell, of Alabama.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Conference met pursuant to adjournment.

Bishop Hendrix in the chair.

Religious exercises were conducted by Rev. E. L. Armstrong, of the Northwest Texas Conference.

The Minutes of Saturday afternoon and this morning's sessions were read and approved.

Bishop Granbery took the chair.

A. West moved that the hour of six o'clock P. M. be fixed as the hour for final adjournment.

A. H. Mitchell moved to lay the motion of A. West on the table, which was done.

J. N. Brown offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this General Conference are hereby tendered the reporters of the daily press for the faithful and impartial manner in which they have reported the proceedings of the session.

J. N. BROWN,
B. D. ORGAIN.

E. L. Armstrong offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Northwest Texas Conference be and is hereby authorized to divide into two Conferences, at any session during the next quadrennium, provided, that two-thirds of the members concur in said division, and the Bishop presiding approving.

E. L. ARMSTRONG,
H. BISHOP,
S. P. WRIGHT,
J. D. THOMAS,
JAS. CAMPBELL,
H. A. BOURLAND.

The resolution was adopted.

A. D. Bright offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this General Conference are hereby tendered to R. M. Scruggs and Dr. T. M. Finney, of the Local Committee of Arrangements, for entertaining this Conference, and their untiring and ceaseless kindness and Christian courtesy shown us.

A. D. BRIGHT,
R. H. MAHON,
DAVID W. CARTER,
J. W. LOWRANCE.

Bishop Hargrove reported the following as the committees appointed by the Bishops:

Revision of the Law for Church Trials—R. H. Mahon, A. West, and Edward Mayes.

Arrangements for Ecumenical Conference—Bishop R. K. Hargrove, Bishop E. R. Hendrix, Rev. W. P. Harrison, D. D.; Rev. P. A. Peterson, D. D.; Rev. P. H. Whistnor, D. D.; Chancellor L. C. Garland, LL.D.; Walter B. Hill, Esq., and Julian S. Carr, Esq.

On motion the Bishops were authorized to appoint the delegates to the Ecumenical Conference.

R. D. Smart offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Conference are hereby tendered our Secretaries for their efficient and untiring services during the entire session.

R. D. SMART,
JOSEPHUS ANDERSON.

S. H. Dent, O. R. Blue, and V. A. Sharp offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this General Conference are due and are hereby tendered to the various railroads that have favored us with reduced rates.

Z. T. Bennett, A. L. Malone, W. D. Kirkland, C. W. Carter and J. R. Pepper offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the Book Committee be requested to have edited and stereotyped and transmitted to all our papers which will agree to use it, as much matter as four columns of the Nashville Christian Advocate, specially suited to our Methodist youth and Sunday-school pupils, to be used simultaneously in such papers.

Report No. 1 of the Committee on Trusteeship was taken up.

T. M. Finney offered an amendment that instead of a new chapter, his amendment should constitute the present chapter of devises, which amendment was adopted.

The report, as amended, was adopted.

J. N. Brown moved that the Chair appoint a committee of five to retire and bring in nominations for trustees provided for in the report.

On motion the vote was reconsidered, by which Report No. 1 of the Committee on Trusteeship was adopted.

T. J. Duncan moved to amend by adding after the words, "Agents of the Publishing House," the words, "and their successors in office," which was adopted.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The report, as amended, was adopted.

The Chair nominated the following Committee on Arrangement and Entertainment for the General Conference of 1894:

E. W. Cole, J. T. Fant, J. C. Courtney, T. M. Finney and A. G. Brown.

The Chair announced the following committee to nominate trustees for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South:

E. E. Hoss, T. M. Finney, S. V. Wall, J. W. R. Erwin and R. K. Brown.

E. E. Hoss, from Nominating Committee, reported the following nominations for trustees:

For four years: E. W. Cole, J. L. Parkes, R. K. Brown and J. J. Tigert.

For eight years: D. C. Scales, Samuel Cupples, T. M. Finney and Auson West.

Report No. 10 of the Committee on Publishing Interests was taken up.

J. J. Tigert moved that $2,500 be substituted for $1,500 in the report as the amount to be appropriated annually to the Christian Advocate, to procure contributions, which was adopted.

S. Cupples offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Whereas, This General Conference has directed that all money collected on account of Bishops' salary be transmitted to Joint Boards of Finance, and that the Chairman of each Joint Board forward the same to the Book Agent for the distribution among the Bishops; And, whereas, It is probable that very little or no moneys will be forwarded to the Book Agent in advance of the sessions of the Annual Conferences, and a hardship will thus be imposed on the Bishop; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the operation of the aforesaid act of this General Conference be suspended until November 1, 1890.

J. R. Heartsill offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this General Conference are due and are hereby expressed to the various evangelical churches of the city of St. Louis and vicinity for their Christian courtesy in tendering the use of their houses of worship by our ministry during the present session.

J. R. HEARTSILL,
J. N. BROWN.

The following resolution was offered by Z. T. Bennett, M. M. Smith and A. L. Malone, which was adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Conference that its action to-day should not be construed as declining to accept the hospitality of any city which may give the Committee on General Conference Entertainment satisfactory assurance of simple, comfortable and gratuitous entertainment for the next session of this Conference; and, provided, such offer of entertainment be accepted by the committee, no assessment shall be made upon the church for Board of Delegates during Conference session.

EVENING SESSION.

The Conference met pursuant to adjournment, Bishop Granbery in the chair. Religious services were conducted by Rev. A. R. Wilson, of the Memphis Conference.

The Minutes of the afternoon session were read and approved.

Bishop Duncan took the chair.

P. A. Peterson and J. A. Kern offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Conference be tendered to the proprietors of the various hotels in the city for a reduction of rates to the delegates and their families.

S. H. Dent and A. J. Lamar offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this General Conference are hereby tendered to the editors, reporters and stenographers of the Daily Advocate for their prompt and, in the main, accurate reports of the proceedings of this Conference.

R. H. Mahon moved that the first Wednesday in May, 1894, be designated as the day on which the next General Conference shall meet.

D. B. Nicholson moved to amend by striking out "Wednesday" and inserting "Thursday."

C. G. Rankin moved to lay the original motion and the amendment on the table.

The motion did not prevail.

R. H. Mahon accepted the amendment of D. B. Nicholson as part of the original motion.

The motion was then adopted.

Dr. A. G. Brown offered a resolution of thanks to Dr. Mathews and the congregation of Centenary Church for the use of their church, in which to hold the General Conference. Adopted by a rising vote.

On motion of R. S. Mahon the Conference resolved to adjourn, after reading and approving the Minutes.

The Minutes of the evening session were read and approved.

The Conference then adjourned sine die.

Hymn No. 222 was sung, the Conference was led in prayer by Samuel Rodgers, and the benediction was pronounced by Bishop Keener.

Pre-Adamite Man.

BY "BARNABAS."

It may as well be said, first as last, that I am opposed to pre-Adamite man. So long as he kept his place—if he had one—in the wastes of geologic time, and attended to his own business—whatever that was—I was disposed to let him pass. But when he leaves the sphere to which he properly belongs, and insists upon projecting himself, or being projected, into the affairs of our present life, I think it is about time to put a stop to him. As a mere speculation, he may be a success; but as a present potential entity, he is a nuisance that ought to be abated. To put it legally, he is functus officio, competent only to be forgotten along with the fish-lizards and trilobites. Indeed, in whatever light we view this hypothetical ancestor of ours, he is altogether uncouth and undesirable. Intellectually, he had not mind enough, so far as the evidence goes, to construct a brush arbor or an alphabet; socially, he was a little lower than the gorilla; morally, there was not enough of him to sin or to be saved.

But I don't want to be narrow or bigoted in the matter. It seems that there are people who find a sort of mental pabulum in things dead and gone; who discover no small part of revelation in a knotty Greek root, and kindle into rapture over a strange Hebrew accent, howbeit it may turn out to be only a fly-speck after all. To such, perhaps, pre-Adamite man might be given up as congenial and even inspiring company. Further than this I decline to go, though at the risk of being considered too Methodistic to be broad.

While the Woodrow matter was perplexing a sister denomination in the South recently, not a few of the people called Methodists congratulated themselves that at the head of our highest school there was a man with both the wisdom and the nerve to deal with such questions promptly and finally. Some of us, with no little pride, were accustomed to contrast the decisive action of Bishop McTyeire in the Winchell case with the tedious course pursued by our Presbyterian brethren in dealing with Dr. Woodrow. It is, therefore, with no small mortification, if not dismay, that we read the inner history of our great Vanderbilt University, lately published over the signature of one who seems to have been magna pars of that and a number of other leading enterprises of the church. Iconoclasts are not pleasant people to deal with generally; but the purpose of the writer mentioned is ostensibly to enhance, rather than to detract from the true glory, as he views it, of a great name. It is not his fault, doubtless, if the scrap of history he gives out takes our great senior Bishop off a pedestal and exhibits him in what may appear to unscientific Methodists a less admirable attitude towards certain questions which we vainly hoped had been set at rest. But it comforts us to reflect that the leveling in one direction has been fully compensated by an elevation in another. Our admiration need not be without an object. We may yet rejoice that there was a great mind somewhere in the early history of Vanderbilt. But all merely personal consideration sinks into insignificance before the dangers which, all unknown to us, for some time threatened our single institution for higher education. Naturally solicitous for the moral and religious influence of the school, we would have been quick to discern anything of doubtful tendency in the life or conversation of anyone of its officers or teachers. It was, some of us thought, of first importance that these should be Christians, and, above all, Methodist Christians. Their professional fitness we could entrust to the wisdom of those by whom they were selected. Had there been any failure in these respects, we might have been prepared for trouble. It never occurred to us that our great university was dependent for a respectable position among the colleges of the world upon its relations to pre-Adamite man. We were not prepared to believe that a hand, or claw, or other prehensile member would reach from out the geologic past and write, Mene tekel, or its pre-Adamite equivalent, upon the walls of that devoted institution. We are glad, however, that there was an eye to perceive the threatened danger and a mind capable of showing how its worst consequences might be averted. It is a matter of sincere congratulation that Vanderbilt is recovering from this great false step of its trustees, and their well-meaning, but misguided president. There is even a sort of security in the suggestion that the later management of the university, if less positively denominational, is gradually restoring it to the respect of the scientific world. At the same time there are those among us who claim the right to plead the statute of limitations against that suppositional ancestor of ours, who has been the occasion, if not the cause, of this trouble. For myself, at least, I want to say that I recognize no doubtful relations antecedent to Adam. I repudiate the whole rabble rout: and, seeing how near Vanderbilt has been to losing the respect of the German universities, on the one hand, and the confidence of every-day Methodism on the other, by reason of its ill-adjusted relations with pre-Adamitism, I am constrained to sound a note of warning. It may be too late to do much for existing institutions; but certainly we may save such as are yet to be established from the clutches of the Old Man of the Sea. Therefore, I would exhort our brethren who are laying the foundations of Millsaps Methodist College to have a care in the matter. While their Mississippi hands are in at Constitution-making, let them be sure that they so frame the organic law of this latest of Methodist schools as to secure it against every power of heathenism, whether it march under the banner of the Canaanite, or the Ammonite, the Perezzite, the Hivite, the Jebusite, or the pre-Adamite.

THURSDAY, JUNE 5, 1890.

A JUNE SUNRISE.

Hush!
Sunrise in the heavens is holding sway,
And with its ungovernable blush,
Running down to burn the edge of day,
Floods the thrush
To a sweet wild rapture borne away,
Singing, singing
With a throb of starlight in his tune,
And with fires of music, springing
To the listening heart of June;
It is June! June!

Stay!
Every bird that sings to heaven can tell
There has come a change since yesterday;
Wings of summer, won through spring's farewell,
In some way
O'er the earth have thrown a mystic spell,
Showing, showing
Roses reddened by the last red moon
In a scarlet transport blowing
On the happy heart of June;
It is June! June!

Hush!
Sunrise soon will lose itself in blue,
And through crystal air the birds will rush,
Singing tireless songs and sweet hours through;
Day will flush
Roses' petals to more splendid hue,
Showing, showing
Passion of the moonlight, sunrise, noon,
Through their gold hearts tidal flowing
To the golden heart of June;
It is June! June!

—Wide Awake.

Speech of Dr. Stone, Canadian Fraternal Delegate, and Response by the Senior Bishop.

Bishop Keener introduced Dr. Stone as follows:

We have met to-night to receive the message from the Methodist Church in Canada by our brother, its messenger, Rev. Dr. Samuel G. Stone, who brings his credentials, which the secretary will please read.

At the conclusion of the reading, Dr. Stone then addressed the Conference as follows:

Mr. President and Brethren of the General Conference:

It is with a due sense of the honor put upon me by my brethren of the church, whose messenger I am, that I appear before you as the bearer of their fraternal greetings, with the assurance of our profound sympathy with this great church, and the highly successful and important work you are accomplishing, not only in your own land, but for those foreign people among whom your missionaries are planting the standard of our blessed Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

Though before that period deeply interested in your operations, as a great and aggressive church, we have been especially observant of you since our first fraternal delegate, the majestic Douglass, returned to us with his great heart and head full of your achievements, and in thrilling words told us of your marvelous success and of your apostolic zeal. That interest has been still further intensified by the visits of the distinguished men from your body, whom it has been our high privilege to greet upon occasions similar to this—men who will live in our memories, by reason of their eloquent utterances on our platform and from our pulpit, and who made for themselves a place in our affectionate esteem second to none of the distinguished visitors who have honored us with their presence, and if any further stimulus to our regard for you were needed it was furnished by the tidings brought us by my immediate predecessor, the eloquent and gifted Dr. Briggs, who four years ago visited you at the city of Richmond. Your literature is also familiar to many of us, and the names of your illustrious heroes whose zeal for Christ and whose high endowments ranked them as priuces in Israel are with us household words. In such expression I bring these greetings of the Methodism of Canada to you of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, assuring you that if our climate be more rigorous than yours, our hearts are as warm as any that throb under the most genial skies. What that northern part of this continent which we occupy is in its resources and possibilities is probably to many, if not to most of the people of this Sunny South, if not indeed to those of a larger area of this nation, an unsolved problem. Your country is so vast, its resources are so unlimited, the regions yet waiting development are so great, its business competition is so keen, the problems, social, political and religious, which are constantly springing up and which are of such vital consequence to your teeming millions, are so many, the assimilation of the vast immigration pouring into your country from all nations, and composed, to a considerable extent, of restless, feverish men, who, by reason of tyranny in the land of their birth, and in whose breasts hatred to oppression and class legislation have so long rankled, have lost faith in the fraternity of all governments, and have become hostile to all laws of restraint—these are reasons which may excuse busy men occupied with the solution of problems of such magnitude, if they find little time and have less inclination to give much attention to the affairs of other people who give them no trouble and mind their own business.

It may be also that to some extent, this may be attributable to those geographies which, by reason of the limited information they give of Canada, and by the peculiar methods of illustrating the sub-divisions of North America which they have adopted, leave their students to infer that ours is a country of perpetual snow, mostly inhabited by a people who have nowhere elsewhere to go, or had not wisdom enough to choose, between such a country and that south of the great lakes, which constitute your northern boundary, or it may be that there has been a fixed persuasion that the shrewdness of American diplomacy had secured all this continent which was worth having and, therefore, that the rest of it was of little consequence to anybody. If by reason of any or all these considerations it has been assumed that Canada makes such an insignificant figure on the map of this Western world as this would imply, or that it is not to constitute an important factor in the destiny of this continent, it is not surprising that those holding such opinions should give it little attention.

Well, if it be so, we do not complain. We do not envy this country its greatness nor are we indifferent to the great problems that engage its attention, the solution of which will require its best wisdom, sanctified by righteousness. Your triumphs are the triumphs of the Anglo-Saxon race to which hitherto no obstacles have been insurmountable—a race whose enterprise has whitened the sea with its commerce and whose inventions have made a path under the sea for the lightning and have harnessed the forces of nature to its chariots, and commanded them to lift the weightiest burdens from the shoulders of men, and to be the messengers and yoke-steeds of civilization. Furthermore, we have but to date history back a little more than a century to find ourselves one people politically. Your history up to that period was our history, and both are heirs to all that constitutes the pride and glory of the motherland. Who among you does not feel his pulses quicken as he thinks of Agincourt and Cressy, of the achievements in literature where shine the names of these illustrious men who have done so much to immortalize the English language, to unshackle the human mind, to stimulate inquiry after truth, to conform civil law to the ethics of the New Testament, and to cover the pages of history with imperishable glory, and who among you, even now, though you have built up a great nation since you broke your allegiance to the Crown of England, does not feel the inspiration of kinship when the name of Victoria, the model mother and the model queen, is mentioned. Moreover, our early history as a church was interwoven with your own for nearly half a century. It was American Methodism whose missionaries first pressed their way through trackless forests and across bridgeless streams, braving and enduring the dangers and privations incident to pioneer life, that the scattered settlers of our country might enjoy the blessings of a preached gospel. What thought they of the citizenship of those to whom they were the messengers of life, if only they could carry the gospel to the destitute wherever it was possible to reach them! Canadian Methodism, while in the East, planted and promoted by the Methodism of England, many of whose noblest sons have been identified with her history—to whom and to the church that sent them no measure of gratitude is too great—forgets not her obligation to the Methodism of America from which she received the kindest fostering care until, by her own wish, she was given an independent autonomy. But, sir, notwithstanding our admiration of your greatness and of the lustre of your achievements, as a nation, we thank God for the goodly heritage which, in his providence, remains to us.

To the north of you, sir, we have a country nearly as large as the whole of Europe, a country of "magnificent distances"—as has been said of your own—a country whose enterprise and prosperity we look upon with pride, and whose future is bright with the promise of no mean place among the nations. Already, if not the fourth, we are the fifth maritime power of the world. We have the largest wheat-growing area of this continent, and if our anticipations are realized, will ere long be able to produce enough to meet the demands of Europe.

Our country abounds also in minerals, and our vast northern forests of pine and other valuable timber constitute a source of immense income.

The waters which lave our eastern shores teem with another source of wealth toward which a large class of your people on the Atlantic coast look with an appreciative longing, and which is of sufficient importance to constitute an important feature in the diplomatic relations of the two countries, while on the western coast, where the gentler breath of heaven perpetuates the bloom of flowers, large cities are springing up like magic, inviting through their ports and over our transcontinental line of railway the commerce of the far East. Our political relations with England, while securing to us many advantages, and in constituting us an integral part of the empire, stimulate the loftiest ambition of our sons to emulate in all the walks of life the long line of illustrious heroes, patriots, statesmen and philanthropists, with which the pages of English history are crowded, are more nominal than real in so far as our internal government is concerned, and no country on earth possesses, in a higher degree, the advantages of self-government than do the Canadian people. If we are not well governed, it is our own fault and not the fault of England, which advises, it may be, but without dictation, and whose warmth of maternal regard assures us of her helpfulness, if there shall ever come to us an hour of need. Situated as we are, alongside of this mighty nation for a distance of 4,000 miles and more, we feel also the stimulus of your phenomenal growth and enterprise, and, it is possible, walk with quicker step that we may keep ourselves abreast of you. That our relations shall ever be fraternal is the faith, we believe, of the best citizens of both countries, and we believe the time has come to stay when the Christian sentiment of this and our own land will find no international question beyond the possibility of settlement by arbitration. Thus far, you will bear with me as a Canadian, but I must not forget that I am here especially to tell you of our condition and progress as a church. Canadian Methodism is happily now one and undivided. The time is not long since when we were five denominations occupying to a large extent the same territory, and all or most of them in many instances having churches in the same country villages and towns, thus dividing resources of both men and money, without any correspondingly valuable result. All this is now happily at an end, old times are rapidly fading out and men are forgetting to which of the branches they formally belonged. The prophets of evil have been happily disappointed, and among them it is now difficult to find any who do not regard the union of 1884 as an unmixed good.

It is now but six years since the union was consummated, but in that brief time our membership has increased by more than thirty-five per cent. and all our connectional funds in about the same proportion. In all the great centers of population our churches are among the most conspicuous, both for their capacity and elegance, and what is yet better, they are generally filled with worshipers. Numerically, we are by many thousands the largest Protestant Church in the Dominion, and, as demonstrated by the last census, are increasing our numbers by a larger percentage than any of the sister churches, and also more rapid than the growth of population. Our present membership is approximated 1,700 ministers and 230,000 members. True to our history, we are vigorously pushing our missionary work in all its departments, our agents having lost none of the fire and self-devotion of the fathers. Men of the nerve of the sainted McDougall, who fell under the smiting blizzards of the far North—the stars of heaven and the angels alone the witnesses of his death—yet answer with heroic enthusiasm, "Here am I; send me," whenever there is a demand for personal sacrifice or endurance, whether it be to labor among the Indians, shut out from civilization for months of the year by frost and snow, or to do the no less arduous work of the back-woods missions. Our Missionary Board has under its management at the present time 396 domestic missions, 44 Indian missions, 6 missions among the French, 3 among the Chinese in British Columbia and 13 in Japan, upon which are employed in all 596 paid agents, including native assistants, teachers and interpreters. To carry on this work our income has reached $215,775, or an average of nearly one dollar per member, thus indicating that our people are keenly alive to the importance and value of this great agency of the church. Our motto now is, A quarter of a million for missions and a revival on every charge.

To the religious instruction of the children of the church we are giving our best attention and are rewarded with the most encouraging success, the total number of Sabbath-schools now under our care being 2,979, with an attendance of 220,302 scholars—the increase for the past year being 108 schools, and 22,764 scholars. It is one of the emphatic duties of our pastors to organize the children into classes for religious instruction wherever practicable, and also to promote the organization of Sabbath-schools where it has not already been done. It is now affirmed that in the Province of Ontario, the largest and most popular in the Dominion, two-fifths of all the children attending Protestant Sunday-schools are in those of the Methodist Church.

To meet the demands of this important department of church work for current literature, our Publishing House issues nearly half a million copies of Sunday-school papers and other helps for teachers and scholars monthly.

EDUCATION.

To the promotion of "higher education" in the establishment of institutions for the culture of both sexes our best energies and talent have been from an early period in our history employed, a work in which we have been loyally sustained and encouraged by the generous devotion of the whole church. Of such institutions we have now two universities and eight colleges with an attendance of over 2,000 students, exclusive of the Anglo-Japanese College at Tokyo, the ladies' schools at Tokyo, Shidzuoka and Kofu, Japan, the French Institute at Montreal, the several schools among the Chinese and Indians, and the day-schools in Newfoundland, in all of which much efficient work is being done. To the training of young men for our ministry we are giving that special attention which their high calling and the demands of the time make imperative. Doubtless the Methodist Church everywhere has always done its best with the means at its command, and in view of the pressing calls for men which its rapid expansion has involved. She had to take the best material at hand and make the most of it, and many a young man with his hands yet hard and his complexion browned from exposure in the field or at the mechanic's bench has gone forth with little culture, but much consecration, and in demonstration of the Spirit and with power has done mighty work for the Master. He could not dispute in the terminology of the schools, but he could tell his experience. He could not read essays upon the stars, nor discuss the strata beneath his feet, but his face did shine with beams from the Sun of Righteousness, and he could tell men where to look for life, and how to build upon foundations that would not fail. But the times are upon us when we must have an educated ministry to meet the demands of an educated people. In the Province of Ontario—and other Protestant provinces are much after the same model—our whole school system is graded from the kindergarten to the university, the public schools being absolutely free, and the high schools, collegiate institutes and university so nearly so that a liberal education is within the reach of the children of the most humble parents, if they choose to avail themselves of it. The teachers in our public schools must, without exception, have a professional training. After passing through our high schools or collegiate institutes, in the latter of which the teacher at the head of each department must be a specialist who has taken honors in his university course, these candidates for certificates as public-school teachers must attend for a specified period at the Normal School. An applicant may be a university graduate, but he, too, must have this special training, for we demand not only that our teachers shall themselves be educated and clever, but they must also know how to teach, and in themselves and their methods furnish an incentive to the students under their care to press forward to the higher grades. There were in attendance in our high schools and collegiate institutes last year in Ontario alone nearly 20,000 pupils, drawn from all the walks of life, a large percentage of whom were the sons and daughters of farmers who, upon the completion of their studies, return again to their farms, others devote themselves to business, some to their professions, and a liberal percentage to the university.

With such facilities, and with the growing wealth of the people, we must anticipate a rapid elevation of public intelligence, and, therefore, if we may reasonably expect to hold our position as a church and command public respect for our pulpits, we must provide for the thorough training of our candidates for the ministry, not in theology only, but on the broader lines of the universities. These are times of critical investigation. Men are not less hungry because they doubt. Indeed, is not doubt the expression of mental or spiritual hunger? Does it not mean that the doubter is not at rest, but would gladly have rest if only he could find how? No one should have words of censure for honest doubt; it is better than dishonest belief. But honest doubt is a searcher after truths and will not down at the command of an ecclesiastical trumpet. We must be prepared to meet these men upon the premises they do understand—must be able to walk beside them over the paths they are accustomed to tread, that we may take them by the hand and lead them to the light; and, therefore, we have organized a society, by the aid of which all young men coming into our ministry may reach graduation in both arts and theology. It so happens that much of our best material is drawn from the homes of the humble—it may be, it not infrequently is, from a back-woods' mission, or from following the plow in some more favored section, yet from rural life. Their associations have probably been pure, and their pursuits have given them strong physical development, having promise of strong manhood. They have made the best use of the country school, but beyond this they have not been able to go because they have not had the means. It is to meet the needs of such a class of candidates that our "educational society" has been formed, the management of which is vested in a secretary and treasurer, with a Board of Managers appointed by the General Conference, and the objects of which are to assist in maintaining our universities, theological schools and higher mission schools, to defray the expenses of the examination of candidates for the ministry in our church, and to aid such candidates in obtaining a suitable education. Branch societies are formed in each Annual Conference under local management and upon the circuits where practicable.

Sermons are preached and collections made in this behalf in all our churches, and preaching-places at such time as the district meeting may determine. The distribution of these funds as indicated by the objects specified, is determined in so far as percentages are concerned by the General Conference, a certain percentage going to the universities and theological colleges, and the balance being applied directly to the assistance of candidates for the university who may need it, and to such extent as they may require, whether in full or in part of his expenses, the amount granted over and above the college fees being a loan without interest, repayable in ten years, and for which the candidate gives his note. By this means we have been able to give necessary assistance to all young men whose circumstances have not been such as to enable them to pay their own way, and by granting it as a loan we have preserved their self-respect, and perpetuated so much of the principal of the fund as is thus applied. With these facilities available, we have so elevated our standard as to make it impracticable for any young man to reach ordination without a fairly liberal education, with some knowledge of the Greek classics and of metaphysics. And I asked how this fund is regarded by our people? I answer, none except it be the mission fund, is so popular, for the people look upon it as an investment directly in their own behalf, inasmuch as the fruits of its expenditure will be found in the higher qualifications of the young men to whom assistance is given, and who are to be their future ministers.

PUBLISHING INTERESTS.

I am happy to say that our publishing interests are in a highly prosperous condition. During the past year new premises have been erected, with largely increased capacity and also furnishing offices for all our connectional interests. We have accumulated a net capital of over $250,000—out of the profits of which we are in a position to make a liberal appropriation to the superannuated preachers each year.

The headquarters of the business are on Richmond street, Toronto, and are under the management of Rev. Dr. Biggs, who has contributed much to the prosperity and popularity of the house. Besides the books issued from our presses, we are issuing considerably more than half a million copies of current literature monthly. We have branch establishments in Montreal and Halifax, the former under the management of Mr. Coates, and the latter—the publishing house of Eastern Methodism, before the union—under that of Rev. S. F. Huestis.

Our connectional papers, the Guardian, which is the oldest religious weekly in Canada, and the Wesleyan, the organ of the Eastern Conferences, are under able management, and are exercising a wide and salutary influence upon the religious thought of our country.

Our superannuated preachers' fund, on behalf of which we have now nearly $200,000 invested, is steadily growing, the income from which, with the circuit and preachers' contributions, with some other sources of revenue, enables us to make somewhat generous provision for our old or worn-out men, whose claims are graduated according to their years of active service.

As a people, we, as well as yourselves, have social and political difficulties to face.

The temperance question is one to which great prominence is given in all parts of the Dominion. It is felt to be a gigantic evil demanding the attention of the Christian public, and upon which all the evangelical churches are taking the most advanced ground. We thought in the enactment of the Canada Temperance act, commonly known as the "Scott Act," that we had the best form of local option, and for a time its popularity was such that we secured its adoption by a large number of the counties in all the Provinces, by overwhelming majorities. But we found its enforcement quite another matter. Whether this question is so much more difficult than others which engage the attention of legislators that it is impossible to frame a law capable of enforcement I can not say, but it has seemed impracticable to secure a law of this kind through which the lawyers can not drive a coach and four. I regret to confess that our difficulties have been so trying that we have become wearied in the effort and have, therefore, lost most of the ground we hoped we had permanently secured. Our warfare is not over, nor have we stacked our arms, but are yet determined to fight on until we have obtained legal prohibition throughout the Dominion. Upon this principle a third party has been formed, and it is putting its candidates in the field for the coming election.

Another question of vital importance to the Canadian people is the aggressive spirit of the Church of Rome, and particularly the rapid growth of Jesuitism in the Province of Quebec. By the treaty of Paris, and subsequently by the Quebec Act of 1774, the Roman Catholics of that province were guaranteed the free exercise of their religion with other privileges which perpetuated the colonial life of the France of Louis XV., and the regency, unaffected by the revolution of 1792. Under these laws, whose privileges they have used to their utmost limit, and the special legislation obtained from time to time through the Parliament of Canada, and later through the Provincial Parliament, over which they exercise a controlling influence, they have become to some considerable, if not absolute, extent the masters of the large province of Quebec, in which the Protestants number approximately but about one-ninth of the population. Under the legislation of Canada, previous to confederation, and then by the British North America Act, they secured the passage of the separate school law, which enables them under certain conditions to organize separate schools in the adjoining Protestant province of Ontario, in which case they are exempt from taxation for the support of the public schools, and are practically irresponsible to the government for the management of these separate schools, yet drawing from the general government grants to the school fund their proportion according to school attendance. Moreover, it has recently been ascertained that in many of the public schools in the eastern part of Ontario much of the time embraced within school hours has been occupied in the teaching of the Roman Catholic religion, and, except in the most limited sense, the French language is being taught, thus perpetuating a foreign language to the exclusion of the English. At the present moment these evidences of their determination to do all in their power to invade our public school system, with the interference of the hierarchy in the politics of Ontario, is the main question at issue in the provincial election which is to take place on the fifth of June. Another fact which intensifies this question is the recent incorporation of the Jesuits in Quebec, and the acknowledgment of their assumed claim to what was known as the Jesuit estates, which, many years ago, upon the abolition of the order by the Pope, lapsed to the Crown. About three years since the order made application to the Quebec Legislature for an act of incorporation, where they met with little opposition, except from the Archbishop of Quebec and his followers. It seemed to Protestants an innocent thing that they should be put in a position in which they could hold such property as was necessary to their position as an educating body; but it was not long before the country was startled by the intelligence that they were applying for the restoration of the estates to which we, at all events, assume they had no legal or moral claim. The order had been suppressed, the last member of the original society had been dead for many years, and the Crown had seized all these estates, and during all this time their revenues had been applied to the support of the public schools. No one believed that the new or revived order had any legal right; but the government of Quebec, however, admitted a moral claim, and out of the public revenues voted a sum of $400,000, subject to the disbursement of the Pope. The matter has been before the Dominion Parliament, where it was discussed for several days, the appellants claiming that by reason of certain of its features the act was ultra vires of the Quebec Legislature. It was not disallowed, but, on the contrary, was sustained by an overwhelming majority. But the end is not yet. A widespread feeling has been excited in Ontario against the assumed truckling of the old political parties for the Roman Catholic vote, which is practically a solid one, and this feeling has found expression in the organization of a new party called the "Equal Rights' Party," the strength of which is not yet developed, and its influence is as yet an unknown factor.

The whole question, especially that part of it relating to separate schools, is a very delicate one, the public school department being in each case under the control of the Provincial Government, and the public schools of Quebec being, as a matter of fact, entirely under the management of the priesthood. The Provincial Government, if provoked by a successful attempt on the part of Ontario to suppress them, would certainly retaliate by demanding the withdrawal of the corresponding privileges of the Protestant minority in that province. Of course, there is a wide difference between the public schools of Ontario, which are purely secular, and, therefore, not interfering with the religious principles of the pupils, and those of Quebec, which are in effect Roman Catholic and so sectarian; but this would hardly be a factor in determining their attitude on such an event as I have intimated.

We have also to contend for the sanctity of the Sabbath, which, thus far, we have succeeded in preserving from encroachment, except where it is done in defiance of law. Our canals are closed at last for most part of the Sabbath; public works are in no case carried on that day, the postoffices are closed, and no mails are either sent out or distributed. No excursion trains or steamboats are allowed to run; nor are shops of any class, except druggist (which are open for the dispensing of medicine), allowed to be open; and in Ontario all saloons and hotel bars must be closed from 7 P. M. on Saturday until 6 A. M. on Monday morning.

Let me assure you, dear brethren, of our profound sympathy with you in the losses you have sustained by the ravages of death. Your princely McTycire—whose visit to Canada as your representative in 1882—will long be remembered by us for his nobility of character, and his eminent services for the cause of Christ. We, too, have been called to mourn the loss of many noble men since our last General Conference, among the most illustrious of whom were the scholarly Nelles, who so long stood at the head of Victoria University, and who, in all relations, was so conspicuous a figure in Canadian Methodism, and but a few months since one of our venerable superintendents, Rev. Dr. J. A. Williams, a man of such greatness of intellect, of such commanding influence of character, so lovely, and of such broad catholicity of spirit, that no tribute paid to his memory can be too high.

I can not conclude without, at least, a brief reference to the pleasure and profit derived from the visit of your esteemed and honorable delegate to our last General Conference—Bishop Galloway. He captivated our admiration and our hearts by his personal qualities and the lustre he shed upon the high office he bears. We shall esteem it an honor if we shall have the privilege of greeting a representative from your venerable body at our General Conference, to meet in September next, in the city of Montreal. This is the one hundredth year of our organization, and we shall especially rejoice to greet upon such an occasion of special interest a delegate or delegates from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Dr. Stone supplemented his address by a pleasant allusion to the North Pole and to Canada as a summer resort, and extended a cordial invitation to the Conference to visit him at his home in Toronto.

Bishop Keener then made the following response:

We are very glad to know that you are a man given to hospitality. We have a right smart piece of the North Pole ourselves.

Have you never heard of the "wolf's long howl on Alaska's shore?"

We have that wonderful Aleutian Archipelago of Alaska, the home of the seal, and our people are turning that way. The whole world, sir, once went toward your Newfoundland bank for codfish, and I suppose that when we come up to see you, you will give us some of it. (Laughter.) Well, sir, we have been very glad, indeed, to hear all these good things of your country, and especially that missionary item that you have succeeded in bringing your people up to one dollar contribution per member. (Applause.) The men that can get a dollar out of every church member for missions is greater than the man that invented the steam engine.

I hope to live to see the day when we will be alongside of you in this; we are very far from it now. Are you sure of your calculation? (Laughter.)

Well, sir, you are in a difficult region, and yet you have made very great progress. The mercy is that you are not all French. The French once held you, and the Jesuits owned you for thirty-five years without interruption. Then it was the religious domain of France at that time. The ladies of the court of Louis XIV. and Louis XV., Mesdames DeMaintenou and DuBarry, an order of ladies who were very religious in Canada, but far from being so in France, sent missionaries by the shoal. Boat-loads were sent over. The Acadians of Louisiana are the French of Canada brought around port St. Louis by way of the Mississippi. (Laughter.) However, it is a great mercy that we are not all French. But various things happened to prevent it, especially the war between the British and the French. The battle between Montcalm and Wolf, at Quebec, delivered us. Another fortunate item was that the Jesuits garrisoned their country with everything but the Bible. If they had garrisoned the country which they conquered with the Bible, they would have owned the world now. (Hear, hear.) But they garrisoned the country with nunneries and monasteries and universities, and I know not what; everything but the Word of God. The Methodists, wherever they go—they go maybe not as fast as these Jesuits—but wherever they go, they leave behind them the Word of God, and they hold every foot of territory that they pass over. (Amen.)

You have many Jesuits up there; we have many with us. It is wonderful, indeed, to notice the fidelity, the organization and the power of the Society of Loyola. They are defeated again and again, but they come back. There never was a braver man in the world than the Jesuit, Brebœf. The Indians hurried to eat his heart after they killed him that they might get some of his bravery. How those men stood the fire, and the tomahawk, and the scalping-knife, and the treachery of the Indians! The Iroquois were as swift as eagles, they were as cunning as foxes, and they were as bold as lions. If Satan ever lived on the surface of the earth, he lived in the Iroquois. (Laughter.) They were wise, they were among the best legislators the world ever produced, and they lived to fight; they lived to enjoy the luxury of revenge—that was the whole purpose of their lives. I believe there are as many of those Indians now as there ever were. Our brother stated there were 20,000 in the Dominion of Canada. It is a great mistake to suppose they are dying out.

Well, sir, we have our troubles as well as you. The mercy is you are not all French; and it is a mercy we are not all black. (Laughter.) I don't know that you know it, but a hundred years before Mr. Wesley came here, there came to our shores a remarkable cargo of people in the Mayflower. You have heard of them.

Once I was asked by a gentleman in Texas if Mr. Wesley was not converted in that ship! (Laughter.) As soon as she had disposed of her first cargo of pilgrims, who were entirely white, she went right straight to Africa to get a cargo of colored pilgrims. Her second cargo were these pilgrims' fathers that have given so much trouble to the South. (Laughter.) This may sound like romance, but it is all solid truth. (Laughter.) The very first vessel that was ever built in the United States was built and launched at Barnstable, Massachusetts. What do you supposa its first cargo was? Its first cargo was a cargo of blackamoors, rum, and tobacco—this very samo tobacco we were talking of here yesterday, and this very same rum, and the same blackamoors. That was in 1638. So we see history repeals itself. So we have our troubles. (Laughter.) In the South we have undertaken to teach the colored man how to vote. (Laughter.) The difficulty with him is he does not know how to hold a ticket; he holds it catacornered. In order to get him to hold it straight in South Carolina, they have fourteen boxes in line; he passes through; by the time he gets through the fourteenth box it is straight. (Laughter.)

Well, we hope, after a long time, to get right. But it will take a great deal of sympathy, a great deal of instruction, and our Northern friends will see that we get a great deal of advice; but we are taking it kindly, and I think that we will be able to take care of the negroes if you can take care of the French. (Applause and laughter.)

It is a very grand thing to know that this Methodism of ours has now, in its communicants and adherents, more people than there are in the British Isles—twenty-five or thirty millions—that is the Methodism of the world—and to know that we have so faithful a body as you have in Canada, and such a noble body as we have here in these Northern latitudes—these good people, who, with all their mistakes, are true to Methodism. And then in the South, and in England, and everywhere, we right all our differences; it is the same sublime Methodism—many bodies, but one spirit.

It was a great movement. I care not under what flag they move, what standard they rally to; so that they have the love of God in their hearts, I can excuse all their various peculiarities and variations. (Applause.) But I take all to my heart in the divine charity which I think is over all of us—that exquisite grace of the infinite love of our Savior, and the light of the glory of God in his countenance. That cheers my heart. We are one, sir, with you; we are brothers with you, and, I trust, with all these people. I have been very happy, indeed, to be present at this and all of these receptions; I think we are the better for it. And I hope we shall carry home the delightful memories of this evening and the wonderful account that you have given us of your people.

After singing the doxology, Dr. Waller, of England, pronounced the benediction.

Leave-Taking of Fraternal Delegates.

(From Proceedings of General Conference.)

Bishop Duncan said:

Brethren, Rev. David J. Waller, who has been among us for some time, is now about to take his leave and wishes to say a few words to the Conference.

Rev. Mr. Waller said:

I know how very precious your time is, and especially just having heard the motion made by Dr. Kelley, whom I feel I should like to call my friend, I feel I ought not to trespass long upon your time, but I do want to say this: that my presence amongst you has not only been pleasant, but it has been more than that—it has been to me positively delightful. My reception all the way from New York, wherever I met the ministers belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church—and I saw some of the most eminent ministers amongst them—all expressed unqualified pleasure that the British Conference had sent a representative to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Then as to the manner in which I was received here by your Bishops, and by Bishop Keener—now that he is not here, I may feel more free to say that I am glad I had the pleasure and honor of making the friendship of that grand old man. (Applause.) We have our grand old men, too. I think Bishop Keener would prove the peer of any man we have on the other side of the Atlantic. I trust that God will spare him for many years to come to guide you by his wisdom and to delight you with his wonderfully felicitous expressions. As to the other Bishops it has been my joy to be associated in a delightful Christian home with Bishop Hendrix, and I am very glad to have had the opportunity of social intercourse and much pleasant, friendly talk with him. There seems to be a fitness in things. The first Bishop of this Conference, whose acquaintance I made, was your president, when he kindly received me in the Conference at Elizabethtown; and here by turn of the wheel he presides now, when I am to say good-bye.

Now, I feel amongst you very much at home. There have been times that I could hardly realize that I was about four thousand miles away from home, and especially during religious services. There is not only one blood coursing in our veins, but we are made one by the closer bond of the precious blood of Christ. I feel as if I were amongst brethren; I reckon it a privilege that I have the opportunity of shaking hands with Christian brethren from every State in the South and "of honorable women not a few." I know something about your Methodism before I came here; I had read about it; I had endeavored to inform myself about it; but yours is a greater Methodism than I had imagined, and you have a more brilliant future than I had supposed. Now, sir, there is one question that has interested me very much. I have followed your proceedings all through with very great interest and have tried to note the points of resemblance and the points of difference between your procedure and ours. Ours is different in many respects. In our Conferences we never have the pleasure, except in what we call the open sessions, of seeing ladies present. I will not say anything now that I shall be called to an account for on the other side, but it has been a great pleasure to see the ladies. (Laughter and applause.)

Then, sir, you admit the press. Their criticisms have been free, and I am bound to say I think they have been fair. I have looked at the men who have been doing the work and I have read their reports, and I believe that those reports have been written with a kindly sympathy and a desire to further the very objects for which this great Conference has come together. I think you owe something to the public press. They certainly, personally, have treated me very kindly—and when I refer to the press I do not refer to the Methodist press, but to the secular press that has been doing glorious service to the cause of Methodism here in St. Louis. (Applause.) As to your debates, I will not comment upon them. I look upon a great Conference like this and I try to picture myself what would be the impression if the whole of the Methodism of America were one. (Sensation.) Perhaps the time may come when instead of two, there may be four or even five great Conferences, all bound together. (Applause.) I know not, but there is a superintending Providence which will shape our ends, and the great Head of the church will safely guide us.

Now, brethren, in leaving you, I pray that God will pour out abundant blessings upon you; that the Lord of Peace will grant peace unto you always, and in all things, and by all means. I shall go in a short time away to my home in a distant land where loved ones wait for me. You will go to your homes, far over this vast South-land. We shall never meet again on earth. God grant not merely that we may meet in heaven, but that we may so live that each of us will have fulfilled our own responsibilities. Let us "work while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work." I thank you for your kindness, and rejoice in the pleasure I shall have in bearing tidings to my Conference with reference to your affairs. (Applause.)

Bishop Duncan said: Sir, your visit has been one of great pleasure to us all. We thank you for your kind and gracious words, and pray that God may speed your safe return.

Before any business had intervened, Dr. S. G. Stone, fraternal delegate from the Conference of Canada, arose and Bishop Duncan said: Dr. Stone, fraternal delegate from Canada, will now say a few words before he takes his leave.

Dr. S. G. Stone: Mr. President and brethren, all that our esteemed brother, Rev. Mr. Waller, has said in appreciation of your kindness, and of the delightful entertainment he has received, I can fully endorse, and I wish it understood as saying for myself, what he has said in your hearing.

The Lottery.

A Strong Paper. Read This.

JACKSON PARISH ANTI-LOTTERY LEAGUE.

Whereas, There is existing and flourishing in our beloved State a company of gamblers known as the "Louisiana State Lottery Company," possessing untold wealth and dangerous power; And, whereas, This company, holding its existence upon an illegal and unjust basis, coins, at least, $28,000,000 annually, without a dollar of capital invested or a cent of taxes paid into the State treasury; And, whereas, This company, reaping its millions mostly from the poor and hard-working classes, has openly and unblushingly offered to bribe the Legislature and people of Louisiana into relicensing its nefarious business by offering first $500,000, and then $1,000,000; And, whereas, Our State Constitution expressly declares that gambling is a vice, and that this and all other lotteries shall be prohibited in this State after the first day of January, 1895; And, whereas, During the twenty years of its existence this company has fattened upon the vitals of Louisiana; it has violated every agreement possible to be evaded, and been of no appreciable benefit to education, charity or the increase of wealth, but has been a moral cancer on the body politic; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the undersigned citizens of Jackson parish, in regular mass meeting assembled:

1. That we indignantly spurn the $500,000, $1,000,000, or whatever other bribe this Lottery Company may see fit to hold out to the people of Louisiana.

2. That we consider it better for the people of Louisiana to educate their own children, pay their own debts, vote their own way, and otherwise attend to their own affairs, and not turn these matters over to a company of gamblers in New Orleans.

3. That we recognize the corrupt money influence of this Lottery Company in Louisiana politics, and are opposed to its further debauching the press, the politicians and the people.

4. That in order to oppose the cunning schemes now on foot in the Legislature to continue this company, and in order to resist any possible appeal of the Lottery to "the people," we form ourselves into the "Jackson Parish Anti-Lottery League."

5. That we will oppose this Lottery by our votes and influence, whether directed against the company itself, its subsidized press, or any men or measures employed in its behalf.

6. That we heartily endorse the action of Gov. Nicholls in refusing the bribe of $100,000 to be used for levee purposes, and his manly opposition to retaining the Lottery, as set forth in his recent message to the General Assembly of Louisiana.

7. That we deeply deplore the action of the Times-Democrat, City Item, Picayune and other papers of the secular press in advocating the unrighteous cause of this Louisiana curse, and that we will oppose these and all other papers openly or secretly aiding this Lottery and deceiving the people.

W. R. WAMACK,
G. E. GREENE,
J. C. JONES,
Committee.

LOUISIANA'S TEMPTATION.—There are some people in the world who think more of getting money than of the method by which it is obtained. For example, there is the New Orleans Times-Democrat, which, after calling attention to the splendid work done by the Charity Hospital, to which the Louisiana Lottery Company has been a contributor, states that Mr. Morris, in behalf of this gambling concern, has offered to pay $8,750,000 for levees, which are much needed, to provide completely for the maintenance of the Charity Hospital, of the State Insane and Deaf and Dumb Asylums, and to furnish New Orleans with $2,500,000 for a permanent drainage system.

These are very tempting offers. They are as if a gang of burglars should suggest to Mr. Jay Gould's steward that they would provide for him and his family for life if he would open the back door to them on any favorable night that they might select by means of an agreed-upon whistle.

Why should the State of Louisiana sell its virtue for the sum offered by the Louisiana Lottery Company? That is the meaning of the editorial of which we speak. It is gravely argued by a leading newspaper of New Orleans that the governor of the State is wrong in attacking this iniquitous institution, because the State could not obtain from any other source the money which the Lottery promises to pay for the privilege of debauching its thousands of customers.

It is not considered to be extraordinary virtue in one who refuses the wages of sin, and yet here is an organ of public opinion which asks the governor how the State will obtain the needed money except by its degradation. The answer is not difficult. If the State can not sustain itself on its justly imposed taxes, it must go without the money which is offered as a bribe. But what a shameful state of affairs such a suggestion reveals.—New York World.

THE LOTTERY AND THE FOOLS.—The Louisiana Lottery has offered the State of Louisiana a cool million a year for twenty-five years for the privilege of selling lottery tickets to fools. It is generally understood that this offer is a proposition to divide the fools' money with the State for the privilege of fleecing the fools. In other words, the Lottery managers in the light of their past experience expect to gather in $50,000,000 of fools' money during the next twenty-five years if the State of Louisiana will accept half the amount as a bribe for allowing them to do it.

The Legislature of Louisiana has thus thrust upon itself the responsibility of accepting or rejecting this offer of a partnership in the business of fleecing fools. That it should be rejected is the unanimous opinion of honest men, but, unfortunately, honesty doesn't always control legislative bodies, and it is not at all impossible that the fool-fleecing partnership may be formed. Twenty-five millions of fools' money would save the State of Louisiana twenty-five millions in taxes, and even honest men hate to pay taxes.

But what a comment is this unblushing offer upon the exceeding foolishness of the lottery purchasing fools. To be publicly paraded in the newspapers as willing and even anxious to give the lottery sharps a cool two millions a year without return should, one would think, open the eyes of the fools. It probably will do nothing of the kind, for the fool has not changed his nature since it was written of him that though brayed in a mortar with a pestle yet would not his foolishness depart from him.

It is a pity for all that the poor fools should have so much good money to throw away.—Philadelphia Times.

THE CATHOLIC WORLD.—The owners and managers of the Louisiana Lottery are becoming desperate in their efforts to fasten their machine on the country for another quarter of a century, and have just offered the State $1,000,000 a year for the privilege. It is said that the Legislature of Louisiana will accept the bribe of $25,000,000 and permit the iniquity to continue, although the governor strongly opposes it. The press of the State is all in favor of the Lottery and the millions. The bait of money is too tempting for the political chivalry of Louisiana; in spite of many warm declamations to the contrary, money is more than a match for the civic virtue of that State. The injury which the Lottery scheme inflicts upon other States ought to bring the Lottery scheme within federal jurisdiction. It ought not to be left to the Louisiana Legislature alone to decide upon the offer of the managers. The evil influence of the Lottery is spreading throughout the country. Workmen turn their savings into it, many their whole earnings, and it has been the cause of more than one suicide. If Louisiana will not abolish it while the opportunity is hers, let the citizens of the country abolish it.—New York Catholic Review.

The Louisiana Lottery now offers one million dollars yearly for the renewal of their charter for twenty-five years—$350,000 to go to levees, $300,000 to public schools, $75,000 to insane, $150,000 to hospitals, $25,000 to deaf, dumb and blind, $100,000 to drainage of New Orleans. This is a large sum to offer for the privilege of conducting "a legitimate enterprise." But if Louisiana wants to debauch herself further in the Lottery, if she takes a cold-blooded business view of the matter, then why he content with one million a year when she could take hold of the Lottery herself and make ten millions a year? If it is proper to grant franchises to certain man to run a lottery, then it is not improper for the State to run it.—Yazoo (Miss.) Sentinel.

Two more Richmonds are in the field bidding for a lottery franchise. One offers $1,200,000 a year, and the other $1,000,000, without any monopoly. Our position is dead against them, as well as the indigenous monster. We oppose them all on principle. But what say the Lottery papers? If $1,000,000 a year is a good thing, $3,200,000 is a better one. The silence, on this subject, of the papers which were shouting "the necessities of the State" is becoming vociferous.—New Delta.

Missionary.

Mexico District, Central Mexican Conference.

The work in my district is moving on even better and more successfully than I felt at first I had reason or faith to expect. It is now evident that if we have the means, at our next District Conference my district will have to be divided, making a Toluca and a Mexico district. The constant strain on body, mind and heart is so great that we can not manage large districts here as we do at home, where preachers and people are trained. Here the presiding elder must look after everything and visit every place as often as possible. On last Sabbath I held service at eleven o'clock, and then traveled on horseback forty-two miles and held services again at night. I was so tired I could not sleep at night, and came home on Monday and was kept so busy all day that I could not take one hour's rest. Two facts lend inspiration to such efforts: the desire to save as many of the lost as possible, and a desire to make every cent of the sacred money sent for this work count for all it can.

This kind of labor, with our methods of travel and living, can not last long. However, I humbly trust I may never count myself anything, for I know that when I fail a stronger arm and a braver heart will be ready to take my place and do more for the blessed cause than I ever hoped or thought of.

Since my last letter we have received in the City of Mexico nine members and baptized one child. In Santa Maria we have received fifteen members, and in Toluca we have received eleven and baptized one child—a total of thirty-eight members received and two children baptized.

Please say to the Holy Family that all Protestant ministers recognize and support their families, and that of the two hundred and thirty-eight members received and the fifty-four children baptized, not one of them was a foreigner, but all are genuine Mexicans, and are making good Christians and loyal citizens. Yours,

J. M. WEEMS.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars. Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

PUBLIC SAFETY
DEMANDS

That only honest and reliable medicines should be placed upon the market. It cannot, therefore, be stated too emphatically, nor repeated too often, that all who are in need of a genuine Blood-purifier should be sure and ask for

Ayer's

Sarsaparilla. Your life, or that of some one near and dear to you, may depend on the use of this well-approved remedy in preference to any other preparation of similar name. It is compounded of Honduras sarsaparilla (the variety most rich in curative properties), stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, and the iodides. The process of manufacture is original, skilful, scrupulously clean, and such as to secure the very best medicinal qualities of each ingredient. This medicine is not boiled nor heated, and is, therefore, not a decoction; but it is a compound extract, obtained by a method exclusively our own, of the best and most powerful alteratives, tonics, and diuretics known to pharmacy. For the last forty years, Ayer's has been the standard blood-purifier of the world—no other approaching it in popular confidence or universal demand. Its formula is approved by the leading physicians and druggists. Being pure and highly concentrated, it is the most economical of any possible blood medicine. Every purchaser of Sarsaparilla should insist upon having this preparation and see that each bottle bears the well-known name of

J. C. Ayer & Co.,
Lowell, Mass.

In every quarter of the globe Ayer's Sarsaparilla is proved to be the best remedy for all diseases of the blood. Lowell druggists unite in testifying to the superior excellence of this medicine and to its great popularity in the city of its manufacture.

Editorial Correspondence.

The closing days of the session are marked by the fact, that every morning after the Minutes are read quite a number of members ask for leave of absence "during the remainder of the session." This is evidence of a waning interest in the proceedings of the body. At least, it shows that the interest somewhere else is greater and has a controling power. The last days developed unrest and impatience. They always do. The disposition to instantly adopt or summarily table reports, upon which committees had done patient and careful work, characterized the few remaining days. The hurry to get away is not favorable to wise legislation. This fact may account for what some will regard as unwise measures adopted or wise measures indefinitely postpoued.

The election of connexional officers was completed on Monday. They are as follows: Christian Advocate, Nashville, E. E. Hoss, editor—E. M. Bounds, assistant editor; the Pacific Coast paper, H. P. Walker, editor; missionary secretaries, I. G. John, A. Coke Smith and H. C. Morrison; book agents, J. D. Barbee and D. M. Smith: church extension, D. Morton, secretary—J. C. Morris, assistant secretary; Sunday-school secretary, W. G. E. Cunnyngham.

The name of the Central Mexican Mission Conference was changed to Central Mexico Mission Conference. Two new Conferences were formed—New Mexico Conference and Western North Carolina Conference. The boundary line between the Louisiana and Little Rock Conferences, was made to conform to the State line.

Many other changes of more or less importance were made, of which our readers will be informed, when we can get hold of the official acts.

The session was saddened by the death of two members of the Conference: Dr. Nathan Scarritt, of the Southwest Missouri Conference, and Dr. James E. Mann, of the North Carolina Conference. Appropriate resolutions were passed and memorial services were held for these lamented brethren.

The next to the last motion made was that the General Conference should meet the first Thursday in May, 1894. Then came the motion to adjourn sine die, the gavel fell and the Conference of 1890 ceased to exist. Thus ended the eleventh session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Monday, May 26, nine P. M.

Then the scattering began; ministers and laymen bidding each other a hurried good-by, as each departed to his own place. The Louisiana delegation, with the exception of two, left in a body. When we went up we were one night and one day and part of a day on the way; in returning we were two nights and one day. The return trip was made without much fatigue, the only points of interest being a good breakfast at Holly Springs, and a dinner at Jackson, Miss., which would have made Delmonico go into "conniptions." It was like Pharaoh's "lean kine;" "there is none in all the land like it for badness," and it cost each of us seventy-five cents.

Wednesday morning, eight A. M., found us all at home again, greeted heartily by loved ones and friends.

Here endeth these letters.

Disciplined to Conquer.

"We gain the force we overcome."—Emerson.

That there is a correlation of forces in nature will be admitted by the most cursory thinker on scientific subjects, and every person who has aught to do with the subject in practical fields is by virtue of such knowledge and to that extent an economist of nature's wealth in this department of her being. But those who look a little farther into the great scheme of blessing which completes our material investiture are rewarded with a far richer discovery, and that is, that there is a great conflict of forces (not vague, but definite; not a seeming, but a real contest) proceeding about us, like armies of battling giants, whose spear volleys darken the sky, and that apparently pile planetary systems over each other climbing toward a heavenly objective; and discern just as clearly that out of this war of ultimate principles must come that radical economy of force which shall make for both man and the world a destiny equal to their sublime origin. There is, for instance, the centripetal power, so called, wrestling with the centrifugal, in which they fall over each other upon a great plane of sphere-balancing, not only unhurt, but smilingly ready for another encounter in which they shall mutually put forth new reserves of power; and then there is the ecliptical contest for precedence in the march of worlds, as though our sun would, by sheer force of obliquity, elbow Sirius to the rear, and vice versa; thus by a comminutive process grinding out force as a rock-mill its heated grist, and for which we are assured the world-systems move faster and shine with a sweeter radiance, of which we must make account; to say nothing of many far subtler manifestations of the subject. The force of attraction, we have some reason to believe, is the recoil of awful energy that there is in the force of light, since the law of the propagation and distribution of these two forces negative each other; but what if that which we have affected to discover here should be, instead, heat wrestling with some polar solitude of the universal system and gradually sequestrating its domain and drawing it warmed and envitalized up into a beneficent partnership with itself; and how much less would it strongly illustrate our position?

But, to come down to every-day prosing and a common-sense application of this truth to the needs of the race, see the man who conquers in the arena to-day triumphing over a more muscular antagonist to-morrow, and the man who was defeated to-day being forever retired from rivalry on the same plane of contention. Or, to take it into a still lower realm, behold the equine athlete constantly gaining upon himself, or beating the record, and as constantly distancing, by an accelerated rush apparently secured by their defeat, all his competitors of the arena. And "every victory gained will help you to win another" is as true in manners and morals as it is in nature.

In the effort at self-control the man who wrestles with Satan and throws him will not only have scored a victory whose mere memory will help him to win other battles, but he will have taken up into his soul, by the effort of will and reason, no small modicum of the power in which his enemy trusted to despoil him. The pioneers wage war upon the western wilderness to evoke from it a power and genius of conquest that makes them pre-eminent in the mechanical and political sciences, or they fight with savages to gather up from their defeat those crude forces which hurled against disciplined armies with equal skill and courage will cause them to stagger and fall backward like the mob of Judas under the glance of the Omnipotent. Thus, by their own admission, Europeans can not compete with Americans in the useful sciences or in eloquent speech or in marvelous inventions; and in a yet sterner field of competition, when the United States was a mere infant, she gave to her mighty ancestor, a Hercules among the nations, a trouncing that will not cease to be remembered with bitterness as long as the prefix "Great" adheres to the national name and fame.

In Christianity it is certainly true that the man who climbs to the top of the hill is stronger after he reaches the eminence and not weaker, which would be the case if the converse of this proposition were true. The Christianity that had to toil over high mountains and through vast wildernesses in the early history of this country, battling with nature and the elements in a sustained effort to reach its objective, was the best type of Christianity which, perhaps, the world ever saw. Before its march, the republic of doubt went down, and, in the face of incalculable odds it caused both the polite Jeffersonian and the brutal Tom Paine types of infidelity to disappear in a single generation. The Christianity that fights to live in the great West is a sturdy stock, and nowhere is there a warmer pulse of religious life than at those missionary extremes of the Christian body which connect "the fountain filled with blood" with the great reservoir of heathendom.

It is not an accident in the scheme of grace which invests the Christian with warriorhood, and reveals him to us, by the familiar photography of inspiration, as dying in breaches and leading forlorn hopes. If he bears sword and shield, it signifies that he is not only to "resist unto blood," but to contend unto victory. Thus St. Paul goes from strength to strength, battling with his enemies and his Lord's, with single-handed prowess putting whole armies to flight, until at length he dies on the hard-won field, shouting in the ears of a routed foe who dare not turn back to question the voice—"I have fought a good fight."

Briefly, then, lest we should become prolix, there are three empires which the Christian must subdue in order that he may be a complete conqueror—the empire of self, the empire of the world, and the empire of Satan, and he must vanquish them in this order, that the former may become his allies in the supernatural labor of making conquest of the latter. "I force my body under," is the earliest achievement, and greater is he who compasses it than he who takes a fortified city; and the second is, "The world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world," and greater is he that can employ this boast than Alexander or Bonaparte, or all mere subduers of the sense-world; and the last which St. Paul foreshadows in the utterance, "And the Lord shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly," is the final victory to which not even conquest of self and the world, a marvelous reinforcement of mere finite powers, could entitle us to, if God himself did not come to our rescue. So that such a task having been appointed for us, we may say in language that could scarcely sound less divine if it were uninspired, "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places," not to suffer defeat, but to acquire those conditions of skill and strength by which we shall surely conquer and obtain a crown of life.

A Word to the Wise.

During the week past we received a fervid communication from one of our leading laymen in the interior of the State, calling the Times-Democrat, of this city, to account for its temerity in publishing in one of its recent Sunday issues a literary article reflecting on that church which has been foremost in all educational and religious reforms in this age and community; and for its general policy of non-indorsement or reprobation of everything that is progressive in current Christianity, at the same time calling upon Methodists everywhere to cease patronizing it, both by subscription and advertisement.

Accompanying this article was a short letter from an esteemed clerical brother, asking that it be admitted to our columns, and suggesting, in a mild way, that it would require a considerable degree of courage in the editorial substitute to discharge this duty. Now, as to the last statement, we beg to say that it is almost too late in life for the writer to lay the foundation of a reputation for disposing of difficulties by seizing them by the horns, even if there were not moments in the history of great subjects and of men of all sizes and conditions, when a very small amount of prudence would outweigh a whole ton of the most aggressive kind of fighting quality; and as to the principal subject for which it furnishes a lively exhortation, that we are utterly opposed in principle to the practice of boycotting either men or measures, and that if there is any happiness to be found in that sort of thing, we are quite willing to grant a monopoly of it to the Times-Democrat and its coadjutors, great and small. If they can get either money or balm out of it, they are surely entitled to it in a country that is so free that it places no interdiction upon either folly or its senseless agents, and that it allows Christians of every shade to sink themselves by a well-illustrated process of self-repression far out of reach both of shafts of envy and of bolts of malice. But, we repeat, as a matter of policy, a man should be in a good working or fighting majority before he boycotts anything, even though it were a newspaper without a soul, and even though he were an Irishman, or that veritable wearer of the green, who, upon arriving upon our shores and learning that there was a government in existence, said, with a saintly adjuration, "I'm agin it." Let us have peace by peaceable means until we are able to conquer it, and then it will be ours without a campaign or a blow. Now, as to the Times-Democrat, we have a confession to make, and it is to the effect that, by the space of several years, we have obtained almost the whole of our secular periodical reading from its columns, and, while we do not remember to have found a positively religious sentiment in the course of its moralizing upon all subjects, we have found much that was respectful to both churches and ministers, and, as to social proprieties, that the article in question, which accompanied our brother's communication, is about the broadest lapse that we remember to have seen, though its columns certainly do abound with all sorts of eulogistic accounts of gamblers and gambling sports. This the suppressed contribution insists upon, and nobody with eyes or sensibilities could deny it; but it is just as true that the reportorial eloquence of the T.-D. is paid for and delivered in quantities to suit, and that it can never be boycotted from its position by those whom taste and education have long compelled to resort to other quarters for their supplies of sentiment, and who, moreover, are so little united upon any question not affecting their autonomy as a religious body, that both politicians and their puppets count it a virtue to leave them out of their estimates. But though we read the paper in question, and quite as much from necessity as choice, yet we do not read the Sunday Times-Democrat—no, not so much as a paragraph in a twelve-month—and until our brother, whose character we certainly revere, has satisfactorily explained to us how he secured so much approved every-day reading out of the Sunday newspaper without breaking the Sabbath or endorsing the morals of the journal he condemns, we have courage to write no more than the foregoing. But let us say, seriously, while on this subject, that there is something worse for newspapers than boycotting by individuals or churches, and that is aroused and indignant public sentiment; and if the Times-Democrat does not speedily give up its advocacy of the legalized robbing scheme that has already reduced the State, to which it owes service, to pauperhood, and retired the city in which it is published from a second to a fifth rank among the municipalities of the nation, it must expect to lose its Christian patronage of all sorts and degrees, and in all quarters, upon quite other grounds.

Dryades Street Church.

After being closed some time for repairs, the auditorium of this church was re-opened for public worship on last Sunday. Services were held at eleven A. M. and half-past three P. M. Owing to the inclemency of the weather, only a fair number attended; but both occasions proved delightful and inspiring to those present.

The morning services opened with the Doxology—"Praise God from whom all blessings flow." Prayer was offered by Bishop J. C. Keener. The sermon was preached by the pastor, Rev. Alfred E. Clay, from Gen. xxviii, 17, and was an able and comprehensive exposition of the text. Bishop Keener then made a few felicitous and encouraging remarks, which held the profound attention of the assemblage. After singing the Doxology, the congregation was dismissed with the benediction by the Bishop.

The afternoon services were a fitting conclusion of the events of the day. After prayer by Dr. R. Q. Mallard, of Napoleon Avenue Presbyterian Church, the lesson was read by Rev. F. N. Parker. The pastor announced as his text, "I beseech thee, shew me thy glory." The sermon was an intellectual and spiritual treat, and the hearts of the congregation were deeply stirred as the Word of God was expounded. It was, indeed, "a feast of reason and a flow of soul." After the discourse, the pastor rededicated the church to the service of God. A collection followed, and a good amount was raised. Rev. J. T. Sawyer offered the closing prayer, and, the benediction being pronounced by Dr. Mallard, an eventful day in the history of the church came to a close.

About $2,000 have been expended in renovating and beautifying the interior of the church, and, as a result, the auditorium presents a most ornate and modern appearance. And the good work goes on. It is the intention to cement and paint the outer walls and make other improvements, estimated to cost $1,000.

The consecrated efforts and self-denial of the devoted pastor and congregation, with the assistance of friends and well-wishers, have done much, under God, to revive the material interest and quicken the zeal of Dryades Street Church, and great things are expected in the future.

Notes.

St. Paul was never elected to office.

The Lottery dies hard, but it must go.

Let us have more politics and fewer politicians.

Let a man be duly conservative if he would grow old in office.

For a preacher with an unlimited commission there is room in the West.

College presidents and professors and even editors were not forgotten at St. Louis.

The Easterners and the big Conferences plucked all the honors this time. Quite inadvertently, no doubt.

The Lottery advocates are pained because the Lottery question can not be made a side issue at Baton Rouge.

There may be honest doubters as to the existence of the other kind, but who can doubt that there is a lottery devil.

The Lottery advocates claim that the Lottery is scriptural. Certainly, there was an institution of this kind on Mount Calvary.

The man who proceeds on the theory that there is no devil will find a good many large surprises as he meanders judgmentward.

Now that we have enlarged our machinery and increased our working contingent, let us pile on steam and roll prairieward.

If there is no Satan, there is no Christ; and if there is no hell, there is no heaven. Of these correlates we are scripturally certain.

A session of the General Conference costs the church twenty-seven thousand dollars. But, then, it only meets once in four years.

There are two phases in the development of every great preacher, viz: the word period, the image period and the thought period.

My brother, if you and I can escape into heaven, we will want to forget that we ever candidated or were candidated for earthly office.

The fact that there are so many cowards in the world is partly accounted for by the other fact that there are so few conscience.

Of all the "ins" who were left "out" in the reorganization at St. Louis, upon second thought, we do not recall one. This is either as it should be or it is not.

A new Bishop and a new paper for the Pacific slope will throw the center of gravity far to westward. Let the man with a note-book remember that it was in the year of grace 1890 that Southern Methodism drew on her seven-leagued boots and began the race for Western empire.

Our whole delegation to St. Louis—second to none which appeared upon that historic floor—returned on Tuesday night somewhat the worse for wear. None of them were candidates; and even if they had been, they are more than quits, for while the General Conference overlooked them they looked over it, and that, too, with conquerors' men.

All honor to the gentlemen from Pointe Coupee—Messrs Provosty and Batchelor—who are insensible alike to bribes and threats. When did they cease to represent the great State of Louisiana, and begin to champion a small and obscure corner of her overflowed district? Pointe Coupee is excited, perhaps, but she must try and forget herself at "a time that tries men's souls," and do what she can to save the commonwealth.

The great Disposer knew where to send the negro when he proposed by moral assimilative processes to civilize and Christianize him. Neither can anybody persuade our brother in black that he is not welcome to stay in the South—his home for many generations—as well as to vote and carry a shotgun. But what puzzles us no little about this vexed problem is the fact that our Northern brethren, while professing to believe that the Southern whites are barbarians, and the Southern blacks hopefully progressive towards civilization, provide the latter with the gospel and have only ill-tempered advice for the former. "Let there be equality" is both reason and Scripture.

"If the Lottery can buy the newspapers of the State of Louisiana and bribe its Legislature now, what could it do a quarter of a century from now, or at the close of the period of its proposed oligarchy?"—N. O. CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

The above question furnishes food for thought to those who are at all interested in the welfare of Louisiana. Those who are disinterested in the perpetual existence of the now all-absorbing scheme see degradation in its every phase; political, moral and religious degradation. * * * The only salvation we see for her is that her sons assert their manhood and consign the Lottery to its rightful place in oblivion. With its present hold on the State it is a hard fight to get rid of it, but with an additional twenty-five years the poisonous graft will have taken such a hold that the State will be at its merciless orders. * * * —The Mirror.

Personal and Otherwise.

We have received a long communication from Bro. A. D. Miller, Cato, Miss., in reply to "Circuit Rider," which seems to us to be a full reply to the vague charges made against him as to his relations with his presiding elder by this anonymous brother; but the General Conference pre-emption upon our space forbids its publication. We trust that this will be an end of the matter.

The money raised by Dr. Hopkins, of Lafayette, for Bro. E. B. Foust is in safe hands, we learn, by a letter from Monroe, and will be forwarded to him.

NEW IBERIA DEMOCRAT.—We have received the first number, and placed it on our exchange list. It is bright, newsy, and pronouncedly anti-Lottery. We wish it success.

Rev. Fitzgerald Parker, of New Iberia, is visiting home folks and some haunts of other days. He is to deliver one of the literary addresses at the Mansfield commencement.

Bishop A. G. Haygood will preside over the next session of the Louisiana Annual Conference, which meets at Monroe, December 3.

Drs. C. W. Carter and C. F. Evans left on Saturday to spend commencement week at Centenary. The former will preach the commencement sermon, June 1, and the latter will address the Y. M. C. A. on the evening of the same day.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. J. A. Bowen writes from Aberdeen, Miss.: "Rev. J. H. Mitchell, pastor of our church at Macon, Miss., and his wife are greatly bereaved. Their second daughter "Lucille" died May 21: age, nearly six years. She was the greatest little sufferer I ever saw. The bereaved parents have the sympathy of the good people of Macon and the North Mississippi Conference."

—Rev. R. A. Burroughs reports from Okolona station, North Mississippi Conference: "We have just closed one of the best revivals ever held in Okolona. The church is now in a fine condition. Sixteen were added to the membership, making twenty-six since Conference. We have just put some repairs on the church-building, making it a thing of beauty. Bro. K. A. Jones did all the preaching during the meeting, and won all hearts to him. I can not be satisfied until Okolona is brought to Christ. Pray for us."

—Rev. J. R. Whittington writes from Bluffstown, May 27, 1890: "My work is still moving along nicely, and congregations very large and attentive, and the outlook from every standpoint good. Found in an isolated part of my work fifteen Methodist children attending a Sunday-school taught by a Baptist lady and studying Baptist literature. But I organized a Methodist Sunday-school and secured our own literature, and to-day have a Sunday-school of seventy-five, with several Baptist children; so I have turned the tables. I have eight preaching-places and preach ten times a month. Am looking forward for a glorious revival this year."

—Rev. G. E. Greene writes: "Please publish this week or next a list of the anti-Lottery papers published in Louisiana. I am continually taunted by the T.-D.'s report that only nine papers are on our side. Is this so? [We have not time to do this. But the statement is not even approximately correct.—ED. We are fighting the Lottery here in Jackson parish. Our league is organized, and growing. Rev. O. R. Hearn, of Dailey P. O., is our president; Mr. J. B. Aswell, secretary. We mean war, war for 'a thousand years,' as Bro. J. L. Wright says. Please publish our resolutions; it is rather difficult to find a paper up here that has space(?) enough."

—Rev. M. L. Burton reports from Wesley Chapel, Natchez: "The Lord has been with us during the year. About twenty or twenty-five members received to date. Sunday-school very good; prayer meeting well attended; congregations large and, I trust, appreciative. We want to get on a higher plane of living. I believe there is a good spirit pervading the whole church. Only a very few who are not socially easy and willing to treat others as they would be treated. A few of our young members love the ball-room too well. The social drink bars the gate to the spiritual happiness of some of our members. Well up financially. Pray for us, that Wesley Chapel may grow and become a power for good in and around this city."

—Rev. J. A. Randolph writes: "We have just closed one of the best meetings I ever saw. Jonestown has been stirred as never before. First, there was a fine work in the church. Like every church in this Delta with which we are acquainted, except Greenville, the church in Jonestown had many worldly minded members—people who dance, attend theatres, play cards, etc.; but to-day, I believe, she has not one. The pastor had joined the issue with worldliness, and was determined that those who loved the world more than God must get out of the church, yet, desiring the salvation of the offending parties, held the matter in abeyance till the meeting. Assisted by Bros. George S. Inge and J. W. Beville, we commenced last week, and the power of the Highest came down and swept the town like a tidal wave. Every offender boldly confessed and promised never to do so again. The fire spread and many sinners were converted, among them quite a number of our most prominent citizens. Among them one who is not only prominent in his State, but in the government as well, having been brigadier-general in the Confederate Army, governor of Mississippi and a member of the United States Senate—Gov. J. L. Alcorn. He with fifteen others were received into the Methodist Church. Others will follow, and there will be additions to other churches. Bro. Inge is inferior to no man in the South as a revivalist. We know whereof we speak, for we have heard the best of them. He is original, eloquent, sound, and full of the Holy Ghost. We pray that we may be able to continue this good work."

"Not Elected."

DR. CARTER: "Not Elected," in the last NEW ORLEANS, is superb. It is sharp; witty and wise, and "good to the use of edifying." Suppose you come up to the woman's missionary meeting here, June 28.

R. G. PORTER.

And now the pro tem. is in a big quandary. Is he more complimented by the words of the astute "Gilderoy" above, or in being mistaken for Dr. Carter, the sharp, witty and wise editor of the ADVOCATE.

A Tribute of Love and Respect

FROM THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF THE CARONDELET ST. CHURCH.

While we bow in submission to the will of our heavenly Father, and dare not question his love or wisdom, we at the same time deplore the loss we have sustained in the death of our valued friend and sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Valrin. The remembrance of her beautiful and consistent life, her readiness for every good work, her good sense in counsel when it was needed, will be enshrined in the hearts of those with whom she was so long associated, and, we hope, will prove an abiding incentive to greater activity in the mission work which she loved so well.

Monteagle Assembly and Summer Schools.

EIGHTH ANNUAL SESSION, JULY 1 to AUGUST 25, 1890.

Assembly Park open to Summer Residents from June 1.

MONTEAGLE, TENN., widely known as the "Southern Chautauqua," is on a mountain plateau or spur of the lower Cumberlands, reached by mountain railway, one hour from Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis R. R. at Cowan, Tenn.

Rising 2,000 feet above the sea level, dry, pure air, no malaria, no mosquitos, magnificent scenery and abundance of pure spring water, it is the great natural sanitarium of the Southwest.

With 100 acres of picturesque, wooded heights enclosed; with improved water-works, sewerage, daily mails, telegraph, public buildings, and near 100 cottages; with the annual Assembly Platform and Summer Schools, affording a continual feast, it is a quiet "lodge in the wilderness," having all the world within call.

Parties desiring cottages for the summer should make early application.

For full particulars as to rates, advantages, etc., or any information desired, address,

F. H. PEEBLES, Gen'l M'g'r.,
Monteagle, Tenn.

Notice.

All contributions and communications intended for the Transit and Building Fund Society of Bishop William Taylor's Self-Supporting Missions, should be sent to Richard Grant, treasurer, 181 Hudson St., New York.

Specialties are the order of the day. The oculist attends only to the eye, the surgeon only to operations, the milliner to bonnets, and the merchant now deals only in one style of goods. So with the manufacturer. Church and school furniture has become a specialty, and prominent among them stands the Wabash School Furniture Company, who make nothing else but Church and School Furniture, and they have got it down to such a fine point that they consult the anatomy of the human body and construct pews to fit, and as a consequence the old style of pews are a thing of the past. Pews are now finished as fine as parlor furniture, and are as comfortable as it is possible to make them. We take pleasure in calling attention to the card of Wm. H. Morrow, No. 8 Noel Block, Nashville, Tenn., who represents the firm above named, and who will be glad to send a catalogue, free, to anyone who will write to him.

It is well known among successful merchants that liberal advertising is indispensable to the economical and successful working of their establishments.—Price Current.

Invaluable to Clergymen of All Denominations—New Evangelical Work.

The Statistical Bureau of Religious Information was organized in the year 1880, and is principally devoted to a plan of obtaining the most accurate facts, in the most practical manner, as to the moral and spiritual condition of the people both of city and country in the interest of a larger church and Sunday-school attendance. This new evangelical work is the outcome of a plan suggested by the late Henry Ward Beecher. Its present efficiency has grown out of the experience of communities here and abroad in which it has been tested with the most fruitful results. The adoption thereof will enable the church both of city and country to enter every avenue of usefulness and make her presence felt in all grades of society.

Mention this paper.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to those worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

American Bible Society.

DR. HUNT'S ADDRESS TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Mr. President, Fathers and Brethren—I come to ask a few moments of your time, that I may state a few facts concerning one of the great departments of your labor. Long years ago, before the Methodist Episcopal Church was divided, the General Conference of the Methodist Church of America decided by its action taken at the General Conference of 1836, and completed at the General Conference of 1840, to do their Bible work through the American Bible Society. We have great reason to congratulate you and thank you for the interest you have taken in this department of Christian labor. Your contributions for the last four years have been steadily increasing. They ought to be larger. I believe there is not one among you who will carefully consider the relation of the work of the American Bible Society to all your great interests who will not respond to this statement and say they ought to be larger. I wish simply to call your attention to the fact that this society, though it is sustained by the various Christian denominations of the land, is in a very true sense the Bible Society of each denomination. This society is circulating at the present time about a million and a half of copies annually. It has already circulated nearly fifty-three millions of copies of the Word of God in about eighty different languages. It is aiding as truly as it knows how to aid every department of your Christian work. It is aiding you in your home missions; it is aiding you in your Sunday-school enterprises; it is aiding you as largely as it knows how to do in all your foreign mission work, and I do not know that there has ever been an application made to the American Bible Society for assistance in the foreign mission work coming within the lines of this society that has not been most cordially granted.

I do not believe that there has ever been a time when the Christian people of these United States have been more fully convinced than they now are that the American Bible Society is absolutely essential to the carrying on of the Christian work of our own land and of other lands.

When I say to you that this society has just completed the fourth general supply, that we have visited and supplied 757,000 families; when I say that we are scattering the Scriptures in our own land in many languages, it needs no amplification on my part to bring home to your hearts and your minds the importance of this great work. It is thoroughly fundamental, and when we talk about saving our land, we propose to keep clearly in mind the great fact that it must be saved by the power of the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, revealed in his sacred Word. So, dear brethren, I come to speak to you about one of your own enterprises, and to ask that you may take the few words of encouragement I shall venture to speak to you in relation to the steadily expanding work in all your fields.

There has never been a time when the work of the American Bible Society was so important in so far as the foreign mission work is concerned as now. When I first stood upon the platform of this General Conference in Atlanta, and presented the work of the American Bible Society, our foreign work was considerably less than one-half of what is to-day. It has expanded so largely that we have been obliged to employ our own agents in various parts of the American continent. We have an agent now in Cuba, we have an agent in Mexico, we have one in Brazil, we have one in Uruguay, we have one in Peru, we have had until quite recently one in Venezuela, one of your own members who died at his post—Dr. Patterson. And so this field has grown within these few years from one single paid agent of the American Bible Society in foreign fields. We had one mission or foreign field across the Atlantic, but we now have grown larger, so that instead of one we have them in Constantinople, in Persia, in China, in Japan, and, during the past year, one in Siam. These constantly growing demands must appeal to the Christian hearts of all people who are commissioned by God not only to save our own land, but to reach out their helping hands to the ends of the earth.

I will detain you for a few moments in order that I may group together two or three incidents which will, perhaps, better illustrate the matter that presents itself to my mind than anything else. I am detaining you for a long time, and I know very well the importance of hours as they pass. I think I may venture to ask your attention to the grouping of three facts.

Take, for instance, the constant opposition we have in Roman Catholic countries to the American Bible Society and to the British Foreign Bible Societies as well; in this constant opposition there has yet been developed along the line of the work of these two great societies in Europe and America an earnest longing on the part of the people for the Word of God.

The colporteur of this society in almost every country in Europe will meet with opposition; but God has been pleased so to touch the hearts of the people that they have said to themselves, "The Bible must be a good book after all."

The three points to which I ask your attention are illustrations from three great countries in Europe—Italy, France and Spain.

The Italian peninsula has had a revolution almost in the last quarter of a century touching the circulation of the Scriptures. The great societies that are laboring there have had larger demands than they ever deemed possible in our generation; and that is not all. God has touched the hearts of people who were not identified with our work, and who did not sympathize with it indeed. But one man, prominent in the literary world, an editor of one of the largest journals in Italy, has said to his people who gather about him, "I do not know much about the church, or care much about it, but one thing is certain, the Bible is the greatest book in the world for its history and its literature; and if we, as a nation, ever expect to be independent and intelligent, we must have the Bible." He proceeds at once to give the Bible to the people in numbers issued with beautiful illustrations sold at the low price of one single cent of our currency; and thousands and tens of thousands of copies of these numbers are circulated in Italy in this way. God is in it, brethren; give the Bible to the people. Give it to them so that they can read it and understand its history, and be brought nearer to the living truths that are there recorded. That is fact number one.

The second fact pertains to France. Here a Roman Catholic scholar, earnestly desiring to give the people the Bible in a better translation than they ever yet had had it—for the French Bible is in antique style—devotes himself for many years to a translation of the four Gospels in polished French. He secures the approbation of the Archbishop of Paris; he secures, as a loyal son of the church, the approbation of Leo XIII. He sends out his book, not at the expense of Christian churches that have sustained Bible societies; but just to show you the spirit of the man, let me read this single sentence from his preface. After finishing his work, he says:

"May God grant that in passing through our unworthy hands the work of the evangelists may have lost none of its life-giving power, and of its renewing virtue. Thus—oh! divine book—thyself unchanged under this new dress, appropriate to my time and nation, mayest thou impart knowledge of the living God to those who have forgotten him; strengthen the weak and wavering; comfort the troubled; restore hope to the despairing; give the faith of the coming kingdom and of illimitable and endless joy to those who are groaning in wretchedness here below. Go on, oh! holy word, and despite the imperfections of our work and the failures of our language, carry light into our minds and souls, carry love into our hearts, even as the sun, in spite of the mists and clouds that arise from the earth, unceasingly enlightens the world with its rays, and causes it to bring forth abundantly. Amen."

Pause and think for one moment, beloved, that this is the pen of a loyal son of the Church of Rome; that this is printed in a volume under the imprimatur of the Archbishop of Paris, and the Pope himself. Of course, such a thing is not to last long. Such a thing will soon come to the ears of him who sitteth in the Vatican, and he sends forth word in all haste that this new book must be withdrawn; that the church withdraws its sanction; but, thanks be unto him who inspired it! not until 100,000 copies had gone out among the French people under the imprimatur of the Pope himself.

Fact number three brings us into contact with Spain. It seems that this is, indeed, a very hard country to deal with. Our colporteurs have met with all forms of opposition; and yet every now and then there are tidings coming to us concerning the work of the Bible touching the hearts of the people. Very little did we think that God would open the way to Spain, as he has been doing within the past few years. He who ruleth over all can reach the heart of the Spaniard by going around the earth to do it just as easily as by sending a colporteur to Madrid, or any other town in Spain.

So it comes to pass that our secular journals four or five years ago were filled with the statement that war was pending between Germany and Spain because of an island far off in the Pacific. There came to us tidings from Spain that Castellar and his prime ministers of Spain had sought an interview with the Rev. Mr. ——, one of the representatives of the American Board in Spain, to ask if he would be kind enough to make some statement that might go to the press, touching the work of the Protestant missions in the Caroline Islands; and especially to report it in such a way that the people might have their minds enlightened touching the methods of Protestant mission work. Consider, dear friends, what a joy it must have been to that man who was reared in a mission home, himself the son of a missionary, waiting in Spain now for many years to have an opportunity to say just the things which this high dignitary asked him to say. He prepares his reports in his best way. Castellar puts them into the secular journals; they are copied into other secular journals throughout Spain. Editorials from secular pens—nearly all of them, of course, leaning toward Rome—take up the theme, and they make comparisons between the grand success of the Protestant Mission of these Caroline Islands and the failures of the mission of the Roman Catholic Church in many parts of the world. They emphasize the fact that the Bible has been translated by the American Bible Society, and given to this very island of Ponopea, for which Spain has taken the Rev. Mr. Doane, an American missionary, and imprisoned him, first upon a ship and then upon a distant island, and now there comes back a wave of public opinion from Spain, saying: "Believe this man; carry him back to his place. This is no work for Spain talking about liberty, to take such a man away from his field." Spanish ships go back with him to Ponopea, and in a few brief weeks we receive at the American Bible Society a request for a large invoice of Ponopea Scriptures, to be given to the people, with a few Spanish Bibles, for there are a few Spanish soldiers here, who will, perhaps, take them. The next letter comes, and it comes promptly: "Send me a new invoice, and this time let them be nearly all Spanish Scriptures, for the Spaniards are asking for them and are willing to pay for them. They not only want them for themselves, but want to send them home to Spain." So time after time we have been receiving these applications, and when I made a similar statement to this on a platform in California, a few months ago, a gentleman came to me at the close of the service, and said, "Have you heard from the Bible Society within a week?" I said, "Not within three weeks." I have in my possession, as the person who has charge of transporting all things that go from the American Board to our missionaries in the Pacific Islands, four large cases of Spanish Scriptures, to be sent to the Caroline Islands, to be sent back to Spain by colporteurs whom God has appointed, who are the Spanish soldiers, sending over the Spanish Scriptures to Spain, and reaching families where our colporteurs could not have reached them in many years. Dear brethren, there is enough, of course, in any one of these points, but I have only given you the outlines. See how they group themselves together—how God is taking care of this work. God has designed it; the Church of God is his, and what it has done in other days it is doing now, and will continue to do to the end of all time.

Mr. President, I would be glad if I might take a few moments to refer to the work that is more especially yours. I sometimes sit in my quiet office and I thank God for what you are doing in Mexico and in Brazil, and I wish God would fill your missionary treasury full to overflowing, so that you might multiply your forces in Mexico, and they would overflow in that field, and you might move on steadily, God being your leader, and take this whole North American continent for Christ. We will stand by you and give you the Scriptures that you need, if you will only stand by us and do your share in helping to supply them. Then there is one other thing that comes to my mind, talking about North and South, and the points of the compass indicating the methods of doing the work; I am glad to remember that the Methodist Episcopal Church has planted its banners down south in Uruguay. We are moving up on the Western Coast. We have taken hold of Peru, weakly, I grant you, for we haven't money enough to do what we want to do. You will move south, we will meet you heart and hand; there will be no friction, and we will go down until, if need be, we will cross the isthmus and meet you, you coming from the North and we from the South; we will meet you and shake hands on this South American field, for God is making it all ripe for the harvest. But, brethren, let us stand shoulder to shoulder. We have one of your royal men in Brazil, we had another in Venezuela; he fell at his post in August last. We want another good man for the place; as the work extends we want more and more good men. May God raise them up everywhere; but this continent is ours. I do not mean it belongs to Methodism; I mean it belongs to Christ—to Protestant Christianity. I do mean to say that, in the providence of God, he seems to have committed to your charge a special work touching this Spanish-speaking population of this continent. May God make you true to it and give you all the help that you need to perform it.

So, then, dear brethren, I thank you for your patience. It is a very dangerous thing to call the secretary of a Bible Society on a platform before such a body. I have always had warm greetings from you, and I thank you for it, and my heart overflows more and more each year with a deep conviction that if we are going to save the world we must save it on the Bible platform.

Beloved, this is a great heritage God has given us, but it is an awful responsibility that he has put upon the Christian people of this land. There is but one way to meet it; we must give the people salvation through a sacrificed and risen Lord. May God help us to be true to the Bible always.

At the conclusion of Dr. Hunt's address the Conference joined in singing Hymn No. 132:

"All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall!"

The following resolution, offered by John S. Candler and H. H. Parks, was unanimously adopted.

Resolved, That we have heard the message of Dr. Hunt, secretary of the American Bible Society, with great pleasure, and we pledge him our support and co-operation, and bid him God-speed in his great work.

H. H. PARKS,
J. S. CANDLER.

On motion the Conference adjourned with the benediction by Dr. A. S. Hunt.

LIFE'S HISTORY:

Its Smiles and Tears. Such is the course of life, made up of sunshine and gloom, gladness and sorrow, riches and poverty, health and disease. We may dispel the gloom, banish the sorrow and gain riches; but sickness will overtake us, sooner or later. Yet, happily, that enemy can be vanquished; pains and aches can be relieved; there is a balm for every wound, and science has placed it within the reach of all. There is no discovery that has proven so great a blessing as Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills. In malarial regions, where Fever and Ague, Bilious Diseases and ailments incident to deranged liver prevail, they have proven an inestimable boon, as a hundred thousand living witnesses testify.

Second Quarter—Studies in Luke.

LESSON XI.—June 15.

THE RICH MAN'S FOLLY.

Luke xii. 13-21.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Take heed, and beware of covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. —Luke xii. 15.

13. One of the company—Evidently not a disciple, but some random hearer, whose mind had been working in him during our Lord's last sayings about the care of Providence for his friends. He thought this was just the care his circumstances wanted; being, as appears, oppressed by his brother. Possibly, too, he had an idea that the great Rabbi to whom he was listening was come to set all things right, and, with that feeling which we all have of the surpassing injustice of our own wrongs, broke out with this inopportune request. The words of the petitioner suggest that he was a younger son, who, on his father's death, claimed from his elder brother more than the share which, according to the usual practice of a double portion for the first-born, of right belonged to him.

14. Man, who made me a judge—"My kingdom is not of this world." John xviii. 36. It is not his business, and therefore impliedly not the business of the church, to undertake the settlement of personal secular disputes. His work and that of his followers is to instill such principles and produce such a spirit among men that they will peaceably settle their own disputes.

15. Beware of covetousness. Both the Old and New Testament abound with repetitions of this warning. Balaam, Achan, Gehazi are awful examples of this sin in the Old Testament; Judas Iscariot, the Pharisees and Ananias in the New. For a man's life consisteth not —This clause, which is assigned as a reason for the caution, implies that the cause of all covetousness is a deteriorated moral sense, which regards possession as more than character; having as more than being. For a comparison of the two kinds of wealth, that of property and that of character, see 1. Tim. vi. 9-11. The commonness of this disease among men is indicated by the question so often asked, What is he worth? as though men's worth were measured by the value of the purse.

17. And he thought within himself—The parable, like that of the good Samaritan, reads like an actual history. There is dramatic vividness in the rich man's soliloquy. It was the very "superfluity" of the man's goods that became a new cause of anxiety. What shall I do—Other men are perplexed to get wealth; this man is perplexed to dispose of it. I have no room where to bestow—Thou hast barns—the bosoms of the poor, the houses of widows, the mouths of infants...these are the barns which will last forever. My fruits—So "my barns," "my fruits and my goods," and "my soul." This touch is evidently intended, and is most vividly natural. So Nabal says, "Shall I then take my bread, and my water, and my flesh that I have killed for my shearers."

18. I will pull down my barns—The Greek noun has a somewhat wider meaning, and includes store-houses or warehouses of all kinds. His barns then are not, as they often were among the Jews, caves of the earth or rocks. They are tall buildings, but he must have still more spacious ones. All my fruits—Literally, produce—that is, crops of every kind. The four-times-repeated my—my fruits, my barns, my fruits, my goods—strikes the key-note of his selfishness. My goods—The heathen philosophers, especially the Stoics, denied that perishable things should be called goods. But to this man they were, indeed, "my goods." They were his life, than which he knew no life higher, and which he considered to consist in the abundance of his possession.

19. For many years—"Boast not thyself of to-morrow." Great abundance of riches can not of any man be both gathered and kept without sin. Take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry—More energetically in the four words of the original: rest, eat, drink, enjoy. Indolence, gluttony, drunkenness, and licentiousness; in these four things lie this man's conception of life.

20. But God said—The man had had his say; there is now a higher Being who puts in a word. Thou fool—Literally, Senseless! In biblical language the true fool is the man who wants the moral sense; that is, the proper good sense in moral or religious matters. Required of thee—The literal translation would be, not "Thy soul shall be required" (passive), but "they" (God's agencies of life and death) "shall require thy soul of thee." As if it was a loan which is now to be paid back. The reader should note the pungent force given to this parable by the repetition of the word "soul." First, the rich man talks to himself, "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years;" but God replied, "This night they shall require of thee thy soul!" The soul which thou hast congratulated as so well-to-do—so ripe for a long career of happiness—God has called for, and all those goods are left behind! Then whose shall those things be—The words indicate one of the disturbing thoughts that vex the souls of the wealthy. "He heapeth up riches, and knoweth not who shall gather them."

21. Whose case is portrayed in this parable? "So is every one who layeth up treasure for himself and is not rich toward God." God's rich man and man's rich man may be paupers to each other. To be "rich toward God" finds its explanation in the language, probably suggested by it, which bids us to be "rich in good works."

Mr. P. D. D. Delacrnx, Cypremort P. O., La. Nov. 20, 1888, says: "Three years ago an agent representing Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar came into my store. Being busy, was unable to give him any time. Before leaving he gave me a sample bottle of Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, asking me to give it to anyone suffering with a cough or cold. Several days afterward I caught a heavy cold. Remembering the sample, thought I would try it. Six teaspoonfuls cured me. Ordered a supply at once, and have sold it with satisfaction to all. It acts like magic on all my family, and I would not be without it. I take pleasure in recommending it at all times." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles Sermons.

There are two ways of regarding a sermon—either as a human composition or a divine message. If we look upon it entirely as the first, and require our clergymen to finish it with the utmost care and learning for our better delight, whether of ear or intellect, we shall be necessarily led to expect much formality and stateliness in its delivery, and think that all is not well if the pulpit have not a golden fringe around it, and a goodly cushion in front of it; but we shall at the same time consider the treatise thus prepared as something to which it is our duty to listen without restlessness for half an hour or three-quarters, but which, when that duty has been decorously performed, we may dismiss from our minds in happy confidence of being provided with another when next it shall be necessary. But if once we begin to regard the preacher, whatever his faults, as a man sent with a message to us, which it is a matter of life or death whether we hear or refuse; if we look upon him as set in charge over many spirits in danger of ruin, and having allowed to him but an hour or two in the seven days to speak to them; if we make some endeavor to conceive how precious those hours ought to be to him—a small advantage on the side of God, after his flock have been exposed for six days together to the world's temptations, and he has been forced to watch the thorn and the thistle springing up in their hearts, and to see what wheat he had scattered there snatched from the wayside by this wild bird and the other; and at last, when breathless and weary with the week's labor, they give him this interval of imperfect and languid hearing, he has but thirty minutes to get at the separate hearts of a thousand men to convince them of all their weakness, shame them for all their sins, warn them of all their dangers, to try by this way and that to stir the hard fastening of those doors where the Master himself has stood and knocked, yet none opened—thirty minutes to raise the dead in! Let us but once understand and feel this, and we shall look with changed eyes upon that frippery of gay furniture about the place from which the message of judgment must be delivered, which either breathes upon the dry bones that they may live, or, if ineffectual, remain recorded in condemnation, perhaps against the utterer and listener alike, but assuredly against one of them.—John Ruskin.

Look into Things.

"What is agreeable to nature is also consonant with reason."

"Look into things, and see what they are made of, as well as what they subserve."

This is precisely what we desire you to do. Investigate our Compound Oxygen Treatment, learn what it is made of, and what it subserves.

We shall be pleased to aid you in your researches, and to furnish abundant evidence. If you find it "agreeable to nature," it will be "consonant with reason" to try it.

We are permitted to refer, among many other prominent individuals, to the following well-known Philadelphians: Rev. V. L. Conrad, Ed. "Lutheran Observer;" Mr. E. C. Knight, Edward L. Wilson, Ed. "Philadelphia Photographer," and a host of others.

For further information, write for our book on Compound Oxygen, its nature, discovery and results. It will fully repay the trouble. It contains among other interesting reading matter, numerous testimonials from patients who have been cured of various diseases. Sent free.

There are numerous imitations. The only genuine Compound Oxygen is that of DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa., or 120 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

A cloud-burst flooded Arcadia, Wis., on May 22. Two mill dams and one mill were swept away. One person was drowned.

Colonel Wm. Preston Johnston was appointed as Louisiana's vice-president in the Scotch-Irish Congress in convention at Pittsburg. Bishop Hugh Miller Thompson was Mississippi's representative.

Memorial Day was observed in this city on May 30, and the Union dead in Chalmette National Cemetery were honored. The white and colored Posts of the G. A. R. held separate services.

The most striking feature of the work of the Supreme Court of the United States during the term ended last Friday was the large number and variety of cases involving a construction of the interstate commerce clause of the federal constitution. Another feature was the large and increasing number of habeas corpus cases before the court. Four hundred and sixty cases were disposed of.

The great Exposition Building, in Fort Worth, was burned on May 30. A large number of people were crushed and trampled on while making their escape. One life was lost, while several persons are seriously hurt. The loss is estimated at $100,000.

A local passenger train connecting at Oakland with the ferry-boats from San Francisco plunged through an open draw-bridge. At least twenty-six persons were drowned or crushed to death.

The Lee Monument, in Richmond, was unveiled with elaborate ceremony on May 29. Many ex-Confederate officers and privates were present, and, with visiting military from the South, made a grand parade. Col. Anderson was orator of the day. Gen. Joseph E. Johnston unveiled the equestrian statue.

Rev. Sam Small, the noted Southern evangelist, has been elected president of the Methodist University in Ogden, Utah. This necessitates severing his connection with the Methodist Church, South, and affiliating with the Northern Methodists.

The New Orleans Sanitary Auxiliary Association formally inaugurated the public bath movement, on May 31, by accepting the Louisiana Lottery Company's donation of $30,000. Addresses were made, and resolutions of thanks to the Lottery for the gift were adopted. The baths will be built at once.

The sixth International Sunday-school Convention of the United States and British North American provinces will open in Pittsburg, Pa., on June 24, and remain in session all week. The sessions of the convention will be held in Mechanical Hall of the Exposition Building. Three sessions will be held daily, and, at least, 2,000 delegates are expected to be in attendance.

Hundreds of Harvard University students, celebrating a recent victory in athletics over Yale University, indulged in noisy demonstrations and a liberal use of red paint. The fine statue of John Harvard shared the feeling, and is adorned with zebra stripes. The doors of the entrance to the Memorial Hall were painted red all over and on them showed the letters "H, 9; Y, 3." Appleton Chapel and Boyston Hall were treated in a like manner. Dabs of red paint greet the eye at every spot, and scores of reminders of the victory were reflected from fences and houses throughout the town. The students who are believed to have taken part in this demonstration are to be dealt with severely.

FOREIGN.

Much discontent exists in France in regard to the virtual embargo on American pork, which has raised the price considerably throughout the country. The American product is discriminated against by unnecessary inspection, on the pretense that disease may be lurking in the meat.

The American colony at London gave a banquet in the Portman rooms last week in honor of Henry M. Stanley. George Page was vice-chairman. There were 350 guests, including members of Parliament, American consuls, judges, officers, and leading members of the Emin Relief Expedition.

In view of the large amount of smuggling along the frontier into the northwest from Montana, and the quantity of timber that is being stolen from the forests of Manitoba by parties in Montana, the government has ordered that the whole international line from the Rocky mountains be patrolled by mounted patrolmen. Eight hundred men will be detailed for this duty.

The northern part of Sofia, Servia, has been wrecked by a hurricane. The loss of life is considerable. Among the soldiers the killed and wounded numbered eleven. The loss among the inhabitants has not yet been ascertained. The damage to the place amounts to $300,000.

A letter from the Czar, written in reply to one from the Queen of Denmark, is published. In his letter the Czar promises a strict inquiry into Siberian scandals, and says he will punish heavily excesses of severity on the part of officials. Lastly, he promises to instruct his ministers to draft measures of amelioration.

M. Mouchicour, the liquidator of the Panama Canal Company, instructed M. Wyse, after visiting the canal works at Colon, to proceed to Carthagena and Begota, to negotiate with the Colombian government for a prolongation of the canal concession. It is expected that Wyse will return to Paris in the autumn.

The official notification of the ratification of the extradition treaty between Great Britain and the United States has reached the government and copies of the treaty have been forwarded by the department of justice to the attorney general's office of all the provinces of Canada.

Subscriptions for the Bismarck Memorial, in Germany, continues to pour in, coming chiefly from the wealthy middle classes. The fund has now reached the sum of 195,000 marks.

Communication.

MARYSVILLE, May 25, 1890.

DEAR FRIEND:—I have just returned from Montrose, Colo. Some weeks ago I saw an advertisement that they were practically giving away building sites. I sent for and obtained a deed, and went out to see what the town was like. It is located in the most lovely valley that mortal man ever saw. A beautiful river flows through it, and on all sides are the snow-capped mountains. It has about 3,000 people living in it, and is bound to be a big city. It is now the biggest town between Denver and Salt Lake City, a distance of 800 miles. I bought some lots at auction in a town in Kansas several years ago that was hoomed and paid $50 for them, and I could not sell them to-day for $5.00. The way Montrose is doing is certain to make their boom last. These lots that are given away at the price now will be worth $1,200 apiece when the town has 10,000 people; they are right on the edge of the city. I got two lots for my children, one for my sister's boy, who lives in New York State, and one for my brother, who was crippled during the war, and who lives in Georgia. I think it a good chance to make money. I also bought a small fruit farm at Montrose. The man will irrigate and market the crop on shares. Apples sell at $7.00 per barrel. I can make $10.00 per tree clear, and the farm I will easily sell in five years for $1,000 per acre. Any person can get a lot now by addressing S. E. Land, Superintendent of Immigration, Montrose, Colo. I believe that an investment of this kind is one that should not be neglected. Such chances should be taken at once by anyone who knows about business. The West is the place to make money. I learned that there were not many of these lots to be had. If any other subscriber of this paper wants one, he had better write quick.

Yours truly, A SUBSCRIBER.

IN MEMORIAM.

(Mrs. Mary A. Hall died in this city on Friday, April 11, 1890, at ten P. M., in her eightieth year.)

(Lines adapted from verses of Alice Carey.)

BY "ADDISON."

Among the beautiful pictures
That hang on memory's wall,
Is one of a peaceful resting-place
That seemeth best of all;
Not for the gnarled oaks olden,
All gray with the mossy braids;
Not for the flowerets golden
That sprinkle the winsome glades.

Not for the classic statues
That rise o'er the fragrant beds,
On guard, all day, 'mid the sunbeams,
And taking their golden edge;
Not for the vines or the cedars
Where the bright green leaflets rest,
Nor the pink, nor the pale, sweet lilies,
It seemeth to me the best.

I once had a loving mother,
With eyes that were pure and deep;
On the breast of that blessed resting-place
She lieth in peace asleep.
Cheerful and patient and hopeful,
Pure as the winds that blow,
She moved thro' the beautiful summers
And winters of long ago.
But her feet on the way grew weary,
And one of the spring-time eves,
They made for my sainted mother
A setting of roses and leaves.

Sweetly her pale arms folded
My heart in a meek embrace,
As a wave of celestial beauty
Silently glowed o'er her face;
And when the arrows of sunset
Were glinting the tree-tops bright,
We laid her in calm-like beauty
Asleep by the gates of light!
Therefore, of all the pictures,
That hang on memory's wall,
That peaceful resting-place
Seemeth the best of all.

NEW ORLEANS, La., May 15, 1890.

A Business View of the Lottery.

BY R. ABBEY, D. D.

Is it in the power of the Legislature of Louisiana, if so disposed, to perpetuate the Lottery so that it can continue the business as heretofore, and make enough money to pay the annual million, or the half of it? Is not this a serious question? Is the making of forty millions, now and heretofore, any guarantee that hereafter, with all the franchises that Louisiana can confer, it can make that many thousand?

Let us see. It is only within the last year or so that much public attention was called to the subject. Previously a few people, and only a few, knew or cared anything about it. But the near approach of the expiration of its charter, and the question of renewal, has waked up public attention very suddenly and most remarkably. There is more expression of opinion about it now in one day than in five or ten years back yonder. Now every newspaper has something to say about it; and it is all indignation, hot indignation. Down with the great bribery! This is the universal cry. Even the Lottery-paid papers of New Orleans dare not speak a word in its favor, so strong and so universal is public sentiment against it.

Now, if the charter should be renewed, public resentment and indignation will be intensified tenfold. It is even now getting to be pretty well understood that this is not a question pertaining to Louisiana alone, but that every other State is equally interested. It is the public boast of the friends of the Lottery that but a very small portion—some say not over three per cent.—of its receipts come from its own State. A very unfortunate admission!

The fact that other States pay their proportion of the forty millions, but get back not a dollar of the annual million subsidy, will intensify the indignation. This will formulate the public question of all the other States in array against Louisiana. This question will assume the practical form of self-defense.

The plain fact will soon come to be well understood that the State of Louisiana is, by the power of her own Legislature, taxing the people of the other States forty or fifty millions annually to build her levees, support her schools, and millionaire a few of her private gambling princes. And the thought that they have been thoughtlessly and carelessly doing this for twenty years will not largely tend to mollify the indignation.

How long will the people of the other States stand this? And to suppose that there is no remedy—that Louisiana has the other States helplessly by the wrist, and must submit—would be to evince but little knowledge of the power of public sentiment, or the genius of our government, State or national. In this case the result will soon confine the Lottery to Louisiana, with not a mail-bag to carry an advertisement or newspaper, or other form of it, nor money, nor facility of any sort. Every State will guard itself, and the general government will guard the whole.

The history of lotteries is not unknown. Apart from the mere morals of the thing, a dozen little lotteries would be comparatively harmless. The reason this Lottery has grown to such huge proportions is that it is a monopoly. And the reason why one can succeed so much better than a dozen could, is that it can offer such tempting prizes. A lottery, to succeed largely, must have two things—first, a large monopoly, and then large advertising facilities. Take away either of these things, and there is no large money in it.

Eighty years ago lotteries were not an uncommon thing, both in this country and in Europe; but these were always for some public, benevolent, and charitable purpose, or for revenue. This one is the first and only one ever known for any private benefit!

No public authority, in this country or Europe, would ever have listened to an application for a lottery for any private benefit. The Louisiana Lottery is an unheard-of anomaly.

Lottery always meant charity, or public revenue. It never meant Morris, or Howard, or any private stockholders.

A raffle is a different kind of lottery. Here there is but one prize generally. It is a mere gambling mode of selling a single piece of property.

Along about 1830 public sentiment cried out more loudly all over Europe and this country for the entire suppression of lotteries. As a source of revenue, it was seen that it transferred the burden of government expenses from the rich to the poor. In 1826 the British Parliament abolished the lottery altogether and forever, and made it a felony to advertise or in any way give it aid or support. France and the German States did the same thing in 1841. Russia and all the rest soon followed suit. And about 1833, and before, the same was done all over the United States. Louisiana, poor Louisiana, is the only leprous spot. It is very natural to conclude, therefore, that if enough members of the Louisiana Legislature should be bribed to re-charter the Lottery, it will rouse the indignation of the States and the general government to a degree that might be called bristling hostility. The difference between the past and the future condition of things may be easily seen.

The Lottery—tickets, sales, newspapers, advertisements, etc.—will be declared, as it now is in England and elsewhere, a public nuisance. The mail closed against it, public carriers forbidden to touch it, how can Morris and Howard make any money? With his monopoly confined to Louisiana, and no approach to the postoffice in his own city, Morris will not be able to pay the half nor the quarter of the one million a year. As a mere monetary enterprise, he will be insolvent in five years. Then where is his security?

With a practical monopoly of all the United States and Europe, and access to all the mails and public carryings, and no restrictions, he can easily make fifty millions a year; but without these, is his charter of any value?

Sanctification.

BY REV. ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

The word "sanctification" does not occur at all in the Old Testament, and only five times in the New. This being true, let us now see what it literally means, and what it means in the different passages in which it is used, and we shall then have no trouble about the meaning of its verb as used in the Old and New Testaments. "Sanctification" literally means "set apart for a sacred use," the state of being pure or holy, and also the state of being given up wholly to death. Now let us quote the five passages of Scripture in which it occurs, and see what its meaning in each is. "But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." (1. Cor. i, 30.) In this Scripture it means the state of being pure or holy, and of being set apart for a sacred use, without the idea of the "second blessing." The leading idea of this whole passage is that Christ has not only revealed the wisdom of the plan of salvation, but that he has made it possible for all to be forgiven, renewed or regenerated, and finally saved in heaven. "For this is the will of God, even your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication: that everyone of you should know how to preserve his vessel in sanctification and honor." (1. Thess. iv, 3, 4.) In these verses the word "sanctification" does not mean the "second blessing;" neither does the manner in which it is used justify such an inference at all. for Paul is exhorting the Thessalonians to do as he had instructed them to do in order to please God, and thereby abound, or rather avoid, growing less in, or destitute of, God's blessings, and also not only to keep their present supply of his blessings, but to have it increased as circumstances might require. To say that "sanctification," as here used, means the "second blessing," or, in other words, something greater and better than the new birth, or regeneration, is to say that the new birth, or regeneration, is not a condition to justify God's giving to him who is in such a state strength to keep from all ungodliness, and even from the worst form of ungodliness, such as fornication; and hence he who is born again, or regenerated, is excusable for continuing in sin, and even in so gross a sin as fornication, until he has sought and found sanctification in the sense of the "second blessing:" for the sanctification of which Paul is speaking, as being the will of God, is that type that requires abstinence from all ungodliness, and especially fornication: and, therefore, if regeneration does not require the same, it is a mere nothing. The leading idea of Paul is this: it is God's will that you should be, and continue to be, holy or pure, not only in heart, but in all that you do, that you may be distinguished from those who are not pure in heart and practice, for if you are not thus in heart and life, you are not God's. "But we are bound to give thanks always to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation, through sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth." (II. Thess. ii, 13.) Sanctification in this verse is not used in the sense of the "second blessing," for the idea of the "second blessing" is preposterous. This verse simply means we are duty bound to thank God always that it was in his plan of salvation that you should, through faith in the truth, be saved through the sanctification, or the renewing, or regenerating, or through that power of the Spirit that set them apart for God in heart and life. "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." (1. Pet. i, 2.) This is the last verse in which the word "sanctification" occurs; and if there is a shadow of proof that it means the "second blessing," I must confess that I am unable to see it, although I have prayed and sought it most earnestly. The verse is susceptible of the following paraphrase: Accepted, according to God's plan, through the sanctification or cleansing power of the Spirit unto that obedience that has for its foundation the blood of Jesus Christ. To say the least of it, "sanctification" means setting apart, or cleansing.

In conclusion, let me say that from all I am able to gather from the Scriptures, the "second blessing" doctrine is without any support whatever, and that those Scriptures which are generally cited for its support are not at all in its favor, but either support the Methodist doctrine of the "new birth," or that of a gradual and full "growth in grace."

"The Man of Galilee."

BY MRS. L. CHAHY SADLER.

Having read much of Bishop Haygood's "Man of Galilee," I was very anxious to see it, as any view of the life of Jesus always has a peculiar charm for my mind. Having learned my letters from the capitals of the Holy Book, and also to read in the same at the college of my mother's knee, I was easily familiarized with the life and words of Jesus. When the "Man of Galilee" was announced, I said to myself, "What 'new thing under the sun' has Bishop Haygood found to tell us about the Man of Galilee?" A kind friend sent me the book. It reached me at a very busy moment; but, woman-like, I must take a peep at it, and, for once, time would have to wait a bit. My eye ran over the title page, lingered a second on the words of Simon Peter, in answer to Jesus' question, "Will ye also leave me?" and this gave an electric flash of the central idea of the book. Then I turned to the dedication, "To the Emory Boys"—another flash of light that made my heart jump into my throat as I said: "It is for the boys; not only the 'Emory boys,' but for the seven million of boys and young men in this glorious republic of ours, only about two hundred thousand of which are active Christian workers." O, that everyone of the six million eight hundred thousand boys, outside of these workers, might read the "Man of Galilee!"

But to the book again. I turned another leaf and read the "prefatory." Before I had read half a dozen lines my eyes were wet with tears. The author's allusion to "the boys he had in mind all the way through" cast a shadow before of the coming view I was to have of the "Man of Galilee" from the standpoint that would most interest, instruct, and impress the skeptical minds of the boys, the young men of this pivotal age.

Taking the book to my daughter, who has, as our good presiding elder said the other day, "a whole team of boys," I told her to read the preface, while I watched her face to see the effect it would have on her mind. She handed the book back with her eyes suffused in tears; her flushed countenance telling me better than words what her mother's heart thought of the book.

With these promising expectations of the feast I was to have, I laid it aside until a convenient season. When I had read it all (some of the chapters three or four times) I was not disappointed. I was even much surprised, startled, edified, enthused, and wholly en rapport with the theme and the way Bishop Haygood handled it. To give even a concise notice of its many fine points would be but a futile attempt, for it seemed that there was a point in every line; and every conceivable objection to the divine side of the Man of Galilee, from "the great and elect thinkers of past ages," the great and elect agnostics of the present age, down to the last "New Theology" of Dr. Lyman Abbott, have been put in the sieve that Bishop Haygood holds, and sifted so thoroughly that not an atom of their new philosophy of the "New Theology" remains in the sieve.

The spirit of the book is as charming as the arguments are unanswerable. Get it and read it, is what I would say to everyone who has not already done so, for it will instruct and edify.

Letter from Mexico.

MR. EDITOR: Our hearts were made to rejoice on yesterday when the dear old ADVOCATE came, with its cheerful greetings, from the dear home-land. We saw the list of contributions started for our church in Mexico. This dear sister, whose heart is fired with zeal for poor priest-ridden Mexico, is the widowed wife of one of the oldest members of the Mississippi Conference, and who is said to have been the instrument in the hands of our Lord in the conversion of our sainted Bishop Marvin, who has done more to arouse the Christian world to China's needs than any other man. Now she who bears his name has started a contribution for a church in Mexico. May it prove a grand success—a noble monument to the Christians who contribute for its erection! A Mississippi church in this great city, where we may gather in poor, sorrowing, hopeless ones, and band them together in Christian fellowship. I hope, Mr. Editor, you will help our Christian friends with words of cheer in this noble enterprise. The success that is crowning the labors of my husband makes us rejoice with exceeding great joy: but, at the same time, our hearts are saddened by the troubles caused by the fanatics, who seem thoroughly aroused. I hear that nine days ago, while the native preacher of the Episcopal Church was going from Cuernavaca to his appointment, he was killed on the road—assassinated.

Christian friends, can you not see and realize the great need these people have of the gospel of peace and love? I hope you will pray the Father to forgive them, for they know not what they do." Our little band of missionaries are as lambs among wolves.

We have just had a visit from one of our native presiding elders, who is a fine-looking man. In his clerical suit of black he might be taken for a Bishop. He was telling us of his experience and his trust in God, who had answered his prayers in the conversion of his family. He says he travels securely, as the people take him for a priest, and manifest the greatest reverence for him. I hope there is no one who has little faith in the converted Mexican. It is the same here as at home: you'll find chaff among the wheat; but I have seen and know some converted Mexicans who are as devoted Christians as I ever saw in my life. I was sick Sunday in bed, and a Mexican woman came to see me, and stay with me until Mr. Weems got back. While I was speaking of our daughter, now in Whitworth College, I said: "I want to go for her next year, if I can." To my astonishment, her eyes filled with tears, and she grasped my arm, and said: "No, we did not plead so long with the Lord for your life, for you to go to the States. We asked God to give you to us to work for us. You can not go." I finally pacified her by telling her to save up of her means, and she could go with me and bring me back.

We have heard with pleasure who our new Bishops are; but nothing from the Boards as to who will come to our help, etc. I am glad of the reinforcement in our college of Bishops. One can now spend more time in this needy field. I am sure if you could all realize the needs, as we see and feel them, there would be a mighty effort put forth for Mexico. The field is ripe, but the laborers are very few.

I shall now watch the ADVOCATE with renewed interest, and count the bricks contributed for our church, which will tell of the Christian zeal of our friends for the cause in Mexico. I hope every number of the ADVOCATE will give notice of a large load of bricks. May God bless you all, and help you to fully appreciate the blessings you enjoy in a Christian land; and all pray for Mexico as you send the bricks for our church!

A Good Day at Starkville, Miss.

Long will it be before the Methodist congregation in Starkville, Miss., forget the service held in their church on the first Sunday morning of June, 1890. Forty-five living souls presented themselves before that altar to take the vows of fidelity to a Christian life. There was no sermon; no time for a sermon. The preacher in charge, the good Dr. T. C. Wier, arranged his service so as to mingle suitable song and prayer and instruction and exhortation. How it moved the large audience; how it brought swelling joy to the hearts of Christians to see men and women of middle life, heads of families, coming with so many of tender age, gathered from the Sunday-school, to cast their lot and spend their lives with the people of God! Starkville has not been so moved for a long while past. It was a feast of ingathering; souls saved from sin and death unto Christ and eternal life. Let those who can, open their eyes on the glorious vision. The world has nothing to approach it. Here is a spiritual argument that stops the mouths of gainsayers, that undermines all fortifications of infidelity and exposes the folly of all worldliness. Many forms of spiritual force, no doubt, entered into this glorious product: diligent, patient care of parental training; yearning prayer for the Holy Spirit's help, faithful instruction in the Sunday-school, faithful preaching and pastoral visiting, scrupulous personal influence, loving ministry of good words and good deeds in many ways, the influence of religious literature, etc. No one can tell which factor is the largest in the product; but, no doubt, each one is to be counted. The Holy Spirit uses all, and is himself the factor of immeasurable value. But that agent which stands before our eyes most directly, and last in the class of human factors, is the Rev. Joe J. Jones. In response to the pastor's request, he came to Starkville and held religious services for eight or more days. His preaching was plain; so very plain that some persons call it rough; but he preached the truth as taught in the Scriptures, so eye-witnesses testify, and he uncovered sin, concrete sin, sins of lust, of self-indulgence, of worldliness, such as his hearers indulge in. He pleaded for repentance, faith, a holy life, a pure heart, a Christian home, an aggressive church. Here are the fruits—the Savior's criterion. Shall we not rejoice that by all means the gospel is preached? W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

Program of Greenville District Sunday-School Conference.

The Greenville District Conference will meet at Rosedale, Miss., on Friday, June 27, 1890. The Rev. J. A. Randolph will preach the opening sermon, Thursday evening. A full attendance of all the members from each pastoral charge is much desired. Come, brethren, in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ, and let us plan and work together for the success of the kingdom of Christ and our beloved Methodism in this great Delta. We urge especially the attendance of the laymen. They must be represented; their absence will greatly retard our work.

The District Sunday-school Conference will meet on Thursday, June 26, at nine o'clock A. M. The following are the topics for discussion and the program for the day:

1. The Relation of Children to the Church—T. W. Dye, Robert Sims.

2. The Relation of the Pastor to the Sunday-school—W. C. Harris, Robert Summerville.

3. How Shall We Secure Competent Teachers for Our Sunday-Schools?—J. A. Randolph, Edward More.

4. What Are the Duties of the Superintendent?—Chancellor W. R. Trigg, J. W. Dorman.

5. The Importance of Music in the Sunday-schools—R. H. B. Gladney, O. L. Savage.

6. What Are the Best Methods of Teaching and Instructing the Infant Class?—C. H. Owen, G. H. Lipscomb.

7. How Shall We Inculcate the Missionary and Revival Spirit in Our Sunday-schools?—E. L. Spraggins, E. G. Kilgore, J. B. Harris.

Sunday-school sermon, eleven o'clock A. M., Thursday, by E. G. Kilgore.

All the members of the Conference are expected to take part in the discussion. Prepare yourselves, brethren, to make terse-pointed speeches on the topics assigned you. We must maintain our distinctive denominational Sunday-school work.

What Has Become of Our Darling Boy?

$100 REWARD.

The only child of Pleasant and Mattie Trotter left home on July 28, 1889, and can not be heard from. Therefore we earnestly pray all ministers of the gospel, officers of the law and other persons to use every effort to locate our lost child, and we pledge ourselves to pay the finder one hundred dollars. If found, write to us at the subscribed address, and we will come at once. His age is nineteen years; weight, one hundred and thirty pounds; black hair and eyes, dark skin, five feet and five inches in height, and has a small scar on his nose between the eyes. He was a good boy, a member of the Methodist Church, and loved to attend church and read the Bible.

LOUISIANA'S PRAYER

Air "My Maryland."

BY "PRO PATRIA."

Louisiana, a beautiful Creole, with tearful anguish depicted on her countenance, kneeling in prayer, while a monstrous serpent is coiled around her, with his head above hers and his tail resting on her broken crown and sceptre, pressing them into the dust.

O Lord, to thee in prayer I flee,
In anguish of extremity;
In dust I bow, imploring thee
Will save me from mine enemy.
His stifling coil is round my breast,
In dust my crown and sceptre's pressed.
And high o'er mine his gilded crest—
The serpent of the Lottery!

From negro rule, the Stygian pool,
Where sank my strangled sovereignty,
This reptile came, begot of shame
And legislative infamy;
With brazen crest and artful smile,
And forked tongue and heart of guile,
He wound me in his deadly coil—
The serpent of the Lottery!

And now, O Lord, I fear he'll thrive
By ruining my industry;
The credulous he tempts to live
By gambling in his Lottery;
Until my home's a serpent's fen,
Where children, matrons, maids and men
Are lured to gamble in his den—
The serpent of the Lottery!

He simulates, by wily arts,
Benevolence and charity.
And simple people in their hearts
Adore this gilded deity,
And blind as heathen of the Nile,
Who worship toads and serpents vile,
They crowd to catch his golden smile—
The serpent of the Lottery!

My Press, the bulwark of my throne,
Of yore my faithful counselor,
Is dumb, and thus I'm left alone,
With conscience for my monitor.
With scorn my sisters pass me by,
And to my cries for help reply:
Thou fool! to thy grand master cry—
The serpent of the Lottery!

My servants are too poor and weak
To match this serpent's subtlety.
I fear, with shame and blanching cheek,
His bribery their treachery
Teach them, O Lord, thy primal curse.
Oh, let them ponder line and verse,
And spurn the Gambler's tainted purse—
The serpent of the Lottery!

But true are they who wore the grey
In triumph and adversity,
And wrought a name of deathless fame,
That changed defeat to victory.
Oh were those gallant legions nigh
To shoot their fearless battle-cry,
I'd feel that surely now must die
The serpent of the Lottery!

I hear a sound of gathering hosts!
Oh, can it be: oh, can it be
That honor, manhood and the Cross
Are leagued, O Lord, to rescue me?
Oh, fill their hearts with wisdom's light!
Send them, O Lord, thine arm of might!
And teach them, Lord of Hosts, to smite
The serpent of the Lottery!

Modern Asceticism.

Strange that the different phases of human history, civil, social and religious, are ever recurring! Men sometimes, not infrequently, boast about the wondrous attainments of the race in all things connected with its general welfare. More especially is this forward movement claimed in our day for matters purely ethical. But are we surely right in all this? Despite the claim of better civil laws, a more tolerant, religious spirit and a purer state of society, do not the old errors that have hounded the race through so many weary generations still hay on its trail? The long, long race with sin and folly is not rounded yet. Not on "this," but on the "other" side of Jordan is rest for the weary. But there is one snapping, snarling whelp of this hellish pack I warn you against. Once convent walls and monastric prisons concealed his hateful visage, but now, for the most part, he roams at large, wandering to and fro the earth, seeking whom he may exhort, then devour. Under this figure, I refer to modern asceticism. It is as false as it is deceitful. It entraps the innocent and unwary simply because they do not take time to think carefully or correctly about its fallacious teachings. One of the cardinal errors of the teachers of this school is in making the term "flesh"—as used by the sacred writers—to have a literal and not a figurative signification. How a man of intelligence, carrying about with him every moment of his earthly existence such a marvel of divine workmanship as the human body, can roundly berate his corporiety for moral delinquincy, is, to my mind, incomprehensible.

Such masters of assemblies should be relegated to some medieval monastry and kept there for the general welfare of the race. I have heard men pray to be delivered from the literal natural propensities of the body and the real appetites of the flesh. They might just as well cry for the stars to quit shining or the winds cease caressing the waving corn. Its—excuse the tautology—natural nature for these things to be so, God made them that way; and, what's more, we can't help it by any kind of theological tinkering. The root of this error lies in the old heathen school of philosophy; so the books teach. I hope we are wise enough to know ere this that there is nothing sinful in simple matter; yet some real, good people are wonderfully exercised about so clear a fact. Maybe I have chained my cur now, only to howl. S. J. DAVIES.

An Explanation.

MR. EDITOR: Your reference to Dr. Peck's charge that Arkansas preachers deceive Northern Methodists by using the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church, calls for this response. Dr. Peck writes from Hot Springs. It was there he heard of and witnessed the fraud complained of.

It is only a few years since the Methodist Episcopal Church began its operations in that city. I was invited to officiate at the laying of their corner-stone, but the house was not built for years after. As pastor of my church, I made no announcement of services, but one of the editors usually announced them of his own accord. He did not know there was a Southern and Northern Methodism, so he generally announced that I would preach "at the Methodist Episcopal Church," sometimes "at the Methodist Church," and sometimes would call the church by my name. After awhile the silly boy, whom the Northern Methodists stationed in the city, discovered the editor's mode and wrote a caustic rebuke, charging me with intentional fraud. I notified him that I had nothing to do with it. But the secular editor found a good subject to tease in the verdant youth, so he continued to announce my appointments at the "Methodist Episcopal Church," to the unbounded exasperation of the young preacher. All this was explained to the preacher in person by myself, declaring that I did not write the announcements nor cause them to be written; but the young preacher continued to hold me responsible. Wrote to his paper about it, and continues to this day to charge it on us. I suppose Dr. Peck got his information from that preacher. The president of the Wesleyan University of Ohio, Dr. Adams, a minister of that church, was in Hot Springs at the time, and was disgusted with the young preacher's conduct, and so stated it to me.

The secular editor was not a member of my church, and felt no interest in the matter further than to tease the young man.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was but a mere shanty—situated in the suburbs—near a mile from the street-car line, and was not known in the city as a church. Were I disposed, I could make a counter-charge on Dr. Peck's church relative to their mode of gaining a foothold in that city that would greatly discount his charge against us—and would prove to be true. But such warfare is two contemptible for publication. H. R. WITHERS.

Edward McGehee College for Girls.

I am instructed by the Board of Trustees of the Woodville Female Seminary to communicate to you, and, through you, to Methodists at large, the following action taken by them at their last meeting, viz: The name of the institution was changed to The Edward McGehee College for Girls, and Dr. H. Walter Featherstun, now of Kavanaugh College, has accepted the position of principal. Dr. Featherstun will bring his own corps of teachers with him, and open the next session on September 3, next. We have ample buildings constructed especially for a female boarding-school—spacious grounds and as handsome a grove as can be found in the Southern States—and all that we needed for the perfecting of a first-class female college was just such a man as Dr. Walter Featherstun—who needs no introduction from me—to take charge of it. Our town is easily accessible from north or south by way of the Slaughter branch of the L., N. O. and T. R. R., and is noted for its healthfulness, physical and moral, the refinement of its society, and the abundance of its church privileges.

WOODVILLE, MISS.

From the Work.

ARKABUTLA, MISS.

Will you please allow me space in the columns of your valuable paper to say a few things for Arkabutla charge? Arkabutla, the site of the parsonage, is nestling quietly among a picturesque region bordering upon the Mississippi Delta; but it is so far above the level of the valley, and so much nearer the beautiful blue dome above us, that it is a very healthy place; and being so remote from a railroad town, we are not annoyed by the rush and push, ringing of the bells, and the blowing of the whistle, which is so common to those towns. Our greatest trouble is our transportation facilities, having nothing but the big-horned and long-eared quadrupeds to transport our dry goods from the railroad to this interior town.

Last Saturday our second Quarterly Conference was held. The Rev. S. M. Thames, our indefatigable presiding elder, was there in good trim, and preached to the satisfaction of his congregation. After we had been refreshed by the bounteous supply of good things, the business was transacted. Reports from the stewards showed that they had their work well in hand. We have four churches above the average of country churches, five preaching-places, two prayer meetings, eight Sunday-schools, and a Woman's Missionary Society.

During this month we are having a delightful time holding children's meetings. We have four things right plentiful in this country—hills, money, brains, and children. All of those, except one, are necessary in order to have a good time; and we are having it. We have had large crowds of beautiful, well-dressed and intelligent children to preach to. The children are the "poetry of this world, the fresh flowers of our hearts." They need more attention; they are the hope of the country; and if we expect to have a better class of Christians in future years, we must cultivate them now. In some portions of the country children are growing up in ignorance of God's Word, and God's church, and God's work, and we are responsible for it to a very great measure. Pray for us.

LIVINGSTON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

I am glad to say that after all the high water, and the sorrow it has caused among our people here on Livingston circuit, they still look after their preacher and his family. Yesterday there was a Port Vincent vessel arrived in front of the parsonage with only a small crew—Mr. Newton Felder, business manager; Mr. Eddie Felder, assistant manager, with Miss Emmie Spiller and Miss Rosa Baldwin, pilots. Port Vincent can boast of its warm-hearted young men and women. That vessel was heavy laden with good things, from a barrel of flour down to nutmegs. After dinner we enjoyed a while in pleasant conversation; then those fine-looking young people returned home—a distance of about ten miles. We stood and watched them until they disappeared in the cypress-shaded swamps of Louisiana. God bless the good people of Livingston circuit! We are praying for the Lord to do great things for this people this year. He has already given us nineteen accessions to the church, and two new Sunday-schools; also two prayer meetings—one of them a ladies' prayer meeting.

Our little church in French Settlement is composed mostly of people who have been raised Catholics. I think, Mr. Editor, it would do you good to hear them pray. They have put away their prayer books and beads, and pray in the old Methodist style, and their influence for good is being felt. The devil is uneasy, but hard at work. His arrows are flying thick and fast; but the blood-stained banner of Jesus is waving proudly over this little church. I ask the prayers of God's people in behalf of French Settlement Church. GEO. W. HUFF, P. C.

STRONG'S, MISS.

Nearly six months have passed away since I received my first appointment—Prairie circuit. Upon my arrival I found a nicely finished and neatly furnished new parsonage and a committee to receive us.

The fires burning brightly in the grates and the filled pantry, also large baked turkey on the table, was an index to the warm hearts and generous hospitality of the good and intelligent people. The prairie mud does not cling more tenaciously to our feet than do these people to their pastor and to the interests of the church.

The profit of the half year spent with this people has not been meager. Our membership has been increased by ten names; four of whom were the heads of families and eight of whom were grown. Our Sunday-schools are interesting, our prayer meetings spiritually invigorating, our lately organized Woman's Missionary Society doing good work, our ladies also working in Ladies Aid Society. During the year have raised for Oxford Church, $79 50; for repainting church, $50; for parsonage fence, $28; on Children's Day, $22 35. Our second Quarterly Conference just passed, and nearly half of preacher's salary paid, one church having paid nearly three-fourths of its assessment. The collections ordered by the Conference will be paid in full.

As a charge, we are upon a more elevated plane of usefulness than we have previously occupied; with unity of feeling and effort are still climbing, and as we ascend are endeavoring to draw sinners and to lift all of the interests of the church with us.

J. C. PARK, P. C.

UNION CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

We are moving along in these parts moderately well. This being my third year here, I see and understand the surroundings better than a passerby. Last year we had some wonderful revivals here; and, owing to the great number of persons still out of the church, and many in the church that have never been converted, we are praying for a wonderful revival of pure and undefiled religion. Brethren, pray for us, that God may visit us this year with a mighty outpouring of his Holy Spirit. We are doing all we can to develop the spiritual condition of this circuit into a higher standard of religion; and if we know anything of the signs of the time, we are making some advance in that direction. There is an increasing interest in supporting the church and its institutions. We paid all our assessments last year; but this year we hope to exceed last by fifty per cent. We have had so much sickness this year that my congregations have been unusually small; therefore, we have deferred taking the collections ordered by the Conference till now.

Last Saturday and Sunday, May 3 and 4, our second Quarterly Conference was held. Bro. Johnston, our efficient presiding elder, was on hand, with an inexhaustible supply of good things, looking after the King's business. Bro. Johnston preached us three good soul-stirring sermons while with us. On Sunday he preached with power, and to the edification of all that heard him, from John xi, 28: "The Master is come, and calleth for thee," after which we took a collection, and nearly doubled the assessment for that point. On Saturday Bro. Johnston made us a speech on education, and I secured $35 in notes for Millsaps Methodist College. If some of the brethren would open their eyes, so that they could see the good in our presiding elders, and, in the place of grumbling and growling, "hold up his arms" and give him their hearty support, God would bless them more, and there would be less trouble.

CARTHAGE STATION, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

At the last Conference this little town was made a station, and it was with some misgivings that we came back to it, having served the entire circuit last year, and I did not know how it would suit the people to be set up as a station. But the people were well pleased, and are working faithfully to make it a success. Carthage is the largest inland town in the State, and no better people can be found. Within the last twelve-month we have built a Methodist Church at a cost of $1,500. The Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterians have been worshiping together for thirty years or more. They had a union Sunday-school of about forty scholars, and some of my brethren said we could not have a Methodist school. But we organized, and now have eighty enrolled and about sixty in attendance, and the Baptists have a better school than the union. Spiritually, we are advancing. Our people take more interest in the church than ever before. We usually have as many at prayer meeting as formerly attended preaching, and our congregations at preaching are increasing. Carthage is no longer in the background. Financially, we are improving also. My people are rallying to support their preacher, and, up to date, they have paid me more than the entire circuit did up to September 1 of last year. I consider this charge about the best in the district, all things considered. The most of the people are quite intelligent and are willing to do their duty when they know it. Our protracted meeting will commence soon. We are praying for a great revival.

Our people are not as much interested in mission work as they ought to be, but we hope that by the help of God we may succeed in enlisting them on that line of church work.

BLACK BEAUTY—A Literary Sensation. By A. Sewell. George T. Angell, 19 Milk St., Boston, publisher. Price, in paper boards, twenty cents; by mail, postage paid.

This is a charming little English story, which has had a remarkable run in Great Britain, ninety thousand copies having been sold, and is certainly destined to success, if not great popularity, in this country. The American reprint seems to be under the auspices of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, though it was apparently not written in the interest of that body. The equine subject is caused to narrate, and most charmingly too, his own checquered career from colthood down to extreme old age, with many wise observations upon both animal and human economy, and a body of drama which includes many representatives of both kingdoms. There is not a dull chapter in the book, and those who do not read it with a literary purpose should do so for sweet charity's sake.

THE MYSTERY OF SUFFERING. A new book. By Rev. J. H. Brookes, author of "The Way Made Plain," "Maranatha," and Editor of The Truth, etc. It contains 169 pages. Price, paper, twenty-five cents; cloth, fifty cents. Gospel Publishing Company, 10 Arcade Court, Chicago, Ill.

It is the aim of this book to throw the light of God's truth upon the afflictions of his people. The titles of the chapter indicate the character of the book: Suffering the Common Lot, The Cause of Suffering, Bodily Suffering, Mental Suffering, Satan and Suffering, The Trial of Faith, Christ and Suffering, The Abiding Comforter, The God of All Comfort, The Everlasting Arms, Fear Not, Songs in the Night, Afterward, Till He Come. The entire book is well calculated to comfort the afflicted, and the large, clear type will make it easy for the aged and the afflicted to read.

A SONNET OF THE SOUTH.

BY SAMUEL E. MANN, D. S.

Dear Southland, how shall thy sweet name be sung,
While swelling years their wider channels wear?
Oh, who may tell thy story? Who may bear
My harp, among the willows rudely flung?

E'en where the censers of the night are swung
Beside the dawn's high altar—even there,
O minstrel of the morn, dost thou not dare
To lift the fallen harp, and loose thy tongue?

Oh, yes, the wakened winds shall answer, Yes,
Until thy native pomp of palm and pine,
O'erhung with waving moss and clinging vine,
The zephyr-breath of brother-love confess,
And down thy years the notes of joy are rung;
So, O thou Southland, shall thy songs be sung.

The Lottery.

Another Editor's Farewell.

We print below Mr. Pugh's farewell address as editor of the Assumption Pioneer, which was refused admission to the columns of the paper he had served when it went over to the Lottery cause.

And this is the kind of work the Lottery is doing all over the State. With its money, however, it is seeking to stifle the voice of honest and honorable men. There are, doubtless, scores of true journalists in the State who, unlike Editor Pugh, are not in a position to even send their parting words to the public to a friendly journal; but have, with heavy hearts, to bow to the power of the great press corruption, and do that against which their manhood and their conscience rebel:

VALEDICTORY.

With the present issue of the Pioneer my editorial duties come to an end, and I cease to be a member of its staff.

I think it both due to the public and to myself to give my reasons for terminating my connection with this paper.

The stand that the Pioneer was compelled to assume during my temporary absence last week, in an editorial supporting the Lottery Company in its endeavor to obtain a charter, was not only opposed to its previous policy, but is foreign to my idea of what is proper and right. I believe the issues involved in the present contest with the Lottery Company are grave beyond precedent. The struggle of those opposed to this gigantic monopoly is a contest for pure government—for the freedom of press and people.

The presence of the Lottery Company as a gambling institution is its least evil, and might be condoned by many; but when it debauches our legislators, and under the guise of generosity takes advantage of a people's ruin, and attempts to bribe the sovereign State, then surely it is time for us to emphasize the fact that a people can not be bought! that the honor of a State is beyond price!

Should the Lottery Company succeed (God forbid!) in obtaining the submission of a constitutional amendment to the people, we will see the Lottery Company enter local politics and endeavor in every way to split the Democratic party. With its immense wealth it boasts that it can control our elections, and rather than fail, it will divide the white vote and purchase and poll a large colored vote. This institution, as the corrupt offspring of an equally corrupt radical regime, shows its paternity in its opposition to the Democratic party. True to its parentage, it will ever seek to divide the Democrats and reinstate in power "our brother in black." What care such men as Herwig, Baldwin and Pinchback—large owners of Lottery stock—for the Democratic party? Our State is poor, it is true, but sometimes riches can be too dearly bought. The freedom of a people, like the chastity of our mothers, is too precious a heritage to be the subject of bargain and sale.

It has become a choice between "a government of the people, for the people, and by the people," and a government run by the Lottery Company for the Lottery Company, irrespective of the wishes and welfare of the people. Between the two my choice has long been made.

When we sacrifice our political freedom for so much per year, we, in truth, sell our "birthright for a mess of pottage."

Feeling as earnestly as I do on this subject, I can not give a quasi indorsement to pro-lottery views by continuing as editor of a paper so diametrically opposed to my convictions.

In thus retiring from the editorial control of the Pioneer, it is a subject of regret that my pleasant official associations with Mrs. Susan Dupaty are brought to a close. However we may differ on questions of public interests, I shall certainly retain a feeling of respect and warm friendship for her—the necessary result of our intimate companionship in the editorial sanctum.

LAWRENCE H. PUGH.

NAPOLEONVILLE, LA., May 12, 1890.

—New Delta.

To the People of Louisiana.

I propose to assume control of the government of this State for a period of twenty-five years, for which I will pay $1,000,000 per annum. I will furnish in addition the following officers:

1. A governor.
2. A majority of the General Assembly.
3. A majority of the judges of the supreme and district courts.

I will also guarantee to establish a grand educational and literary bureau, with sundry prizes annexed—tickets to the drawings of same to be sold in all the States of the Union—the capital prize, however, to be strictly the property of the bureau.

I guarantee also to foster and stimulate the following noble traits of character:

1. To make gambling the chief virtue of the race.
2. To demoralize all servants and hired labor in general.
3. To make the sole object of existence the desire to be rich, and to attain that end.
4. To assume control of the insane, the pauper and the sick.

In consideration of which I will occasionally build, for my own benefit, beautiful buildings in New Orleans, and sugar and cotton factories in your parishes. I will also erect churches, and contribute liberally to the salaries of the preachers thereof.

I will also subsidize all your newspapers, and choke off such editors as desire to lead you back to the same and inglorious virtues of your forefathers.

I will also recast the great seal of Louisiana, to conform to the facts, namely, to represent the little pelicans feeding the big pelican.

You will, doubtless, hasten to accept this proposition, as you have proven yourselves incapable of self-government, inasmuch as,

1. You do not educate yourselves.
2. You do not build your levees.
3. You do not take care of your indigent sick and insane.

I expect furthermore that the proposition will be acted upon at once by the General Assembly, otherwise I will send my satraps out to buy up the negro vote, and make things warm for you. Yours, etc.,

JOHN A. MORRIS.

—Southern Watchman.

Hangs Mighty High.

The enthusiasm of some of our pro-Lottery friends runs so far ahead of their common-sense that it is absolutely amusing. They argue warmly that the State is at present in an impoverished condition, absolutely in need of money to carry on the government, and especially lacking in means for the building and strengthening of her levees; that Mr. Morris' little, $500 000 just now would be a perfect god-send. Just now! They do not pause to reflect that if they accept Mr. Morris' proposition the year 1895 will be the very earliest date at which they could hope to get a little nip of $125,000 out of that plum. Remember, the present charter runs until then, and Mr. Morris is not going to pay for something he has already. By that time our State through the development and growth of her natural resources will have recovered from her temporary depression; by that time the United States government (if not disgusted and repelled by the superficial and protubcrant officiousness of the Lottery Company) will have our levee and drainage system under its mighty protection and fostering care—and that is really our only hope of a successful issue out of this trouble. Then, for sake of a compromising annuity for which we would really have no urgent need, we would find our State saddled with an infamous incubus and rated in the civilization of the world as on a par with Monte Carlo, Cuba and Mexico.

Since the above was in print John A. Morris, on May 13, increased his bribe to $1,000,000 annually. This only the more clearly shows the nature of the man and the character of the enterprise in which he is engaged. It is also encouraging, as it shows that he is not certain of success; and, like all avaricious and sordid natures, he imagines that money is the surest and quickest bribe to prostitution; therefore, he has only to increase his offer.

"Now, here's richness for you!" said "Mr. Squeers," as he half-and-half watered the milk for the two foundlings put under his paternal care. Now, here's a spectacle for you, freemen of America! A creature bidding for a great State like you would buy a hog at auction, and dallying with its government like a puppy shakes a shuck!

Mr. Morris has evidently anticipated the force of the argument on the "four-years futures," and has interviewed a Times-Democrat reporter, wherein he states that he is willing to advance the State money to repair levees, etc. Like the boa constrictor, he is gradually throwing on shiny coils until his prey is crushed, when he will proceed to swallow it. This matter is now fully in the hands of the Legislature, which is well beset with arguments pro and con. The die is cast; we can only look to it and hope for the best.—Lafayette Advertiser.

A Political View.

NEW ORLEANS, June 2, 1890.

Editor New Delta: No thinking man will deny that bribery has been the instrument by which the Lottery Company has kept its wheel of fortune running for the past twenty-two years. Its open bribery is and has been the common talk of politicians, high and low, for twenty-two years. It is openly declared, and never denied, that many legislators, judges and executive officers are under the power and control of this company.

In every parish and town of Louisiana the young politician is being and has been educated to believe that political preferment and affiliation with the Lottery Company are synonymous. In other words, our men of promise, instead of being educated to be statesmen, are being brought up to be the tools of a set of gamblers. Morris and his pals have done more to curse the State of Louisiana than all the pests of reconstruction. A nice set of men to educate our statesmen! Give them twenty-five years more of power, increasing as they have been in business, and what power except Winchester rifles can eradicate them from our soil? Even then their bribery might withstand an army, and poor Louisiana, being fifty years behind her sister States, would have to call in their aid to unsettle this new political screw of Archimedes—the corruption fund of Morris and his pals. O. Q.

—New Delta.

It begins to look as though the manly attempt of Gov. Nicholls to save his State from the clutches of the Louisiana Lottery ring might be rewarded with success. It will require a two-thirds' vote to carry the scheme through the Legislature over his veto, and the anti-Lottery people are confident that more than one-third of the House are with them. The ring has the whole New Orleans press on its side, and has doubled its bid for a new charter, offering now $1,000,000 a year; but the friends of good government are making a strong fight, and the public sentiment of the whole country is with them.—New York Evening Post.

Sunday-School Lesson.

Second Quarter—Studies in Luke.

LESSON XII.—June 22.

Trust in Our Heavenly Father.

Luke xii, 22-34.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things—Luke xii, 30.

TIME AND PLACE same as last lesson.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. vi, 25.

22. Take no thought—Rather, Be not anxious about. The temper against which our Lord warns his disciples is not that of foresight, which merely provides for the future, but the allowing ourselves to be harassed and vexed with its uncertainties. For your life—The Greek word is the same as that commonly rendered "soul," and the passage is interesting as an example of its use in the wider sense which includes the lower as well as the higher life. These instructions are built upon the parable just previously spoken. "Therefore" (ver. 22), since these things are so, let me counsel you how to live. Therefore give to the higher and better things the relative care and labor of which they are worthy; care more for soul-life than for bodily life; more for soul-food than for the food of the body; more for the culture and growth of heart-benevolence than for the development of any physical powers; more for the adornment of the soul with the beauties of holiness than for adorning the body in beauty that fades so soon away.

24. Store-house—The word has the same root as to cut or divide, and means an apartment where supplies are divided and apportioned; a treasury, magazine, and, therefore, a secret and well-guarded place. How much more are ye better—Here again (as in ver. 7) the reasoning is a fortiori. Assuming a personal will, the will of a father, as that which governs the order of the universe, we may trust to its wisdom and love to order all things well for the highest as for the meanest of its creatures. For those who receive whatever comes in the spirit of contented thankfulness, that is for those who "love God," all things work together for good. The case of the ravens whom God feeds and of the lilies which he clothes in beauty are here as proximate, not perfect, illustrations. They illustrate God's universal care and wisdom as to the lower animals, and also the beautiful growths from the earth—from which we are to infer that God will take care of his trustful, obedient children.

25. To his stature—No anxiety will alter our bodily height, and the other conditions of our life are as fixed by God's laws as that is, as little therefore dependent upon our volition.

27. Consider the lilies—Here again we may think of the lesson as drawn immediately from the surrounding objects. The hill-sides of Galilee are clothed in spring with the crown imperial, and the golden amaryllis, and crimson tulips, and anemones of all shades from scarlet to white, to say nothing of the commoner buttercups and dandelions and daisies; and all these are probably classed roughly together under the general name of "lilies." And these, with what we may reverently speak of as a love of nature, the Lord tells his disciples to "consider," that is, not merely to look at with a passing glance, but to study—to learn, as it were, by heart—till they have realized every beauty of structure and form and line. I say unto you—The formula of emphasis is not without a special force here. Comp. Matt. xvii, 10-19. Man's gaze was drawn to the "gorgeous apparel," the gold-embroidered robes of kings and emperors. Chap. vii, 25; Acts xii, 21. Jewish traditions as to the glory of Solomon represented even his attendants as clothed in purple, and with hair glittering with gold-dust. He, the true Son of David, saw in the simplest flower that grows a glory above them all. "The lily shames the king." Solomon in all his glory—1. Kings iii, 13; x, 1-29, and, for a splendid description of his progresses in the royal chariot, Cant. iii, 6-11.

28. The grass, which is to-day in the field—The term is used generally to include the meadow-flowers which were cut down with the grass, and used as fodder or as fuel. The scarcity of wood in Palestine made the latter use more common there than in Europe. Oven—Strictly, a covered earthen vessel, wider at bottom than at top, in which bread was baked by putting hot embers round it. O ye of little faith—The word is found only in our Lord's teaching, and the passages in which it occurs are all singularly suggestive. The disciples were not faithless or unbelieving, but their trust was weak. They lacked in moments of anxiety the courage which leads men to rely implicitly on the love and wisdom of their father. So in the stormy night on the lake, or when Peter began to sink in the waves, or when the disciples had forgotten to take bread, the same word recurs.

29. The Greek tongue put the word "Ye" in the foreground with special emphasis in contrast with the heathen. As to yourselves (my children) seek ye not anxiously what ye shall eat or drink, nor be ye like the meteors, floating in mid-air, fickle, changeful in their course, all unstable (the sense of "doubtful mind;") for the Gentiles who have no God to trust are seeking all these things with restless anxiety. Let them have their care to themselves; it befits them more than you; for they know not the Father above, who would care for them too if they but knew and would trust him; besides, your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things. Never a want of food or of clothing can escape his eye. He needs no information from you on these points. Your prayerful heart may cast itself in loving trust on his providing hand. Seek ye the interests of God's kingdom, and he will provide these lesser things for you. He gives you scope for labor in the service of his kingdom; therefore devote your chief labor, your great care, to the work he gives you in this service. Then the other things you need will be added unto you—so much thrown in, as it were, without charge! It is so easy for God to see that your "bread shall be given and your water shall be sure," if only your heart and hand are thoroughly devoted to the great work of his kingdom. Neither be ye of doubtful mind—Literally, Do not toss about like boats in the offing—a metaphor for suspense.

30. For all these things do the nations of the world seek after—"You look down upon the heathen nations, and think of yourselves as God's people, yet in what do you excel them, if you seek only what they are seeking?" Your Father knoweth. The outer life of man, and its accidents, may well be left to the wisdom of the All-knowing. It lies below the region of true prayer, or occupies an altogether subordinate place within it.

31. Rather seek ye the kingdom of God—The context shows that the words point to the "seeking" of prayer, rather than of act, though the latter meaning is, of course, not excluded. What is thus to be sought is "the kingdom of God," the higher spiritual life in its completeness, for ourselves and for others; and with it we are to seek "his righteousness," that which, being perfect beyond the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, must be his gift to us, and therefore to be sought in prayer. One who seeks for this may well be content to leave all else in his Father's hands. Even without his asking, "they shall be added unto him" in such measure as is best for him.

32. Fear not, little flock—The words continue to be spoken to the inner circle of the disciples. They are "the little flock" (the Greek has the article) to whom the Father was pleased to give the kingdom which is "righteousness and peace and joy." There is an implied recognition of the fact that the "flock" had passed beyond the stage of seeking for the kingdom. In its essence it was theirs already.

33. Sell that ye have—In its generalized form the precept is peculiar to St. Luke, but it has its parallel in the command given to the young ruler. It was clearly one of the precepts which his own characteristic tendencies led him to record, and which found its fulfillment in the overflowing love that showed itself in the first days of the church of the apostles. Subsequent experience may have modified the duty of literal obedience, but the principle implied in it is, that it is wise to sit loose to earthly possessions, possessing them as though we possessed not. Give alms—This is the true way of investing worldly wealth—"He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." Treasure in the heavens—These, as in the parallel passage of Matt. vi, 20, are the good works, or rather the character formed by them, which follow us into the unseen world, and are subject to no process of decay. So men are "rich in good works;" "rich in faith" are made partakers of the "unsearchable riches of Christ and his glory."

34. Where your treasure is—Men may try to persuade themselves that they will have a treasure on earth and a treasure in heaven also, but, in the long run, one or the other will asserts its claim to be the treasure, and will claim the no longer divided allegiance of the heart. A cogent reason for depositing treasure in heaven is, that it will naturally draw your heart thither, and so make heaven more dear and precious to your soul—reacting, moreover, upon your character to mold it into the image of heaven's purity and love.

Missionary.

Mexican Christians.

MR. EDITOR: I have thought for some time of giving your readers the impression that Protestantism has made upon our Mexican brethren, and how they view the outlook for the future. This purpose was intensified and materialized at our dinner-table on yesterday. We had with us the Rev. L. G. Prietor, the presiding elder of the San Luis Potosi district, and our "table talk" was on this subject. He said the past had seemed as a strange and uncertain spiritual struggle, marked by suffering and conflicts that sometimes looked as if they would turn the scale of effort, and thus result in the abandonment of the field, while at other times they revealed a heroism that inspired the natives with a hope that great results must some day follow. With great emotion, he then said: "I see it all now; the sowing day is giving place to the reaping day, and to me our future is luminous with a hope I hardly expected to see." And this seems to be the impression they all have of the work now going on in this field.

As many of your readers know, I am not a novice in church work, and after a close study of all the points for the past seven months I can truly say I have never seen greater promise for the church in any charge I ever served than now appears in the Mexico district. I have but recently received into our church the Rev. Nestor Gomez, the leading spirit of the work conducted by the late Rev. Mr. Paseo. He is one of the best trained and evenly poised men I have met in this field, and with an influence that can be used to great advantage to our church in the Tolnca Valley. His father was one, if not the first, martyrs to the cause of Protestantism in this field, and he impresses me as being a real son of his father in his devotion to the cause of Christ. But we need a few hundred dollars and a presiding elder in Tolnca at once to push the advantages gained. I may be able to press the work there in connection with the demands upon me in other parts of the district for a little while longer, and, if necessary, will do so; but it is a tax upon my physical strength that must soon produce its effect. I am from home from two to four days out of each week, and many a night is spent in restless tossing from side to side without sleep, and often I have to leave home tired and languid from a previous journey. But if the church can not afford relief, we will try to endure the toil and hold up her banner until such time that she may be able to send us help in men and means.

I suppose the reader has concluded that I have forgotten the caption of my article. But they must allow a short exhortation after so good a sermon. Our conversation then drifted into our personal religious experience, and I assure you it was a feast of fat things to my soul. Bro. Prietor then said: "I am ashamed to confess it, but there was a time even since my conversion when I was greatly lacking in confidence in my God. But he has so often heard and answered my prayers, that I can now truly say, 'My trust is in the Lord.' The first experience was in the case of my wife. When we were married she was not a Christian, and for three months I lived on my knees, pleading with God to give her the experience I had in my own heart, and when I knew she had received that blessing I think I was the happiest man in Mexico. Then we both began praying for her mother and sister, and we kept this up for years without apparent result. So at our last Conference I felt it was my duty to take some small charge in our district, where we could have them with us and talk with them while we prayed for them. And you can't know how badly hurt I was and disappointed when I was read out for the San Luis Potosi district. I went to my work feeling the Bishop had allowed himself used to defeat the purpose of God to use me as a means of leading those so dear to our hearts to Christ, and that possibly before the year was out they would be gone and lost. Well, the last time I was in the city I went to see them and found them both converted, in the church and happy. So I hurried back home to tell my wife the good news, and when she heard it she clasped her hands, and said, in a loud voice: 'Glory to God!' This thought me that, while the Lord heard and answered my prayers, he was not dependent upon me to work his blessed will. And I tell you, brother, I am a happy man, and am now ready for work anywhere and in any way the Lord and the church may desire. My confidence is perfect."

I told him the Lord knew him perfectly, and he knew that it was only necessary that he should have an introduction to his Lord, that he might love and trust him fully, and that he had used this experience to bring him into closer and a more loving and trusting relation to Christ. He said, "Yes, if we could all have a personal introduction to Christ, that would reveal him in the personal experiences of our lives, we would all love and trust him fully." To this I answered, "Amen!"

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

Wonders

Are wrought by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor in restoring gray hair to its original color, promoting a new growth, preventing the hair from falling, keeping it soft, silky, and abundant, and the scalp cool, healthy, and free from dandruff or humors. The universal testimony is that this preparation has no equal as a dressing, and is, therefore, indispensable to every well-furnished toilet.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for some time and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor my head is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth, of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair to use Ayer's Hair Vigor as a dressing."—Mrs. Lydia O. Moody, East Pittston, Me.

"Some time ago my wife's hair began to come out quite freely.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

not only prevented my wife from becoming bald, but it also caused an entirely new growth of hair. I am ready to certify to this statement before a justice of the peace."—H. Hulsebus, Lewisburgh, Iowa.

"Some years ago, after a severe attack of brain fever, my hair all came out. I used such preparations for restoring it as my physicians ordered, but failed to produce a growth of hair. I then tried, successively, several articles recommended by druggists, and all alike fell short of accomplishing the desired result. The last remedy I applied was Ayer's Hair Vigor, which brought a growth of hair in a few weeks. I think I used eight bottles in two years; more than was necessary as a restorative, but I liked it as a dressing, and have continued to use it for that purpose. I believe Ayer's Hair Vigor possesses virtues far above those of any similar preparation now on the market."—Vincent Jones, Richmond, Ind.

THURSDAY, JUNE 12, 1890.

Centenary College.

The commencement exercises of this venerable institution of learning began Sunday, June 1. The attendance of students during the session has been the largest since the war. The work of the year has been most gratifying, both to the professors and the patrons of the college. The students, for the most part, have acquitted themselves well. The esprit de corps of the college is very fine, and the conduct of the students during the year almost unexceptionable. The examinations, preparatory to commencement, were highly satisfactory to both faculty and students.

Sunday, eleven A. M., June 1, a very large audience assembled in the college chapel to hear the annual sermon, preached by the writer, from I. Cor. xv, 26. Sunday night, Dr. C. F. Evans, presiding elder of the New Orleans district, addressed the Young Men's Christian Association, the subject being, "Gather up the fragments that nothing remain." The subject was well handled, and the young men got many golden grains of wisdom which will be a rich treasure from which to draw in the time to come.

Monday morning the annual exercises of the literary societies began with the Franklin Institute, five of the graduates for this year being members of this old society. The opening address by the president, young Pharr, was well conceived and beautifully delivered. The valedictory to the graduates by young Putnam was an appropriate address, and did honor to the speaker. Then the diplomas and society pins were delivered, after which there were several small, extemporaneous speeches by visitors. The hall was crowded with "brave men and fair women," promising youths and gay maidens, and the exercises, from beginning to close, were enlivened by strains of sweet music from an imported band of musicians.

At night the preparatory school had its annual contest for the medal for the best declamation. Twelve young athletes entered the arena and engaged enthusiastically in the contest. The young men acquitted themselves well. The contest was a spirited one. The speakers evidenced the fact of careful training by a skilled hand. Several visitors remarked the manifest improvement in this contest over the declamation of former years. The judges were convinced, however, that the best declaimer was young Lewis, who spoke a very difficult piece with great ease.

Tuesday morning the Union Literary Society hall was crowded to its utmost capacity with people eager to witness the society graduation of seven of its members. The exercises consisted in speech-making and the delivery of pins and diplomas. The young gentlemen acquitted themselves with great credit. Among the extemporaneous speeches, one from Bishop Keener, on the "Mistakes of Geologists," was a real "eye-opener" to many interested hearers.

The Alumni Association held its anniversary meeting at eleven A. M. The speaker for the occasion failed to appear; consequently there was no annual address. The poet for the occasion, I. D. Wall, of Clinton, La., delivered an exquisite little poem on "Commencement Day in Former Times," which was listened to with profound attention, and spoken highly of by all. The thought of the poem was excellent, the meter was unexceptionable—just that sort which sounds well when spoken—and Mr. Wall's fine voice and graceful manner contributed to give the poem to the audience in a way almost above criticism.

At night came the joint oratorical contest between the two literary societies, and the annual literary address by Prof. W. R. Sims, of the University of Mississippi. There were five speakers, whose speeches averaged twenty-five minutes apiece. This fact we consider a pure and simple outrage upon a long-suffering audience. The young men seemed to be "speaking against time." The idea seemed to be, "the longest pole will bring down the persimmons." The clock was striking the hour of eleven when Prof. Sims was introduced to the audience. This inviting a stranger from abroad to make an address, and then putting him up near midnight to speak to an assembly already wearied to disorder by the intolerable length of five preceding speeches, is a custom that deserves the severest reprehension. We say "custom," because it is such. We have known five or six of these midnight assassinations, and we think it is time for them to stop.

Prof. Sims spoke clearly and with great ease on, "Faith, the Basis of Knowledge." His arraignment of some of the would-be-thought scientists before the bar of reason, and the points made to show the illogical process of their minds in reaching conclusions, was as skillful a piece of dialectics as we have ever heard. Everyone who heard the address commended it in highest terms, and, notwithstanding the disadvantages of his position, Prof. Sims won for himself a place among the foremost thinkers and speakers of the day.

The committee appointed to award the medal for the best speech, after twenty-four hours' deliberation, awarded it to J. T. Liggette.

Centenary College can draw a bigger crowd than any place of which we have knowledge. More carriages and buggies can be seen on its campus on commencement occasions than can be seen anywhere else. So, early on Wednesday, commencement day, the people began to pour in from all directions, and, by the time the exercises were announced to begin, the large audience-room was well filled with interested friends. The class of this year is the largest since 1860. We give the names: F. R. Alexander, Alexandria, La.; C. S. E. Babington, Franklinton, La.; P. M. Brown; Woodville, Miss.; T. W. Fuller, Minden, La.; J. S. Johnston, Forest, Miss.; W. H. Lewis, Crystal Springs, Miss.; W. J. Roberts, Clinton, La.; O. H. Simpson, Lafayette, La.; J. M. Sims, Simsboro, La.; C. B. Smith, Jackson, La.; A. Tomb, Jackson, La.; T. W. Whiteman, Jackson, La.; H. M. Wilkinson, Gloster, Miss. Among these we note that four are the sons of itinerant Methodist preachers. The faculty hesitated not to declare that for correct scholarship, manliness of bearing and integrity of character, this is the best class Centenary has graduated for a long, long time.

Several of these graduates are preachers, all except one are members of the church, and all, without exception, have won by their conduct the lasting esteem of their teachers and the unqualified admiration of the citizens of the town. Such a class, going forth into the world to practice the lessons learned and to illustrate the value of the Principles implanted in their natures, is no trifling recommendation of the school which sends them forth. But this has ever been the case with Centenary. She points with pride to those she has sent forth into the world to fight its great battles.

The speeches of these young gentlemen evinced careful thinking, close reasoning, choice rhetoric, and were delivered with an ease and grace of manner seldom equaled and never excelled. The subjects discussed showed that their minds were already taking hold of the perplexing problems of the day. "Woman's Sphere," "The Dominion of Law," "Organization," "Socialism," "American Realities," "Centralization," "Commercial Progress," and the ubiquitous "Brother in Black," were the subjects upon which the graduates discoursed, and they were all well, some of them ably, handled. A new feature in the graduating exercises was a debate between four of the graduates, the question being the disfranchisement of the Negro. The debate was characterized by the utmost fairness and Christian courtesy by both sides, and the discussion would have done credit to men of riper age and larger experience. We have never listened to a stronger presentation of the arguments for both sides of this question. The committee, to whom was referred the decision of the contest, gave their voice in favor of the affirmative. Each of the literary societies had offered a gold medal to the best debater from its own body. Of the Union Literary Society debaters, the medal was won by P. M. Brown; and F. A. Alexander, of the Franklin Institute, won the medal on his side. These young men are sons of preachers. Thus ended the literary and elocutionary exercises of the occasion, and, we can not refrain from saying, that, after being a regular attendant upon these commencements for seven or eight years past, we unhesitatingly pronounce that there has been exhibited this year a vast improvement in this department over any previous year. The faculty bear a like testimony to the improvement of the students in the regular work in the class-room. With such a record, and such an exhibition that the record is true, Centenary is not ashamed to ask for an increased number of students to train in like manner for the work of life. Having made such a record, she has the right to expect a more liberal support from her friends, and their highest privilege is to co-operate with her in doing this good work for the country and for the church.

The Board of Trustees held their usual meetings during the progress of the commencement exercises. The report of the president of the college was very gratifying, showing that good order and studious habits had obtained among the students. The number of students had increased about 75 per cent. over the number in attendance last year. In plainer words, the number of students had increased from 80 to 137. This is the largest number in attendance since the war, and already a number of new students to take the places of the recent graduates have made application for admission, and, without doubt, next term will witness a larger attendance than this.

The report of the treasurer lifted the Board right up into the clear sunshine of the mountain-top, and broadened the horizon all around. The receipt of funds was nearly double what it was last year. The consequence of this was that the teachers have been much better paid and more repairs have been made, and everything wears a more thrifty and cheerful look. The financial outlook is better than ever, and growing still better day by day. The endowment fund has reached the sum of $52,000 in six per cent. notes, and is increasing all the time. The friends of the college are now sure of its success. The old institution has "passed the center" and is now moving grandly upward; and will soon take its former place among the educational institutions of the church and country.

The Board of Trustees conferred the degree of D. D. upon Rev. David J. Waller, secretary of the British Conference, and upon Rev. John W. Lewis, of the Louisville Conference. Rev. C. F. Evans, D. D., was elected to preach the commencement sermon next year. The faculty of the college remains the same, with the addition of a chair of English language and literature, to be filled by Rev. B. M. Drake, of the Mississippi Conference.

And now let our friends throughout our territory begin the canvass for new students and more endowment for this college. The literary and scientific advantages of this institution are equal to those of any college, while its moral and religious advantages are superior to those of any college of which we have knowledge. These two facts are sufficient to induce any parent or guardian to send his boys to Centenary.

Then and Now.

We have surmised that in the apostolic age of the church, if a congregation were seeking a pastor (if congregations were affected with the habit of choosing their pastors in that age, which we very much doubt) that the first question foreshadowing an engagement would have been, "Has he the tongue of fire?" Among other things less important, Has he the qualification to wake the dead with such plain themes as "repentance," "faith," and the "new birth," and is he reasonably free from all affectation of worldly methods in addressing the souls of men upon issues that are purely heavenly?

Thus they would have spoken in lofty discussion of the essentials of that ministry which filled a Savior's heart and hands, and which, doubtless, the angels that, as "flames of fire," do his bidding in other and commoner service, "go envying us."

Ah! but that must have been a winsome eloquence which held the descendants of greater Troy until past midnight with one voice of beseeching; that "almost persuaded" Agrippa, the heir of all the infamies of the line of Herod; that terrified Felix, the libidinous monster, and stilled the Jerusalem mob as with the wand of Mercury, indeed. Even Apollos, who was the nearest approach to a rhetorician and to the holiday pulpit arts of our time, was "mighty in the Scriptures," and in imagination we have always compared his voice to the dying echo of that more magical ministry which in the person of the martyr Stephen overcame in the synagogues of the Cyrenians and Alexandrians, and smote the Sanhedrin with knife-thrusts which "cut to the heart," and in Philip that was "the great power of God" in Samaria and Philistia, and in Peter that shook Jerusalem with diviner results than were produced by the night and storm of Calvary, on the day of Pentecost. We have tried in reminiscent mood, calling up those scenes and characters, to conceive of John the Baptist and his eloquent namesake, the loving and beloved, as cracking a joke or "courting a grin" while opening their embassy to listening throngs in forest and city desert, or pausing in stridulous mid-voice, and, with hands thrust in pockets, or resting defiantly on the hip-joints, to give a storm of applause time to waste itself in zephyrs, but in vain. We have tried to think of Paul as advising his young proteges, Timothy and Titus, to attend a school of elocution in the most rhetorical age and community of the world, and of Peter as putting John Mark to hermeneutics and hypostatics (not to say bombastics and ectatics) in the school of one Gamaliel or of one Tyrranus, but we quite broke down under that effort of imagination. No, no; from all we can gather from many sources of information, things were different then. Paul, addressing the cult of Athens from that very Bema where Demosthenes thundered, was no more like Demosthenes than a Grecian whirlwind was like the storm and earthquake and still small voice of the cave of Horeb. The one drew his lightning from a human heart, to discourse about the known, the other down from heaven to depict the unknown, and though both the latter theme and voice were unknown to them, they were quite as anxious to give it a rehearing as the former. A Christian congregation in that age, we may well suppose, if it had by any accident been placed in a position where it would have been driven to choose a pastor, would have inquired first of all concerning a postulant, Has he strength, solidity, supernaturalness? Is he intoxicated with the wine that made the apostles' speech irresistible? Is he a lightning rod rather than a magnetic battery?

But things are changed, how changed! We have boxed the compass of sacred credentials for Christian leadership from the apostolical to the theatrical, and from Paul the inimitable to a very fifth-rate edition of Apollos. The question is (hear it, ye Greeks and Romans, who were more highly privileged), "Can he tear a passion to tatters?" Can he mouth his words with the fluency of the Tabernacle pulpit, and get out more hammered sentences of the ornate tribe to the square minute than the man who presides at the Boston Monday lecture? Can he give us more poetry and witty stories and illuminated biography and hypercriticism of various kinds than we can buy for five cents over the counter of the Sunday newspaper? Has he gymnastics and bombastics ad libitum? Can he instruct us, entertain us, electrify us—in a word, keep us awake in the midst of cushioned splendor and Italian fresco—for, say, thirty minutes on a stretch. It is said that there is a certain church in a certain Conference that is such an Æolian combination of tuneful strings that no minister can be found within the boundaries of the latter, who has wind enough of an approved sort to play on it. But of this interesting fact we regret to say that there is no testimony from the outside.

Millsaps College—Progress.

Millsaps College Endowment Fund continues to grow. Since April 1, the financial agent, Rev. A. F. Watkins, has raised more than $4,000. More than $1,500 of this amount comes from the city of Vicksburg. In that city Bro. Watkins received a subscription of $1,000 from a gentleman who is a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church. This is the second $1,000 contribution from a non-Methodist source. May these examples stimulate the liberality of Mississippi Methodism! It has now been more than a year since seventy-five thousand Methodists began the task of raising $50,000 for the cause of Christian education. The task is not yet completed. How much longer shall we wait? There are many thousands of Methodist people in Mississippi who have not yet made a contribution to this cause. A few of these are rich; a larger number well-to-do; the rest are poor. Now if the rich, the well-to-do, and the poor will give according to ability, the requisite sum will soon be raised. Let every reader of the ADVOCATE, who is a friend to this enterprise, and who has not yet contributed, send his subscription at once to R. W. Millsaps, or Rev. A. F. Watkins. Brethren, don't wait for the agent to visit you and solicit a contribution. A very little reflection will suffice to show that it would require several years for the agent to visit every church in the two Conferences. Then why delay? The sooner the endowment fund is raised, the sooner the college will be located, and the sooner it will begin its beneficent work. Let no one withhold his contribution because it is small. Even the smallest contribution will be thankfully received. We have not forgotten the Savior's utterances concerning the widow and her mites. This enterprise has especial claims upon the poor, for they are to be its chief beneficiaries. Millsaps College will seek to place a liberal education within reach of the toiling masses. W. C. BLACK.

P. S.—A thoughtful brother has just suggested to me that, perhaps, the chief reason why the seventy-five thousand Methodists of our State have been so long in raising the small sum of $50,000 is that we preachers have not read our Discipline carefully enough to find in it the following language:

"What are the duties of a preacher who has the charge of a circuit, station, or mission?"

"Ans. 16. To preach upon the subject of Christian education," etc.

Is the brother right in this?

W. C. B.

The Lottery is in bad luck.

The Lottery has managed to draw a larged-sized blank.

"Religious people" are rarely, if ever, Christians.

The player's last chance is the Lottery's main chance.

If you pay nothing for the conversion of the world, Satan will not harm you.

While poor Louisiana suffers crucifixion, the agents of her undoing cast lots upon her effects. "'Twas ever thus."

What you need, brother, is more prayer meeting and less illustrated magazine.

The Methodist who does not take his church paper should "repent and do the first works over."

Young Elihu was a member of the late General Conference, but his contents did not always materialize.

What a friend the paper has in the preacher! He is deaf and dumb when he finds a man who does not take it.

The "previous question" is a very dangerous weapon in a deliberative body, and should be used with moderation.

The devil can outvote us, "because broad is the road that leadeth to destruction and many there be which go in thereat."

Moonshine eloquence may cause the tides of motion to rise, but it can never produce effects like those on the mountain near to Damascus.

The secretaries of a legislative body are only by courtesy elected from its membership, and should not use their advantageous position either to impede or hurry the business of statute-making.

Young Apollos was learned somewhat, the pink of beautiful declamation, and, perhaps, wore a boutonniere, but his pastoral incumbency was almost too much for the great church of Achaia.

The church that has been efficiently served "all the days of the years of its life" by the appointees of one plan of administration should reflect long and painfully before it flies to another of which it knows not.

Personal and Otherwise.

Our brethren must be patient about the obituaries sent to this office. The General Conference work has crowded out nearly everything else. We have seventy-five obituaries on hand, and they will appear in the order in which they came to the office—if it takes till Christmas.

Many "notes from the work" have also been crowded out by General Conference proceedings. We hope our brethren will take no offense at this, and will continue to send short notes of the progress of the battle.

The telegraph tells us of the burning of our church and parsonage in New Iberia. A great loss. No particulars.

Rev. John Mathews, D. D., the inimitable lecturer, and New Orleans favorite of other days, will lecture for the benefit of Rayne Memorial Organ Fund at Washington Artillery Hall, Thursday evening, June 19. Bro. Mathews' stay in the city will be quite brief, and he will not preach or be heard on any other occasion in public. Let the people turn out and give him an ovation.

The following young ladies graduated this year at Peabody Normal College, Nashville, Tenn: Helen Davis, Lake Providence; Maggie C. Manson, Donaldsonville; Leola Belle White, Arcadia, licentiate of instruction. Miss Manson took the honors of her class of seventy.

In a private note to the editor, Rev. Robert Randle, presiding elder of Homer district, says: "We are having some gracious meetings at different points on the district, and the people seem more alive to their spiritual interest and those things that tend to the good or destruction of communities or the country. Your paper is doing much for this end, especially against the great evils of the day. May God give you mind and heart to set forth all principles for our good, and as to receive and appropriate."

The business manager, Bro. Mitchel, has received a private note from the presiding elder of Seashore district, from which we quote the following: "The Seashore District Conference fell in love with you, and we want you to come again. During the quarter about two hundred joined the church, and the presiding elder traveled nearly 1,900 miles. We are going to boom the ADVOCATE."

Our Baptist friends are pushing their columns forward everywhere on the educational line. Mr. Rockefellow, of New York, some time since offered them $600,000 for a university at Chicago, conditioned on their raising the sum to $1,000,000. Now the intelligence comes that they have more than met the condition, and the Baptist University at Chicago is an assured fact. They have in hand now $1,250,000. We congratulate them on their success. About one year ago Mr. Peter James, of Mississippi, offered $25,000 to the endowment fund of Centenary, provided any individual or the church would raise a like sum, and the proposition still lies open. Is no individual willing to give that amount? Will the whole church suffer such a gift to lapse?

Our Presbyterian friends have disposed of the revision question for the present. The General Assembly appointed a committee of fifteen ministers and ten laymen to "formulate and report to the General Assembly of 1891 such alterations and amendments to the Confession of Faith as, in their judgment, may be deemed advisable." Another resolution, however, "hedges" the committee. It provides that "they shall not propose any alterations or amendments that will in any way impair the integrity of the Reformed or Calvinistic system of doctrine taught in the Confession of Faith." So the churches will have rest for a year, at least.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. G. W. Huff writes of Livingston circuit, Mississippi Conference: "I am having plenty of water on this circuit; been overflowed ever since March. Spiritual condition very good. We had sore trial on May 25. The angel of death came and took our little girl, Lennie. We submit to his will, who doeth all things well. I ask my friends to pray for us in our distress."

—Presiding Elder John A. Miller writes from New Iberia, La: "My second round, nearly closed, has been very pleasant and profitable. There has been some move upward all along the line; prospects are more cheerful and encouraging. The spiritual interest is decidedly improving on most of the works; prayer meetings well attended at most places. Sunday congregations are large and seem deeply impressed; an increase in membership on nearly all the circuits. We are enlarging the field, going into the "regions beyond." Have organized at Lake Artbur, a place never preached at before. Have a valuable local elder there, from Kansas this spring—Dr. J. L. Gibson."

—Rev. G. W. Bachman writes from Como, Miss., June 2, 1890: "A meeting was begun here, May 25, by the pastor, Rev. E. H. Cacy. Rev. J. Ritchey, of Sardis, did the preaching four days, when, according to previous engagement, Rev. M. L. Blanton, of Nashville, Tenn., arrived and took charge. Under his practical and earnest ministry the church is being quickened and sinners awakened. Nine persons were received into the church yesterday, and a goodly number were at the altar for prayers to-day. Three services are being held daily with good attendance, and gracious results at each. Several preachers are aiding in the meeting, and we are laboring and praying for great results."

Port Gibson Female College.

On April 15, Miss M. E. Compton was elected to the presidency of Port Gibson Female College, her term of office beginning with the next session. This is a high compliment, as there were many applicants for the position. Miss Compton has been connected with the college for several years past, and here, as well as elsewhere, has manifested such ability that the trustees not only thought themselves justified in committing to her hands the interests of the institution, but believed themselves exceedingly fortunate in securing one of such approved capacity.

Miss Compton will associate with herself the best teachers in all departments, and the college will be thoroughly equipped for work.

The boarding department, which has been unsurpassed hitherto, will continue to receive special attention. The Institution, under Miss Compton's management, will be progressive in the best sense.

The present session is prosperous—the outlook is hopeful.

Give Johnson's Anodyne Liniment a fair chance, and it always "gets there" when needed.

Notice.

The Columbus District Conference for Columbus district, North Mississippi Conference, will begin its next session at 3 P. M., on Thursday, June 26. Sunday-school interests will be considered on that afternoon. Will the preachers in charge please bring written reports on Sunday-school, education, finance, church literature, church and parsonage building, and the spiritual condition of their respective charges? Please let the reports on these topics be written separately from each other, so that they can be presented to the Conference as each subject may be called up. This will facilitate our work and help the secretary.

The Conferences to meet at Louisville, Winston county, Miss. Ample provision will be made for the horses of those who may go by private conveyance, and those who can conveniently go that way are advised to do so. Those who go by rail will be met at Ackerman on Thursday, June 26, in time to be conveyed sixteen miles to Louisville, in time for the opening of the Conference. The train going east from Durant will reach Ackerman about 9:30 A. M. The local freight going west arrives there about 11 A. M. Let all come to make this Conference a blessing to that community, to our work and to our souls. If Bishop Galloway's duties will allow, he will be present.

W. T. J. SULLIVAN, P. E.

Notice.

The Mississippi Conference Woman's Missionary Society will meet in the First M. E. Church, South, Meridian, Miss., June 28 to July 1, inclusive.

Names of delegates should be sent at once to Mrs. E. P. Mellen, No. 1319 N. 22nd avenue, Meridian, Miss.

Reduced rates will probably be given over all railroads.

BIRDS-EYE VIEW OF THE SEA SHORE CAMP GROUNDS, NEAR BILOXI MISS

CAMP MEETING.

The Nineteenth Annual Camp Meeting on the SEASHORE CAMP GROUND will open JULY 11TH, next, and continue for ten days.

Eminent preachers will assist in conducting the religious services, as heretofore.

Ample accommodations will be provided for all visitors.

Two commodious bath-houses render the finest salt-water bathing on the coast accessible to all.

The Grounds are 78 miles from New Orleans, immediately fronting the beach, and on the line of the L. and N. railroad. All trains stop at the station during the meeting, landing visitors within 100 yards of the enclosure.

Reduced fares will be in force over all connecting roads for the meeting.

The gate fee for entrance into the Grounds is 50 cents for the season, or 25 cents for the day. The revenue thus obtained is used for improving the Grounds.

Preachers will be furnished sleeping accommodation free of charge, and tickets for meals at the restaurant at half rates, as heretofore.

Railroad tickets—Louisville and Nashville—on sale from July 6 to 22; good until 31st. Excursion tickets also on sale to Camp Ground; good to return on to September 30. All trains will stop at Grounds during Camp Meeting, July 11 to 22, inclusive.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER.
SPRING No. 1.
Nature's Boon to Women!
Its Value in Atonic Dyspepsia, Chronic Malarial Poisoning, etc.

DR. WM. T. HOWARD, of Baltimore, Professor Diseases of Women and Children in the University of Maryland:

Dr. H. attests the common adaptation of this water in "a wide range of cases," with that of the far-famed White Sulphur Springs, in Greenbrier county, West Virginia, and adds the following: "Indeed, in a certain class of cases, it is much superior to the latter. I allude to the abiding ability attendant upon the tardy convalescence from grave acute diseases; and more especially to the Cachexia, and sequels incident to MALARIOUS FEVERS, in all their grades and varieties, to certain forms of ATONIC DYSPEPSIA and all the affections PECULIAR to WOMEN that are remediable at all by mineral waters. In short, were I called upon to state from what mineral waters I have seen the greatest and most unmistakable amount of good accrue in the largest number of cases in a general way, I would unhesitatingly say the Buffalo Springs, in Mecklenburg county, Va."

DR. G. HALSTEAD BOYLAN, late Professor of Surgery, Baltimore Medical College, Member American Medical Association, etc., former Resident Physician at the Springs:

"Buffalo Water, Spring No. 1, is perhaps more than any other water in the world a specific for diseases of the FEMALE PELVIC such as ANTERSION or FLEXION, RETROVERSION or FLEXION, and DISPLACEMENTS generally. It not only fortifies the constitution, but has a direct influence upon the broad and round ligaments of the UTERUS, strengthening these when relaxed, so that cases that came to the Springs with very decided displacements, returned home with the uterus in situ, all the unpleasant sensations of dragging and pain in the back gone, and the general health perfect. One peculiarity of the water of Spring No. 1 is that it acts as a MENSTRUAL REGULATOR; in cases of AMENORRHŒA it induces the CATAMENIA, while in cases of DYSMENORRHŒA it allays the pain and reduces the excessive flow of blood, amounting to MENORRHAGIA, to the normal standard. In both diseases a course of this water tends to make the flow appear at the regular intervals of twenty-eight days, accommodating itself in some unaccountable manner to each class of cases. I have prescribed the water of Spring No. 1 very successfully in cases of obstinate Female Constipation. Some of these cases had been previously treated with belladona, tinct. physostigma, liquor potassa, arsenitis, etc., and only obtained permanent relief by the continued use of this Water."

A HUNTER'S HORN.

A hunter once, in days of old,
When wandering in the forest green,
Espied a horn of glittering gold,
And fairy workmanship, I ween.

With jewels were the sides embossed,
And silver fair was it within;
The pious knight his bosom crossed—
"To leave it here would be a sin."

The horn he grasped, and blew a strain
So sweet the warbles stopped to hear,
Then bound it to his baldric chain
And firmly grasped his trusty spear.

Away he rode, and prospered well;
No chief withstood his doughty blow;
And legends of the period tell
The many triumphs o'er the foe.

Upon the battle-field he died,
Triumphant still; but when they sought
The fairy trumpet by his side,
The eager search secured them naught.

But on the spot where fell the knight,
A wondrous flower was seen to grow;
An image of that lost delight—
The golden-horn of long ago.

Mollie's Little Lesson.

"O, how the sun shines!" said Mollie, as she got out of bed on a spring morning.

"I know the little wild flowers are peeping up in the grove. I know just where the darling little anemones and the bluebells grow. And there are violets, too. O, dear! I don't want to go to school."

Mollie finished dressing and looked over towards the grove.

"I don't believe I'm very well. I wonder if I don't look pale."

She went to the glass, and was sorry to see how rosy her round cheeks were.

"But I don't feel very well, anyway."

She put on a doleful face, and kept it so until she sat down to breakfast. It was hard work not to smile when her little kitty ran frolicking over the floor after a marble.

"What is the matter, Mollie?" asked her mama.

"I don't feel very well, mama. I think I'd better not go to school to day. I need a little fresh air."

Mollie looked more doleful than ever, as she passed up her plate for some beefsteak and pancakes.

"If you are not well, my dear, you can only eat oatmeal," said mama.

Mollie did not like oatmeal; but she thought of the anemones, and made the best of it.

"I think you had better lie down," said mama, leading Mollie upstairs. "And you will be more comfortable with your clothes off."

And before Mollie had time to think, there she was in bed that beautiful morning!

"Can't I have my picture-books or my paint-box?" she asked.

"No, dear, not till you get well."

O, what a long morning it was! The sun shone, and the birds sang, and Mollie wished with all her heart that she was on the pleasant way to her pleasant school.

When dinner-time came mama brought her some toast, though she was hungry for roast mutton.

"Can't Hetty and Tom come into my room?" she asked, when they returned from school.

"No; you must be kept quiet," said mamma.

How she hated the quiet. She thought she would never again want a rest. As she had a great deal of time, she began to think that she had tried very hard to feel sick, but it was not quite true that she had been.

She told mama so when she came to hear her prayers.

"Whenever you are tempted to tell what is not true, dear, think of this long day in bed," said mama, kissing her.

As mama went downstairs, she smiled to herself, saying,

"I think my dear little girlie has learned a lesson."—Sydney Dayre, in Our Little Folks.

WHERE TO FIND HEAVEN.—There was a Methodist preacher who preached one day on heaven. The next morning he was going down town and he met one of his old, wealthy members. This old fellow met the preacher, and he said: "Pastor, you preached a good sermon about heaven. You told me all about heaven, but you never told me where heaven is." "Ah," said the pastor, "I am glad of the opportunity this morning. I have just come from the hill-top yonder. In that cottage there is a member of your church. She is sick in bed with fever; her two little children are sick in the other bed, and she has not got a bit of coal or a stick of wood, or flour or sugar or any bread. If you will go down town and buy fifty dollars' worth of things, nice provisions, and send them up to her, and then go up there, and say, 'My sister, I have brought these nice provisions in the name of our Lord and Savior;' if you ask for a Bible and you read the twenty-third Psalm, and you then get down on your knees and pray—if you don't see heaven before you get all through, I'll pay the bill." The next morning he said, "Pastor, I saw heaven, and I spent fifteen minutes in heaven as certainly as you are listening."—Exchange.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to the ADVOCATE, I will try and write a little letter. I am eleven years old and I weigh eighty-five pounds. I go to school at home. My studies are reading, spelling, geography, philosophy, arithmetic and grammar. My school will close in a week. I am sorry, because my dear teacher has to leave us, for we all love her dearly. I go to Sunday-school whenever I can. My Sunday-school teacher's name is Dr. W. H. Scudder. Our preacher's name is Bro. E. M. Williams. I like him very well. We live in the country, two miles from town. We have been overflowed nearly two months, but glad to say the water has gone down and planting has commenced. I will close by asking a question: How many plagues did the Lord send on the Egyptians for Israel's sake, and what were they?

Your little friend,

VIDA I. GRAMLING.

MAYERSVILLE, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: Having seen so many letters from the young folks, we have concluded to write one. As times are so dull out this way, we can not promise an interesting letter. We have a very good Sunday-school out here. Dr. W. F. Roberts is our superintendent. We have six classes and forty scholars. Dr. Whitington is our preacher for this year, and we all like him very much. Rev. N. J. Roberts, who was our most acceptable, earnest and popular pastor for the past two years, will never be forgotten. We are unfortunate out here about one thing; that is, our country is flooded with whisky, which is the ruin of many a young man. We will close with best wishes to all the readers and writers of the dear old ADVOCATE.

CLARA HODGES,
MAY DUNN.

CLINTON, La.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl thirteen years old. I like to read the letters from little girls in the ADVOCATE. I have looked for the answer to cousin Alice Barrow's question, and find in Genesis ix, 29, that Noah lived to be 950 years old.

This is the best time of the whole year to purify your blood, because now you are more susceptible to benefit from medicine than at any other season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine to take, and it is the most economical—100 Doses One Dollar.

A PRACTICAL TEST.—A man arose in one of Moody's meetings and gave his experience. "I have been for five years on the Mount of Transfiguration." "How many souls did you lead to Christ last year?" was the sharp question that came from Mr. Moody in an instant. "Well, I don't know," was the astonished reply. "Have you saved any?" persisted Mr. Moody. "I don't know that I have," answered the man. "Well, we don't want that kind of mountain-top experience. When a man get so high that he can't reach down and save poor sinners, there is something wrong."

Household.

Obedience in Childhood.

No doubt the moral sentiment of Paul's age stretched parental authority to an extreme, and we need not hesitate to admit that the Christian idea of a father's power and a child's obedience has been much softened by Christianity; but the softening has come from the greater prominence given to love, rather than from the limitation given to obedience.

Our present domestic life seems to me to stand sorely in need of Paul's injunction. One can not but see that there is great laxity in this matter in many Christian households, in reaction, perhaps, from the too great severity of past times. Many causes lead to this unwholesome relaxation of parental authority. In our great cities, especially among the commercial classes, children are generally better educated than their fathers and mothers; know less of early struggles, and one often sees a sense of inferiority making a parent hesitate to command, as well as a misplaced tenderness making him hesitate to forbid. A very misplaced and cruel tenderness it is to say, "Would you like?" when he ought to say, "I wish." It is unkind to lay on young shoulders "the weight of too much liberty," and to introduce young hearts too soon to the sad responsibility of choosing between good and evil. It was better and more loving by far to put off that day, and to let the children feel that in the safe nest of home their feeble and ignorant goodness is sheltered behind a strong barrier of command, and their lives simplified by having the one duty of obedience.

And as for children, here is the one thing which God would have them do! "Obey your parents in all things." As father used to say when I was a boy—"Not only obedience, but prompt obedience." It is right. Then it is "pleasing"—fair and good to see, and making them agreeable in the eyes of all those whose approbation is worth having, and pleasing to themselves, saving them from many a bitter thought in after days, when the grave has closed over father and mother. One remembers the story of how Dr. Johnson, when a man, stood in the market-place at Litchfield, bare-headed, with the rain pouring on him, in remorseful remembrance of boyish disobedience to his dead father. "Children, obey your parents in all things," that you may be spared the stings of conscience for childish faults, which may be set tingling and smarting again even in old age.

LEARN TO BE HOUSEKEEPERS.—Begin with your own possessions, girls. Reform your upper bureau drawer; relieve your closet-pegs of their accumulation of garments out of use a month or two ago. Institute a clear and careful order in the midst of which you can daily move and learn to keep it so that it will be a part of your toilet to dress your room and its arrangements while you dress yourself, leaving the draperies you take off as lightly and artistically hung or as delicately folded and placed as the skirts you loop carefully to wear or the ribbon and lace you put with a soft neatness about your throat. Cherish your instincts of taste and fitness in every little thing you have about you. This will not make you "fussy;" it is the other thing that does that—the not knowing, except by fidgety experiment, what is harmony and the intangible grace of relation.

Take upon yourself gradually—for the sake of getting them in hand in like manner, if for no other need—all the cares that belong to your own small territory of home. Have your little wash-cloths and sponges for bits of cleaning; your furniture brush and your leather duster, and your light little broom, and your whisk and pan; your bottle of sweet oil and spirits of turpentine and piece of flannel to preserve the polish or restore the gloss where dark wood grows dim or gets spotted. Find out by following your surely-growing sense of thoroughness and niceness, the best and readiest ways of keeping all fresh about you. Invent your own processes; they will come to you. When you can make yourself wholly mistress of what you can learn and do in your own apartment, so that it is easier and more natural for you to do it than to let it alone, then you have learned to keep a whole house so far as its cleanly ordering is concerned.—St. Nicholas.

Sound-Shadows.

Still more interesting than the experiments of Colladon were those made in the Bay of San Francisco in 1874 by Prof. John Le Conte and his son, Mr. Julian Le Conte. The source of sound was not such as would give a definite pitch, like a bell, but the quick, violent, single impulse due to the explosion of dynamite employed in the blasting of rocks which obstructed the channels. The intensity of the shock thus propagated was such as to be felt as a blow on the feet of a person seated in a boat three hundred feet or more from the detonating cartridge, and to kill hundreds of fish. Several vertical posts of piles, each about a foot in diameter, projected from the ground out of the water in the neighborhood. A stout glass bottle was suspended in the water about a foot in the rear of one of these piles, within the geometric shadow determined by lines supposed to be drawn from the cartridge forty feet horizontally away. The bottle was perfectly protected from the shock of the explosion. It was then put in front of the pile. The first shock shivered it into hundreds of fragments. Other bottles, some filled with air and some with water, were similarly exposed in various directions around the pile, and with the same result—destruction, except when within the protecting shadow. The experiments were varied by immersing stout glass tubes, incased in thick paper, horizontally across the direction of the sound-rays in water, between two piles which were aligned with the dynamite cartridge. These piles were twelve feet apart, the nearer one being forty feet from the cartridge. Its shadow, therefore, just covered the second pile, and included the intermediate water, with the middle part of each tube. After an explosion these protected parts were found to be unbroken, while the ends which projected on the two sides beyond the shadow were completely shattered. The boundary between the regions of shadow and noise was sharply defined on the tubes, even at a distance of twelve feet behind the protecting pile.—Pop. Science Monthly.

HOW TO ACT WHEN BITTEN BY A RATTLESNAKE.—Dr. S. Weir Mitchell contributes to the Century a profusely illustrated article on "The Poison of Serpents," from which we quote the following: "I am often asked what I would do if bitten while far from help. If the wound be at tip of a finger, I should like to get rid of the part by some such prompt auto-surgical means as a knife or a possible hot iron affords. Failing these, or while seeking help, it is wise to quarantine the poison by two ligatures drawn tight enough to stop all circulation. The heart weakness is made worse by emotion, and at this time a man may need stimulus to enable him to walk home. As soon as possible some one should thoroughly infiltrate the seat of the bite with permanganate or other of the agents above mentioned. By working and kneading the tissues the venom and the antidote may be made to come into contact, and the former be so far destroyed. At this time it becomes needful to relax the ligatures to escape gangrene. This relaxation, of course, lets some venom into the blood-round, but in a few moments it is possible again to tighten the ligatures, and again to inject the local antidote. If the dose of venom be large and the distance from help great, except the knife or cautery little is to be done that is of value. But it is well to bear in mind that in this country a bite in the extremities rarely causes death. I have known of nine dogs having been bitten by as many snakes, and of these dogs but two died. In India there would have been probably nine dead dogs."

For over fifty years Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has cured coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, throat and lung affections. It is the regular prescription of a physician of extensive practice, who, after prescribing it for twenty years, was induced by the gratifying results to make it a proprietary medicine. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar soon became known as the best remedy for all throat and lung troubles. Why? Because it has merit and will cure. A. C. Hallefinger, Philadelphia, says: "I know a man suffering with his lungs who was in the hospital a year without benefit. I induced him to take Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and to-day he is well. I know it saved his life." Try it.

CALLENDER—How true it is that death aims its arrows at the brightest marks! Another home has been molested, and the hearts of many friends and relatives are left bereaved and sad on the account of this destroying angel. On the morning of January 4, 1890, after a week's painful illness, we were called to the bedside of a beloved father in Israel (JAMES S. CALLENDER) to witness the final departure of his sainted spirit from this life of trial and sorrow to a home of peace and joy beyond the rolling river.

He was born in East Feliciana, in 1816, and lived there until he was about twelve years of age, when his father died; he then went to his uncle's, in Copiah county, Miss., and remained there until he was grown. He was twice married: first, to Miss Malinda Hannan, of Copiah county, who only lived a short time. He was next married to Miss Sarah Griffing of Claiborne county, by whom were born to him eight children; but out of the eight only two survive him. His last wife preceded him to the promised land just three years before his death. So by that his last days were spent more lonely.

He was a Methodist of the purest type, though he was always charitable to all other Christian denominations. He joined the church in early manhood, but did not claim to be converted for some time after he became a member; yet his strictly moral outward appearance and the manifested zeal and interest he had for Christianity caused the preachers to conclude that he had passed from death unto life, and that he was an instrument in the hand of God to assist in time of revivals to point sinners to the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world. At length he was urged upon by his much-loved pastor to take part in this great work; but he frankly told him that he felt his insufficiency in trying to help others when he was so much in need of a great work in his own heart. His pastor gave him a loving reproof, and told him that it was unbelief that caused his trouble. It seemed that he caught the idea at once and yielded himself more fully to God; and upon the very grounds he professed to be soundly converted he ever afterwards referred to that time and place as being the exact date of his adoption into the family of God, and honored the same by fighting successfully the spiritual battles until life with him was over.

He held the office of class leader and steward in the church; he was always diligent and generally successful in making collections, and was generally liberal in distributing to the wants and necessities of church claims. His home during his wife's life-time was a pleasant resort and home for the preachers. He and she both being so fond of Christian and social conversation, made those seasons very pleasant. He was a faithful subscriber to the ADVOCATE; his desk was generally honored with this constant visitor.

He had his sore trials and afflictions mixed with his joys and comforts. In his earlier life he was called to give up his children, all but three; and during the late campaign between the North and South his oldest son was torn from his loving friends and sacrificed his life for his country. In the fall of 1873 he suffered greatly from getting his left arm torn up in a gin, which impaired his physical strength very much the remainder of his years on earth; yet, with all those misfortunes and painful afflictions, his faith was firm and unshaken in God, and his own expressions would constantly be that these afflictions, which were but for a moment, were for his good, and he trusted to work out for him a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. He left to his rising generation a grander legacy than that of silver or gold, which rusteth, in that he left written upon his history of time a pure Christian example worthy of imitation, which, if followed, will lead them, and all who knew him, to a home of the soul, where no storms ever beat on the glittering sand, while the years of eternity roll.

A NIECE.

CONLY—Mrs. GENNETTE G. CONLY (nee Mims) was born in Autauga county, Ala., February 23, 1832; moved with her parents to Mississippi when about five years old. She professed religion in July, 1854, and joined the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, there being no Methodist Church in the community in which she lived. Her parents were Methodists, and when opportunity was afforded she transferred her membership to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which she remained till death. She was happily married to Judge Samuel C. Conly, December 28, 1858, and died in great peace at McCool, Miss., February 11, 1890.

She earnestly and persistently worked in every way she could to advance the cause of her Master, and to relieve the distressed and suffering. She was a member and president of a W. C. T. U., of a Woman's Church Aid Society, and of an Eastern Star Masonic Society. In these she did much faithful work. The law of kindness was in her heart, and her daily life was a sweet lesson to all who came within its influence. In the loving, self-sacrificing care she gave to motherless children; in her words of cheer and comfort to the despondent, and unwavering attention to the aged and feeble, she was a beautiful type of Christian womanhood. For several years she was an invalid, and at times suffered greatly, but bore her afflictions with Christian patience, fortitude and resignation. Her faith increased, and her hope and prospects of heaven grew brighter daily, until she reached the end of her earthly pilgrimage. She was an affectionate wife, a self-denying friend, a good neighbor, and, above all, a wholly consecrated Christian.

The memory of her life, last words, and peaceful death will forever rest like a benediction on the bereaved hearts of the loved ones who mourn her loss. The good husband, motherless children, Sunday-school and church are afflicted; but after such a life of devotion to Christ, "to die is gain." J. T. MOODY.

MILES—Mrs. MARY MILES (nee Watson) was born in Covington county, Miss., February 16, 1816; was married to Hezekiah Miles, December 24, 1833, and settled in the northern part of Harrison county, Miss., and there remained until death, which occurred February 23, 1890; aged seventy-five years and seven days. She was the mother of 14 children, 76 grandchildren and 36 great-grandchildren—128 altogether. The remarkable thing is, of this number only 5 are dead—3 children and 2 grandchildren; 123 still live, and a lonely husband of eighty-one years to mourn her loss, but thank God! not without a fond hope of meeting.

She was one of the first settlers of this country. As the home-mission Methodists made their wearied rounds at long intervals, they often found a resting-place at her home. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church about forty years ago, and while her life was consistent, yet the one thing most needful was left off until eight years ago. While at New Prospect Camp Meeting she was enabled to see her condition and began to seek, and on the second day found Him of whom Moses and the prophets did write. Never will we forget the looks and exclamation of mother when the spiritual change took place. She told the wonderful story of Jesus and his love; then the beaming countenance told of the inward work. This spirit lived in her until death, which took place on a bright Sabbath eve, as the sun was going down. While surrounded with relatives and friends, she saw the approach of death. She pronounced the benediction by saying, "Lord, have mercy on us all;" then in her last moment, "My loving Jesus." The saddest scene about the old homestead is the low vacant chair in which mother will never sit together with us again; but, God helping us, we will live so on earth that we may sit together in heaven! E. MILES.

BETTS—Mrs. LULU BETTS was born October 18, 1865, in the town of Fulton, Miss; was happily married to Mr. M. C. Betts, December 20, 1883.

On February 5, 1889 her home was made dark and lonely when the death-angel snatched from her warm and cheerful heart her devoted husband. The night after we laid his body down to sleep till God should bid it rise, Sister Lulu said to me, "Here is one that's bound for heaven." Little did we think that so soon she would slip away from us! February 20, 1890, after telling her friends and kindred she was ready, she gave her life back to God. Four days later her little babe escaped from the warm and tender care of grandmothers and "auntie." Mama was looking over heaven only four days when little Mack, nine months and seventeen days old, nestled close by her again. These three have gone and left little Charlie alone. We must pray for him to make a safe voyage.

Sister Lulu joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the Autumn of 1888. She lived a consistent member until she took her flight for the world of glory.

J. A. WHITEHURST.

HAVARD—Miss ELIZA A. HAVARD, daughter of Bro. Cade and Sister M. E. Havard, died at her father's home, near Wesley Chapel, on March 7, 1890, aged twenty-four years. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Wesley Chapel, in the year 1888, under the ministry of Rev. N. B. Young, and died in the Methodist faith.

She had been a patient sufferer from the affliction which caused her death from childhood, and death came as an angel of mercy, and bade her spirit go in peace from its clayey prison cell of affliction and sorrow. Weep not, loved ones, for the spirit of dear Eliza has gone to "home, sweet home." "There the wicked cease from troubling; there the weary be at rest."

Philosophy versus Oxygen.

"What is it to die? If we will only look at it apart from the fearful mask which fancy has imposed, we shall see that death is natural after all: and he who dreads the course of nature, in which everything is for good, is a child."

This is philosophy. But before you resort to philosophy, try Compound Oxygen. It has effected wonderful cures in desperate cases. Here are a few testimonials as to its worth:

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN:—"I am fully satisfied that your Compound Oxygen Treatment is an excellent remedy." Dr. O. A. DARBY, President of Columbia Female College, Columbia, S. C.

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN:—"I fully indorse your Compound Oxygen Treatment." J. F. SPENCE, President of Grant Memorial University, Athens, Tenn.

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN:—"I regard your Compound Oxygen Treatment as a wonderful discovery of science and a blessing to suffering humanity." REV. A. A. JOHNSON, President of Wesleyan College, Fort Worth, Texas.

We have many more of them. You will find hundreds of them in our work on Compound Oxygen, its nature, discovery and results. This is no primmor, nor is it an almanac, but a well-written medical work. It is sent free. Address DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa., or 120 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal.

GRANT'S FURNITURE STORE

NEW STORE, AT 114 Camp St. NEW ORLEANS. NEXT DOOR TO ADVOCATE OFFICE.

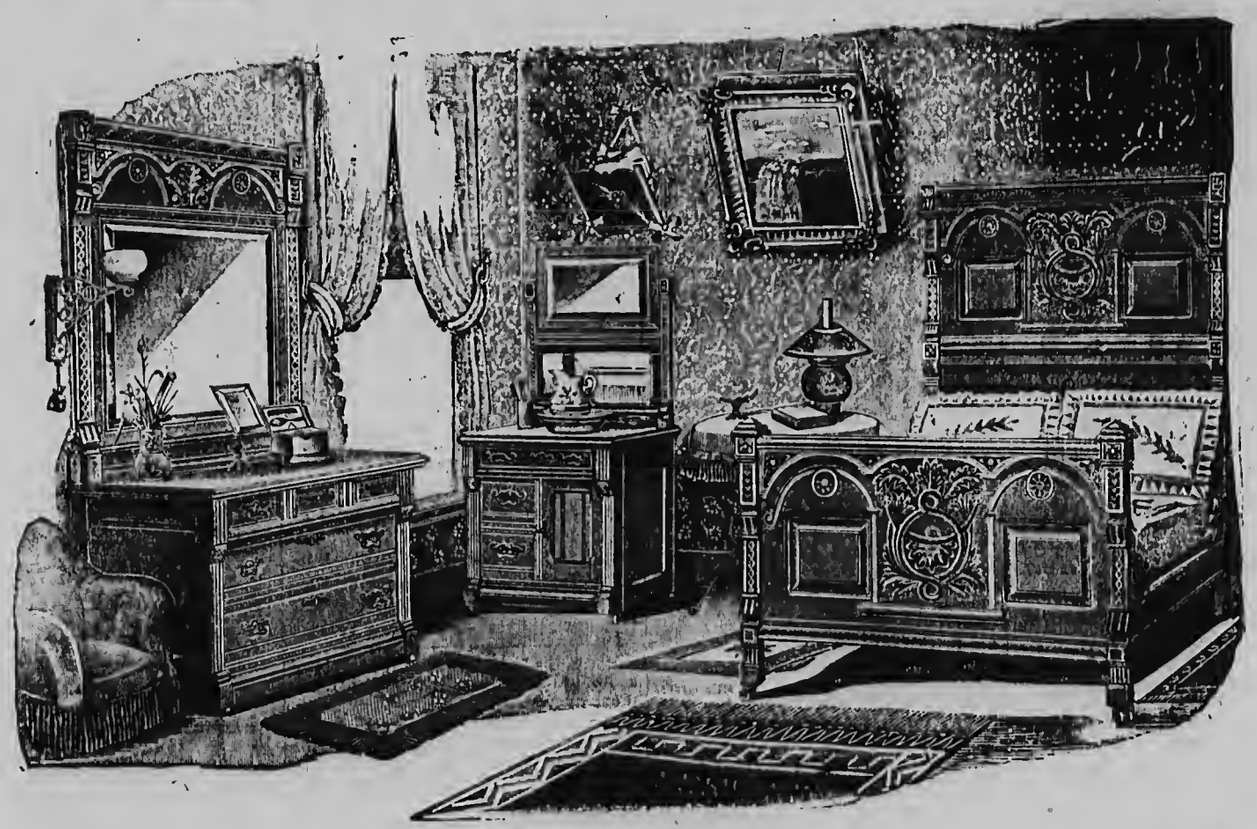
BEAUTIFUL PARLOR GOODS.

I have one entire floor devoted to the display of these goods alone, and have over sixty different varieties to select from. Complete Suits anywhere from $35 to $650, and odd pieces—such as Sofas, Divans, Easy Chairs, Patent Rockers, Window and Reception Chairs—at as low prices in proportion as the Complete Suits. I have these goods in Cherry, Mahogany and Walnut, and can give you your choice of any of the following coverings: Crushed, Embossed, Plain and Silk Plushes, Hair Cloth, Mohair, Raw and Spun Silks, Satins, English Tapestries, French Valeurs, Petit Point, Brocatelle or Damasks. I make a specialty of these goods, have many of the patterns made specially for my own trade, and can offer a greater variety at lower prices than any other house in the South.

NEW STOCK

in all departments, and every grade of goods, from the cheapest to the most expensive, in endless variety. I have all the latest and most fashionable designs, and, as I have only purchased from factories whose goods I have been selling for the past six years, can and do guarantee every piece of Furniture that leaves my establishment.



LOW PRICES

are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.

A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and whether you wish to pay $40 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs.

I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.

I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

An oil ship exploded and burned in Philadelphia harbor on June 5. One man was cremated and several others badly injured. The vessel had 800,000 gallons of oil on board, and is almost completely burned out. Loss estimated at $150,000.

A paper was read before the New York Chamber of Commerce, on June 5, endorsing the construction of a continuation of levees along the Mississippi river to prevent further damage by floods, after which a resolution was adopted to the effect that the Chamber of Commerce regard the recent overflow of the Mississippi as a national disaster, and request President Harrison to bring the matter before Congress with a view to protecting the lands adjoining the river from further inundation. Copies of this resolution will be sent to the Chambers of Commerce throughout the United States and members of the Senate. A committee of nine, including Chauncey M. Depew, Cornelius N. Bliss, F. P. Ammidown and Edward Simmons, was appointed to go to Washington and push the matter.

A government engineering party were attacked and killed by the Apaches in Wyoming. A refusal of "fire water" caused the outrage.

Postmaster General Wanamaker and others have presented a cottage at Cape May to Mrs. Harrison, wife of the President.

Mr. Coleman proposes to amend Senator Gibson's bill, which increases by 46,000 acres of land the endowment of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College, by making a similar grant to the colored agricultural school near Baldwin, La.

The Lottery Bill was formally introduced into the House of Representatives on June 9, and its supporters are sanguine of a successful passage.

A freight train ran into a train of palace stock cars at Warrenton, Mo., on the Wabash road, on June 9. Eight men were killed and twenty-five wounded. Nine race horses were killed.

The Southern National Bank, of New Orleans, was authorized, on June 6, to commence business with a capital of $500,000.

The English syndicate business, it seems, has its drawbacks. There are a great many Irish saloon-keepers in Chicago, and almost without exception they refuse to buy beer of the English syndicate breweries in that city.

A syndicate has purchased land for an immense ship-building plant on the Delaware river. It is one of the most substantial concerns of the kind ever organized in this country, and the completion of the works at an early a date as possible is an assured fact. The capital stock is $5,000,000. Of the $5,000,000 subscribed, $2 000,000 is placed in Philadelphia, while $1,000,000 has been taken in each of the cities of New York, Boston and London.

A sleeper on the Louisville and Nashville road was wrecked at English, Ky. (fifty miles from Louisville), where it ran upon an embankment. Two persons were fatally hurt, and others wounded.

FOREIGN.

At Freuberg, Austria, in Silesia, on June 6, a mob of 400 striking weavers attacked and captured by storm all of the factories which had been able to retain or procure a sufficient number of hands to continue running. A force of gendarmes was summoned and dispersed the mob after a stubborn fight, in which several were wounded, but the intimidated workmen were afraid to return to the factories, which are now at a stand-still.

It was announced to the military committee of the Reichstag, on June 6, that bills would be introduced by the government providing for the construction of strategical railways and for training the reserves in the use of the new rifles. In addition to these bills, the war minister said that an appropriation would be asked for the further equipment of the army. He declared that no one capable of bearing arms should cease training when he had completed his term of service.

It is said that Prince Bismarck is in sympathy with Chancellor Von Caprivi's course, and he will accept a seat in the Reichstag if a crisis demands it.

In London, on June 8, Cardinal Manning was presented with a check for £3,676 and an illuminated address on the occasion of his silver jubilee.

Special orders have been issued by the British War Office, regulating the admission of the public to inspection of the national defenses. Visitors who are not British subjects will not be allowed to visit any fortifications unless they are escorted by army officers in uniform. No information will be given to any person unless he is an English officer on full service.

The French minister of the interior recently ordered a complete census to be made of the carrier pigeons throughout France. It is shown by the returns that in case of war the nation can rely upon the services of half a million of these birds.

Enormous emigration has recently taken place from the districts contiguous to Warsaw, and such an extraordinary number of Hebrews have left during the past three months for America that the colonies of Dombrowric, Remboiowo and Nalarowo have been left almost entirely deserted.

Weak Women.

The more sensitive nature of the female sex renders women much more susceptible than men to those numerous ills which spring from lack of harmony in the system. The nervous system gives way, sick headache is frequent, the appetite is lost, and other ailments peculiar to the sex cause great suffering. Hood's Sarsaparilla is peculiarly adapted for such cases, and has received the most gratifying praise for the relief it has afforded thousands of women whose very existence before taking it was only misery. It strengthens the nerves, cures sick headache and indigestion, purifies and vitalizes the blood, and gives regular and healthy action to every organ in the body.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

BY ADELAIDE PROCTOR.

I hold him great who for love's sake
Can give with generous, earnest will;
Yet he who takes for love's sweet sake
I think I hold more generous still.

I bow before the noble mind
That freely some great wrong forgives;
Yet nobler is the one forgiven
Who bears that burden well and lives.

It may be hard to gain, and still
To keep a lowly, steadfast heart;
Yet he who loses has to fill
A harder and a truer part.

Glorious it is to wear the crown
Of a deserved and pure success;
He who knows how to fail has won
A crown whose luster is not less.

Great may be he who can command
And rule with just and tender sway;
Yet is diviner wisdom taught
Better by him who can obey.

Blessed are they who die for God
And earn the martyr's crown of light;
Yet he who lives for God may be
A greater conqueror in his sight.

The Change of the Sabbath from the Seventh to the First Day of the Week Is by Divine Authority.

BY REV. C. M'DONALD.

After the six days' work of creation, God rested on the seventh, and blessed and sanctified it. (Gen. ii, 2.) The fourth commandment shows that the law of the Sabbath is universal and perpetual. The seventh day of the week was the holy Sabbath day from the creation to the resurrection of Christ. From that time the first, instead of the seventh, is the Sabbath day. Christ declared (Matt. xii, 8): "For the Son of man is Lord even of the Sabbath day." (See also Mark ii, 27, 28.) Christ, as the Lord of the Sabbath, certainly had the right to change it from the seventh to the first day of the week. Such change of day could take place and not affect the spirit or moral force of the fourth commandment. Indeed, Christians universally keep the first as the Sabbath, and yet regard the fourth commandment with equal force as the balance of the Decalogue.

Now, to the proof regarding the change. John xx, 19-23: "Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you." Verse 26: "And after eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you." From the above Scripture we see that Christ appeared to an assembly of Christians on the evening of the day of his resurrection, and also on the next first day of the week. We presume, by common consent Christians adopted the first, or resurrection day, for their worship; and Christ, by his personal presence and participation with them, gives sanction and authority to the day. If they were starting wrong, he would have reproved them. Read the following texts. Matt. xxviii, 19, 20: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen." John xx, 21: "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you." Verse 23: "Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained." John xiv, 26: "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he will teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." John xvi, 13: "Howbeit, when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come." (See Acts i, 8; ii, 1-4.)

From the above we learn that the apostles were inspired, and directed by him to teach all things commanded by him. The decision of the apostles was good authority. Their decision was received by the early Christians as final in questions propounded to them. They, both by precept and example, observed the first as the religious day. Let us show the common observance of the first day. Acts ii, 1-4: "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place," etc. Pentecost was on the first day of the week, and they were "with one accord in one place." "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." Acts xx, 7: "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread. Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow: and continued his speech until midnight." I. Cor. xvi, 1, 2: "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let everyone of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come."

From the above we learn that the first day of the week was uniformly kept by the church at Corinth and the churches of Galatia, and money for benevolent purposes were to be set apart. Rev. i, 10: "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." If the great Head of the church did not intend to change the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day, why mention the first day so frequently in connection with divine worship? Or why mention the first at all if there was no design in it? We find no command, or even precedent, for the observance of the seventh as the Sabbath after the resurrection of Christ. In Col. ii, 16: "Let no man, therefore, judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath day." As there had been a change, or the doing away of the other things in this verse, so we infer a change of the Sabbath day, and they were not to be condemned for adhering to the new or Christian dispensation. (Acts xiii, 42-44; xvi, 13; xvii, 2; xviii, 4.) Paul preached to Jews and their proselytes on the Sabbath. The Jews keep the seventh as their Sabbath day until now, and gospel ministers are in the habit of preaching on Saturday, or any other day of the week, when they can get a congregation.

We quote the following from Ralston's Elements, page 807: "That the apostles and first Christians observed the first day of the week as a Sabbath, assembling regularly on that day for the public worship of God, and for the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, is not only evident from the New Testament, but this fact is confirmed by an uninterrupted stream of church history, beginning in the apostolic age and extending to the present period."

Upon this question a few of the many available testimonies will be sufficient. Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, A. D. 101, says: "Let everyone that loves Christ keep holy the Lord's day—the queen of days, the resurrection day, the highest of all days." Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch, who wrote in the second century, says: "Both custom and reason challenge from us that we should honor the Lord's day, seeing on that day it was that our Lord Jesus completed his resurrection from the dead." Irenæus, Bishop of Lyons, who also lived in the second century, and who was a disciple of Polycarp, who was a companion of St. John, speaks of the Lord's day as the Christian Sabbath. "On the Lord's day," said he, "everyone of us Christians keep the Sabbath." Clement of Alexandria, of the same century, testifies: "A Christian, according to the command of the gospel, observes the Lord's day, thereby glorifying the resurrection of the Lord." Tertullian, of the same period, says: "The Lord's day is the holy day of the Christian Church."

The testimony given is, we think, sufficient for any enquiring mind as to the true Sabbath. Our fathers have lived with good conscience, and died in this faith, and have gone to heaven. Pure Christianity is good enough for us. Let us make no compromise with Judaism.

JACKSON, La.

Bro. A. D. Miller and the Presiding Elder Again.

BY REV. A. D. MILLER.

I see a short article in the ADVOCATE, of May 15, under the above heading, signed "Circuit Rider," which greatly surprised me, and, as I think, places me in a false light before my brethren, and especially those that did not give my article (which I suppose he refers to) a careful reading; and if they did, I don't see how they or he could have drawn the conclusions that he drew. And I wish now to refer my brethren to my article in the ADVOCATE, of April 17, page 5, and to his in the ADVOCATE, of May 15, page 2, and ask a careful reading; and I am willing to leave it to the godly judgment of my brethren as to whether he was justifiable in making the attack on me, and if he has not attempted to place me in a false light before my brethren. I am sorry he did not sign his own proper name to his article; but not much surprised after seeing the conclusions he drew from the premises; and I am sure he ought not to have used the general name of "circuit rider," as there are so many circuit riders, and very few of them would like to have it thought that they were the author of that article. So I would like to advise Bro. "Circuit Rider" when he writes again, if he has not the courage to write over his own proper name, to try to select one that will not involve others; and I do hope that the time will soon come when an article will not be published without the name of its author.

But he says, first, that he is very sorry Bro. Miller is having trouble with his presiding elder. Well, I wish to remove his sorrow by assuring him that I am having no trouble with my presiding elder, so far as I know. I hope we are on the very best of terms; and I know we are, so far as I am concerned; and if I have done anything that would cause him to entertain any hard feelings toward me justly, I am sure he or Bro. "Circuit Rider" ought to have come to me, and not have published it to the world, for surely it is not a matter of small importance to drag into public print that that might injure the character of a brother in the ministry. I have served under five presiding elders, and have never had any trouble or hard feelings with any of them, so far as I know. I have always been a great friend to my presiding elder, and of the presiding elder's office; and if a man wanted to get into trouble, all he had to do was to assail my presiding elder, and I would draw my tomahawk and make battle to the best of my ability. And I have always been so fortunate as to have over me as presiding elders men whose characters were above reproach. I know I am on the very best of terms with my present presiding elder, so far as I am concerned; and if anyone thinks I am not, let them assail his pure character, and they will very soon find out. I am very sorry Bro. "Circuit Rider" did not tell us what the trouble was, for I am sure he has excited in the minds of the people an anxiety to know what I have done that would bring me into trouble with my presiding elder; and they and I have a right to require an explanation. Now, will Bro. "Circuit Rider" please explain, so I may know how to adjust the matter, for I am not willing that it should be published in our worthy ADVOCATE that I am in trouble with my presiding elder, and not let the people know what the trouble is? Please explain, my unknown brother, over your own proper name.

I wrote an article in the ADVOCATE, of April 17, headed, "Too Large," in which I tried to show that the presiding elders' districts were too large, and that our present plan of assessing their salaries did not give satisfaction, proposing, as a remedy, to make the districts smaller, and do away with the district steward's office, and then give the presiding elder one-eighth, or 12½ per cent. of what was collected on all the works, thereby making it bear equally on all the works. But I am sure I did not intend it for our present presiding elder, nor for the Brandon district, nor the district stewards of the Brandon district; but was trying to catch the eye of the delegates to the General Conference with a view of having a law passed making the districts smaller, and doing away with the district steward's office, and then giving the presiding elder a certain per cent., which, as I think, would give entire satisfaction. But I never once thought I was getting myself into trouble with my presiding elder, or any other presiding elder; but was trying to lighten their work, and give them better pay, and, at the same time, so adjust our economy as to make it run without friction. My plan of giving them 12½ per cent., worked on our district last year, would have given our elder about $50 more than he got, and the other part of the plan would have given him seven works less to serve, and, at the same time, would have given him only about $75 or $100 less; and, I believe, with the amount of work he could have added to the other works, would have paid fully as much, or more. So you see I was not trying to pull down, but to build up one of the most important offices in our church, and I am sorry my good brother could not see my object, for I thought I made it plain.

But I am not the only one that is in favor of both changes that I suggested, for several have written on the subject of making the districts smaller; and Bros. D. W. Gall, S. F. McClung, and others, of the West Virginia Conference, offered a resolution in the General Conference to do away with the district steward's office. (See Daily Advocate, of May 12.) I wonder if they are in trouble with their presiding elders! If so, Bro. "Circuit Rider" ought to inform the people of their crime. He ought to be just as well as wise. But he says "he has some idea of the work the presiding elder on the Brandon district has to do." So do I; and that is why I wanted the districts made less. But, again, he says: "We are thankful that the district stewards on the Brandon district have larger views of the office and work of a presiding elder than those stewards of whom Bro. Miller writes." "Well, did you ever!" Please allow me to ask him about what stewards I wrote. I only referred to the district stewards in connection with their office, and did not say anything about their small views with regard to the presiding elder's office at all. Really, if there could be any inference at all, it would be that they had too large views, or made too much difference between the presiding elder and the preacher; but I am sure I said the presiding elder and pastor in charge ought to both have more, and that the presiding elder ought to have, at least, one-third more than the average preacher, because of the importance of his work and office. I was only trying to show that the dissatisfaction arose from the division between the different works, and not their large or small views. I wish they could get even more than they do; and the way to get it, in my judgment, is to make the districts smaller, so that they can do more work, and at a more opportune time, and then give them a certain per cent., so that it will work equally on all.

But, in conclusion, I can assure him, with your permission, I will keep the people posted and exhorted on Indian Mission.

CATO, Miss.

(This article has been crowded out by General Conference items. And this is the end of this controversy.—EDITOR.)

In Memoriam.

Mrs. S. J. Linfield (nee Barker) was born September 17, 1833, in Houston county, Ga. In 1849, while resident in Kemper county, Miss., she was united in marriage to W. E. M. Linfield, afterwards Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, D. D., of the Mississippi Conference, and now deceased. Her conversion antedated her marriage, and her Christian character had its influence in the decision of her husband to answer the call to the ministry, and ever after in his wonderful success as a preacher. She was a woman of wonderful native ability. Without the best early advantages, she successfully met, and faithfully, the high duties and responsibilities of a Methodist minister's wife, and at a time when wealth, cultivation and criticism met the preacher's family at every turn. Her husband was an admired preacher, and his wife was equal to the occasion.

She was a financier, and so was enabled to meet the demands of a large family, and dispense a large and generous hospitality to the many who came into her home, whose presence was ever coveted for their Christian influence over her children. She was a disciplinarian, a woman of method. These characteristics, with reverence for holy things, constituted the atmosphere of her home. To her children she was wisdom personified in all temporal affairs. One of her children has said: "Her crowning characteristic was unselfishness." Even in sorrow, affliction, and bodily pain, her ruling thought was not of self, but of others; and she suffered long and greatly. For six years her health had been bad. Many afflictions came into her life, and sorrows swept over her like one storm after another, till she was bowed in her grief; but in it all she was kept in the strength of God. And this energetic, industrious, careful, prudent woman learned to wait with the same resignation that characterized her life of laborious activities. After weary and painful months of distressing sickness, she passed into her rest May 26, 1890. She was a bright and happy Christian, and as she approached her end, showed no signs of fear, but rejoiced in her Lord and Redeemer. Her end was peace.

Sister Linfield died at her own home, in Crystal Springs, Miss., surrounded by all her living children. They weep not as those who have no hope. They know their mother is at home.

On May 27 we laid her mortal remains beside those of her honored husband in the cemetery in Hazlehurst, Miss., after suitable religious services conducted by her pastor in the Methodist Church of Hazlehurst, where she lived so long and well. Seven children remain, and two had gone before. May the good Father comfort those who remain!

Facts and Figures.

SHOWING THE LOUISIANA LOTTERY SCHEME AN OUTRAGE UPON THE PEOPLE.

Editor New Delta: Sir—I propose, with your permission, to demonstrate the unfairness of all the drawings of the Louisiana State Lottery Company, and thus to account for the source of its enormous profits.

Let us take for the first example the semi-annual drawing advertised for June 17. The scheme of that drawing is the issuance of 100,000 tickets at $40 each, making an aggregate. If all the tickets are sold, of $4,000,000. Out of this sum they propose to distribute 3,144 prizes, amounting to $2,159,600, or a fraction over 53 per cent. of the scheme; so that if they should sell all their tickets and, therefore, lose all their prizes, their profit on that drawing alone would be $1,840,400. It ought to be sufficient to show the rascality of this scheme, simply to make the statement, that in this drawing the company can sell only 70 per cent. of its tickets, can lose all of the prizes, can allow 15 per cent. discount to agents on the tickets sold, and can then make $220,400, less the cost of ticket printing, and this drawing's share of office expenses and advertising. Here is the demonstration of this statement.

Seventy per cent. of tickets would be $2,800,000; deduct from this 15 per cent. ($420,000), we have a balance of $2,380,000 with which to pay prizes amounting to $2,159,600, leaving a net balance of $220,400. Of course a drawing, in which the company would hold 30,000 unsold tickets as against 70,000 held by the general public, and in which none of the tickets held by the company would draw a prize, would be a mathematical possibility, but so infinitesimally improbable as not to be thought of.

But let us apply the test established by the literature of lotteries. It is universally conceded by all the authorities that any lottery which distributes as little as sixty per cent. of a scheme in prizes is unfair, and that any lottery which distributes only fifty per cent. in prizes is a fraud.

Tested by this standard, the Louisiana Lottery Company is seven per cent. below the unfair line, and sinks along just three per cent. over the fraud line.

I challenge the Lottery people and all its hirelings to point to any authorized lottery in the world which is allowed to distribute as low as 53 per cent. of its schemes in prizes.

The fixed rule of the French Lotteries was nineteen twenty-fourths, or over seventy-nine per cent., in prizes, and five twenty-fourths, or a little over twenty per cent., to the promoters.

All the lotteries authorized from time to time by the United States government in early days required that, at least, eighty-five per cent. should be distributed in prizes.

The Havana Lottery distributes over seventy per cent.

The Hamburg Lottery, and the other lotteries occasionally permitted on the continent of Europe, distribute over seventy-one per cent.

The result of this below-fair-and-approaching-fraud method of the Louisiana Lottery Company is twofold: first, to reduce the chance of a ticket-holder's winning any prize at all; and, second, to enable it to reap the profits which have driven its friends and advocates to madness.

In the first place, the holder of a ticket in the grand drawing of June 17 has only one chance in thirty of winning any prize at all, while for any individual prize his chance varies from 1 in 100,000 to win the capital prize of $600,000, to 1 in about 100 to win one of the smaller prizes of $200.

In the second place, the company makes out of this drawing from $700,000 to $1,000,000 more than any honest lottery would make.

Even if their scheme was arranged on the low basis of the Havana Lottery, they would have to distribute in the grand drawing $680,000 more than their scheme calls for. This sum, distributed into 6,800 tickets of $100 each, would reduce the present average chance of winning a prize from 1 in 30 to about 1 in 10.

If the scheme were arranged as the French plan, they would have to distribute $1,040,000 more in prizes, with a still further increase of the chance of winning a prize.

If it were arranged on the American plan, they would have to distribute $1,280,000 more, with still further results in increasing the chances of the ticket-holders.

Let not the reader think that the grand seventeenth of June drawing stands by itself in the gross unfairness of its scheme. It is simply a type of all the others; and it was by having his attention called to figures of this kind that Postmaster General Gresham declared the Louisiana Lottery Company a fraudulent Lottery, and excluded it from the United States mails.

To-morrow I shall give you a detailed statement of the workings of the daily drawings; and after I finish with it, I think I can assure you that every man in this State who is open to conviction, or who is not interested in this particular form of pillage, will demand that the grand jury investigate this robber of the people and devise some plan to put an end to it.—Rhombus, in New Delta.

Meridian District Conference Program.

Thursday, July 10, will be devoted to Sunday-school interests. Sermon at 11 A. M. by R. B. Downer.

Friday, July 11, will be devoted to educational interests. Sermon at 11 A. M. by Bishop Haygood, and 8 P. M. by Bishop Galloway.

Saturday, July 12, will be devoted to missionary and church extension interests. Sermon at 11 A. M. by Dr. C. G. Andrews.

All Sunday-school superintendents in the district are invited to meet with us in convention Thursday, July 10. Recording stewards should have the Quarterly Conference record books present for examination according to Discipline. Let every preacher, traveling or local, and every delegate be present at the first roll-call, 9 A. M., Thursday, July 10. If delegates can not come, let alternates be notified, so that there shall be a full attendance. Bring your Oxford Bibles. Our venerable brethren, the superannuates, are especially urged to come.

Take Due Notice!

Delegates and visitors coming to the Woman's Missionary Meeting at Senatobia, Miss., June 28, must procure a certificate from the depot agent at the starting-point, or starting-points, on the several lines of railroads within the territory of the North Mississippi Conference. The Memphis and Charleston railroad will sell round-trip tickets to Memphis, Tenn., from Iuka, Burnsville and Corinth, the only stations in Mississippi, June 27 and 28. The Mobile and Ohio railroad not yet heard from; but I suppose it will do as the others have done.

R. G. PORTER, P. C.

Notice.

The Brookhaven District Conference will convene in the Methodist Church in Hazlehurst, Miss., on Thursday, June 26, at 9 o'clock A. M. Bishop Galloway is expected to preside.

Dr. West has been appointed to preach the opening sermon, Thursday morning, at 11 o'clock. We hope to have a full attendance of members and delegates, and a profitable District Conference. W. B. LEWIS P. E.

ONE SHORT HOUR.

BY ARCHBISHOP TRENCH.

Lord what a change within us one short hour
Spent in thy presence will avail to make;
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take,
What parched grounds refresh, as with a shower;
We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
We rise, and all the distant and the near
Stands forth in sunny outline, brave and clear;
We kneel, how weak; we rise, how full of power!
Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong
Or others - that we are not always strong,
That we are ever overborne with care,
That we should ever weak or heartless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
And joy and strength and courage are with thee.

"The Mother of Female Colleges."

The article in your paper, entitled "The Mother of Female Colleges," interested me greatly, and various memories and feelings came thronging into my mind. . . . That was my dear old school, and many of the names recorded are inscribed in memory's tablets with love's pencil.

Let me think! Before I was old enough to go to such a school, I used to hear a great deal said about it. My father was much interested in the institution, teachers and pupils, and I used to hear the young ladies who had been there talk about the "Elizabeth."

There was Anne L. Hanna, who was my father's ward; she was in the school in Mrs. Saunderson's time. Her parents and relatives were Presbyterians of the straitest sect; but she became a Methodist, and married the Rev. T. Clinton. I used to hear the old folks say: "Presbyterian warp and Methodist filling made the best of members." "Cousin Anne" was a noble woman, a true helper to her husband. Their home was a lovely place. Aunt Hardee used to say: "It is nearer heaven there than any other place." A goodly number went to heaven from that home.

George H. Clinton was the son of Anne L. Hanna and T. Clinton. Mrs. Ballard and Mrs. Mary Baird, wives of Methodist preachers, were their daughters . . . Then Rev. J. C. Burrus was president, and Mrs. Thayer was governess. There were a host of lovely young women who attended the school. I knew many of them and loved them, though I was too young to be their school-mate. There was a wonderful revival in the school while Mr. Burrus was president. He was absent on business when it began. My father, who was stationed preacher in Washington, was staying at the school and filling his place. One evening at prayers, to my father's surprise, a good many of the young ladies, with tears in their eyes, asked for prayers and instruction in the way to "find Jesus." Scores of them were converted, and the majority of them were faithful till death. A few remain. Dr. Drake said he had observed that the most of these converts made useful Christian women. The lovely Christian spirit and counsels of Mrs. Burrus, who was an invalid, had a great influence on the pupils. She was a saint, who lived in the vestibule of heaven. . . . Let me remember! There was Martha E. Hanna—she became a teacher, and married the Rev. Barnabas Tipkin, and was an humble, sweet-spirited Christian. S. T. H. Magruder ("Hawkin's," as the school-girls called her) married Rev. Benjamin Drake. I can say nothing better than that she was worthy to be his wife. Dr. Drake was as nearly perfect as our frail humanity can become through grace. I revered and loved him. He was president when I was at school. Like the proverbial "preacher's children," I was full of mischief. One day I laughed and talked in church; "Uncle Drake" saw me. If Mrs. Thayer had known she would have been obliged to give me "ten demerits," an awful punishment. Uncle Drake talked kindly to me, reproved me in love, and did not report me. No Catholic ever reverenced her patron saint more than I did Benjamin Drake. My second son bore his name. A benediction seemed to follow his name, for everyone who knew him loved "Ben Wall," who gave his life to our lost cause. I have two grandsons and a great-grandson who bear the name, and I want them to remember how it came into our family.

Among these elect young women, some went to other churches, but they stood "in their lot," and did good work for God and humanity to the end of their days. There was Kate (Goodrich) Southmayde, who lately went home from New Orleans. There was Anne McGehee, one of the purest, most unselfish beings I ever knew, whom God took early to live with her kindred beyond the stars. There was Mary (Richardson) Bowman, who all her life, in her adversity as well as her prosperity, has done all she could for the poor and for her church, always thinking, "What can I do for the Sunday-school, for 'my preacher' and for the poor." There was Mary (Hewett) Carradine, the mother of Beverly Carradine, who has helped more than one young minister in his dark hours. There was Jane (Harbor) Hill, an Episcopalian, who has been a mainstay to her church where she lives. There was Martha L. (Richardson) Gibson, who lives now at 2931 Easton avenue, St. Louis. She is a Presbyterian, but any Methodist minister would find in her house a hearty welcome. She has reared a large family, who "fear God and work righteousness." Dr. Jimmy Gibson, of North Baden, is her son, and he is a stanuch Methodist. His wife is a daughter of Lydia (Goodrich) King, one of the converts in that revival.

There was Martha (Richardson) Kavanaugh, who cheered and blessed the declining years of our loved Bishop. Time and memory fail me. There was Catharine Newman, who became the wife of Dr. Fox, of the Protestant Episcopal Church; Martha Cosby, who married Rev. Mr. Ricketts.

Mrs. Thayer had the gift of making each pupil think that she was talented, and that much was expected of her. Do any of the "Elizabetheans" remember the hymn they loved so well, "Glory to thee, my God, this night?"

The "Elizabeth" was favored in her teachers and trustees. Rev. Mr. Burrus was a polished Virginia gentleman, who had strict ideas of what a true woman ought to be. Mrs. Thayer was an enthusiast in her profession; Dr. Drake, a benediction; Margaret (Boyd) Williams, M. E. Hanna and Eliza (Fox) Dicks, prudent, intelligent young ladies who set the pupils a good example. . . . Mrs. Susan Brewer and Dr. Thomas were well fitted for their work.

Farewell! dear old "Elizabeth"—auf wiedersehn! dear fellow-pilgrims, who linger on these shores!

MARY WINANS WALL.

Commencement at E. A. Seminary.

The seventh annual commencement exercises of the E. A. Seminary, of Arcadia, La., have just closed. This past session has been one of great success. This school, established seven years ago by Prof. R. A. Smith, has done noble work. Prof. Smith, by untiring energy, zeal and determination, has built up and sustained a school that ranks with the best in the land. He is a Christian gentlemen of liberal education, not surpassed as a disciplinarian and a thorough teacher. He teaches by example as well as by precept. The exercises of the commencement were all of a very high order, showing that time, patience and energy had been lavishly bestowed upon the pupils. The sermon at eleven o'clock on Sunday, by Rev. C. K. Marshall, D. D., of Vicksburg, was just grand, holding the vast audience spellbound with attention. He is truly the "old man eloquent." It is not often that this scribe has the privilege of listening to such a man and such a sermon.

When he spoke of God's ways and God's thoughts it gave us such a grand conception of man in comparison with God; and when he spoke of the fatherhood and motherhood of God, oh! how our souls rejoiced that we could say, "Our Father, who art in heaven," and realize that we are born of God and are partakers of the divine nature; and then when this grand old man came down (condescension) to the little children, it seemed that heaven was nearer and religion dearer. "Like as a father pitieth his children," etc. Space forbids me writing more on this line. May God bless and preserve this great and grand man for many years to come! Then came the graduating day. One young man of noble parentage was graduated—Mr. Robert D. Webb, of Webster parish, a son of Dr. Steve Webb. This young man is no ordinary young man; his mental and moral qualities mark him as one that will be eminently useful in his day and generation. He goes forth in this world honored by his preceptors and fellow-students as one worthy of all confidence. Then came the inimitable speech by G. W. Griffin, D.D., president of the Mount Lebanon University. As he discussed the family, the school and the church as the great moulders of character for usefulness and success in this life and the life to come, our souls were stirred within us. It was an able, eloquent, practical discourse from a learned and eloquent divine.

The people of our town have concluded that one school with two departments, "male and female," is better than two mixed schools; so that a union of the E. A. Seminary and the Arcadia Male and Female College was consummated last Monday, and hereafter our school will be known as "The Consolidated Schools of Arcadia"—the "E. A. S. Male College" and "Arcadia Female College." We predict a very bright future for this school.

Those who have either sons or daughters to educate can find here a school that has all that is good in a mixed school without its objectionable features. With Prof. R. A. Smith at the head of the male department, and Prof. J. W. Beeson at the head of the female department, there must be great success as the result of this union.

Assumed Names.

It is no uncommon occurrence nowadays for persons, both religious and irreligious, to sign assumed names to their articles for publication; but is it right that they should do so? I am persuaded that it is not, for the following reasons:

First. It has a semblance of falsehood, if it is not falsehood itself, although the person using it may not intend any deception whatever, but simply acts under the impulse of diffidence or a false modesty. To say the least of it, an assumed name is not the real name of him who assumes it, and hence it is false.

Secondly. It is an imposition, especially when it is applicable to anyone of a class, whether it is signed to an article of merit or not. For instance: a student of some college writes an article for publication, and signs "Student" for his name. If he mentions the college of which he is a member, then his article is attributable to any student of that college, for he has assumed a name that is applicable to each or anyone of that class; but if he does not mention his college, nor whence he wrote, then his article is attributable to any student, whether in his college, State, or not. Now, if his article is meritorious, it is likely to be attributed to the wrong student, and thereby do injustice to the same in this: that more will be expected of him than he is capable of giving; or, if unmeritorious, then liable to be attributed to a student of superior ability, and thereby do him an injustice. Again: if a preacher who is riding a circuit, whether on horseback, in a buggy, or on a train, writes an article and signs it "Circuit Rider," he assumes a name that is applicable to any circuit rider or preacher riding a circuit, and, therefore, his article is attributable to anyone of that class. Now, if his article is an inferior one, it is likely to be attributable to a circuit rider who is capable of writing a superior one, and thereby do him an injustice.

Thirdly. It is misleading, or, at least, liable to mislead in this: that people are apt to think that he who writes under an assumed name is anxious to write, but is afraid to let the public know who he is, especially if he writes on a controverted subject, when, at the same time, he may be quite courageous; or if he writes on any subject whatever, that he is ashamed of his productions while he may be writing, with nothing in view except to please God and to accomplish good. Celebrities who are chiefly known by an assumed name, especially some of them, are thought to be egotistical, if not self-conceited, from the fact that when they appear before an audience of strangers, they seem to take great pleasure in speaking of their assumed name, and in telling who they themselves are. I do not think it is exactly right for any person even to write under only a part of his name, especially that part of it that is liable to mislead the people. For instance: A certain brother recommended recently "Gilderoy's Stories for Boys" to another brother, who went, the first chance, to Jackson, Miss., and asked at a bookstore if they had "Gilderoy," and they said, "Yes," and he bought the book; and, behold! when he got home he soon found it to be a novel. The title, sure enough, was "Guilderoy." Let us sign our real names, and be ashamed and afraid of assumed names, for they may not, after all, be pleasing to God.

ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

Rev. Berkeley Sheridan Turnipseed.

While we were at morning prayers in Kavanaugh College, Friday, April 25, the life-weary saint, Berkeley S. Turnipseed, at his home a half-block away, closed a long period of suffering and an active, useful career—quietly, softly breathing out his life. It was a fitting, beautiful time to die—a morning lit with the sunshine of spring, odorous with the breath of flowers, and redolent with the wild rhapsodies of the mocking-birds; a time eminently fitting the passing of an earth-weary spirit home-sick for heaven.

He was born at the old Turnipseed homestead on Topisaw, five miles northeast of here, on July 6, 1845. He was reared and educated there and here; spent his whole life here, or near here, and died here among friends and relatives, honored and beloved as a Christian, a friend, and a citizen. He was married on December 21, 1864, to Miss Mary Huffman, who is still among us.

In 1867, under a sermon by Rev. W. B. Lewis, of the Mississippi Conference—a boyhood friend and schoolmate—he was profoundly convicted. Unable to throw off the impression thus made, he was converted some weeks afterward, while in a skiff with his brother-in-law, on the waters of Topisaw. He joined the Baptist Church, and became an active, useful, and very prominent member. He was especially active in the Sunday-school work, loving it almost passionately; and was, for many years prior to his death, clerk of the Bogue Chitto Baptist Association. He became deeply impressed that his mission was a wider one, and so, about a year ago, he entered the ministry, his ordination occurring early in last autumn. His talks as a Sunday-school worker, and the few sermons he was permitted to preach, were lucid and original in manner, scriptural in matter, and altogether quite instructive and attractive. Soon after his ordination he became such an invalid that he was unable to pursue his high and happy calling.

He was a demonstrative Christian. No one ever became acquainted with him without learning at once that he was a Christian worker, and that he enjoyed both the experiences and duties of religion. He drank deeply into that supernal

"Joy of doing good."

He was a "shouting Baptist," his deep emotions often checking utterance when leading in prayer. It is related that immediately after his conversion in the boat on Topisaw, he went to the house, singing rapturously:

"O Jesus, my Savior, I know thou art mine;
For thee all the pleasures of sin I resign."

For the greater part of his mature life he was a sufferer. Physical infirmity, relentless and painful, held him in its grip until he became not only ready to die at any time—and that, too, long before his hour came—but until he grew homesick for that heaven where pain never enters, "and the weary are at rest."

Bro. Berkeley, as we, who loved him, were wont to call him, was my friend, my neighbor, and my fellow-worker in the Master's vineyard. We talked and worked and prayed with each other—he a Baptist and I a Methodist, but both Christians, servants of the Lord Christ. He is gone home; I press on. We will meet somewhere in the great beyond.

H. WALTER FEATHERSTON.

And Still It Comes.

MR. EDITOR: I am very much encouraged with regard to the Indian Mission in Mississippi. The Missionary Board, at our last Annual Conference session (Mississippi), gave me $20 and words of encouragement; and at our last District Conference session (Brandon) they passed some strong resolutions indorsing my plan and recommending it to the people, and also gave me several dollars in a public collection taken, and several new names to add to my list. So I feel confident if we had a missionary at work, we could soon get all the money we need, for surely the people are fully aroused on the importance of the work; and I hope we will soon get the missionary, and commence the work right. However, let the people continue to send names and amounts, for we want, at least, five hundred dollars to commence with; and surely no brother or sister in Mississippi would be willing to be left out of this good and great work; so send on the names, and let's roll up the whole amount in a few days. We need nearly two hundred dollars yet. Can we not confidentially expect it? Will not our people that have the means give something to so worthy a cause? Surely everyone will do something.

Please allow me now to give the following names and amounts received since last report, to wit: Brandon District Conference, $13 85; Rev. J. M. Cowan, Walnut Grove, Miss., $2, five years; Rev. F. A. Laue, Brandon, Miss., $2 50, five years; W. A. Laue, Brandon, Miss., $1, five years; Rev. T. J. Miller, Westville, Miss., $1, five years; Mrs. Lizzie McGuffie, Brandon, Miss., $1, cash; Mrs. C. R. Rencher, Enterprise, Miss., $5, cash. And I want to add the name of Judge A. G. Meyers, of Brandon, Miss., for $5, and apologize to him for leaving his name out last year, as he was among the first to subscribe. I thought I had reported his name, until informed that I had not. I am very sorry for the oversight, as I know it appreciated his name and amount on my list very highly. Hope he will not think hard of me; and am confident he will not.

Who will be next to send their name? Brother, sister, when you read this, please lay down your paper and write me at once. I know you are thinking of doing it, and why not now?

And, now, I would like to ask my brethren in the ministry to please state to their congregations that there is about three or four thousand Indians in Mississippi without the gospel, so far as we are concerned, and a great many of them without it altogether, and propose to send names and amounts to me, if anyone desires to help. Please do me this kindness, brethren, and very greatly oblige your friend and brother in Christ,

A. D. MILLER.

Help Needed.

The New Iberia Methodist Church, South, and the parsonage were destroyed by fire on the eighth instant—a total loss.

The buildings were large and finely constructed, but had become inadequate to the demands of our work here, and the passing trains of the Southern Pacific railroad, whose track had been laid near the church, seriously interfered with public worship, so that the necessity of rebuilding on a better site has been pressing for some years. But our people are unable to build such a house of worship as is needed, and to buy land on which it should be placed. Now, in the divine providence, this necessity is forced upon us, and the whole future of our work in New Iberia depends upon our now accomplishing the task before us.

I appeal to the sympathy of Christians to whom this may come for help, and not to our own people only; for Baptists and Presbyterians and people of no church connections are among those who worship in the Methodist Church here.

I will acknowledge through the columns of the ADVOCATE, and personally, all contributions. Help us, brethren, we ask in the name of our common Lord and Master, who has taught us that "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

From the Work.

LIND GROVE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

As no one has written to the ADVOCATE from this, the Lind Grove circuit, this year, I thought a few items might be of interest to some of the many readers of the dear old ADVOCATE. We are getting along slowly, but steadily; health of our neighborhood very good, and all over this circuit the health of the people is, as a general thing, better than is usual at this time. Most farmers are about or quite done chopping cotton; corn looks fine, and the present fine season, with which we have been blessed, will go far towards making a good crop all over our parish. Everybody seems to be in a good humor with everybody, and all moves along smoothly. In a spiritual point of view, we are not doing as well as we should, and as is our duty and privilege; but, Mr. Editor, our much beloved and faithful pastor, Bro. Bennett, is always at his post, ready to do the work of the Master, and ably proclaim Christ, the resurrection and the life, to a sin-stricken world; and, according to previous appointment, the last day of this month, he gave us at this place a lecture on that infamous institution, the Louisiana State Lottery, and never in all my life have I heard an abler argument against sin and all its institutions than was made by our able pastor. He just stripped the institution of its garb, and showed it in its true light. May God help us, as people, to put it down and keep it there! God bless and prosper the ADVOCATE in the earnest efforts it is making against the Louisiana State Lottery and sin!

HUMPHREYS CHAPEL.

SHILOH CIRCUIT DOTS.

This, up to the present, has been one of the sickliest years I have ever seen in this part of the country. Measles, mumps, whooping-cough, la grippe, flux, and pneumonia, all in their worst forms, have been just sweeping the country. Many have died, and especially the colored people. I suppose there were about fifty buried at our graveyard in two months, and at another near me I suppose there have been twenty-five or more buried; and a good many white people have died. I have lost five members in the bounds of my work up to the present. So, upon the account of sickness our church work has been greatly hindered; Sabbath-schools in some neighborhoods almost a failure. People that were not sick were afraid of measles, for it seemed that almost everybody had to have them. But, taking everything into consideration, I think we are doing well. Where I have taken my collections the people have responded liberally, and our congregations have been good under the circumstances. We are hoping and praying for a good year yet. Pray for us.

CALCASIEU, LA.

I have had a regular appointment at Calcasieu (commonly called Johnson's Settlement) for the last three years. We have a good Sunday-school organized there, and on June 1 we observed Children's Day, and had a delightful time. Quite a number of people from the surrounding country assembled there. The house in which we have been preaching in could not hold the people; and we had to stretch sails to protect the people from the sun. The writer preached at eleven A. M., and in conclusion proposed raising funds for building a church-house, which resulted in getting $308 in cash and subscription for the same. The ladies had brought their baskets filled with good things to eat, which was spread under the tent, and everyone seemed to partake of the bodily nourishment to their full satisfaction. After dinner we heard several nice speeches from the Sunday-school scholars, and took up a collection of $7 30 for the Children's Day fund.

REV. JOE JONES AT STARKVILLE, MISS.

The Methodist Church and people of Starkville have recently been favored with the presence and labors of Rev. Joe Jones, who is a successful evangelist, and a brother of the noted evangelist, Rev. Sam P. Jones. Bro. Joe Jones was with us about nine days, preaching for the most part three times a day. We can truly say he is a laborer approved by his works—one that needeth not to be ashamed.

The meeting grew in interest and power to the close. Congregations were good, and at night very large, crowding our spacious church almost to its utmost capacity. Ministers and people of different denominations and of all classes attended. Many who are seldom seen at the house of worship came out to hear the word of the earnest preacher. Bro. Jones secures and holds the undivided attention of his congregations. His sermons are clear and forcible presentations of gospel truth. Sallies of wit and humor sent occasional ripples of laughter over the congregation. His language is strong, and his utterance in the pulpit is bold.

Sin and crookedness in the church and community are held up to severest condemnation. Dram-drinking, dancing, worldly-minded church members feel the force and truth of his pointed and faithful rebukes. His appeals and invitations are solemn and earnest. Sinai and Calvary, death and the judgment, heaven and hell, are the themes. His own experience, as given in one of his sermons, telling how he was converted and saved from a life of dissipation to the life of Christ, presents the gospel in the concrete, showing its power to save even unto the uttermost, to bring up the sinner from the depths, make him an heir of salvation, and send him forthwith to tell the glad tidings to the lost. He began to preach on the day of his conversion, not yet quite four years ago, and has been preaching ever since with marked success.

The preaching and work of Bro. Joe Jones at Starkville has been instrumental, under God, of great good. Hundreds heard the gospel preached in a bold, clear and original manner. Some took offense at his words, but the multitude, including many of our best people, followed the preacher and gave him their enthusiastic support. The church has been greatly revived and moved to a more faithful Christian life. Many unconverted persons were deeply impressed, and gave evidence of a desire for the better life. More than sixty persons, up to date, have given their names as applicants for membership in the different churches.

Last Sunday, June 1, forty-seven persons joined the Methodist Church—a few by letter, but most of them on profession of faith. It was an impressive and touching scene, as this large number of persons gathered about the altar at the close of the morning service, more than twenty receiving baptism, and the whole number the right hand of fellowship, and casting in their lot with the people of God. At night, after an impressive sermon from our presiding elder, Rev. Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was participated in by a large number of communicants, many of them for the first time confessing their Savior in this holy communion.

For his brother "Sam," "Joe" cherishes a high regard, occasionally quoting from his sermons and sayings. No two brothers, he says, were ever more devoted to each other. He is "equal to Sam," said one brother. An intelligent lady said, "He is better" than Sam. The General Conference in session at the time, and being alluded to, a good lady asked, "Do you reckon the General Conference is as big as our meeting?" By all these tokens, the visit and labors of Bro. Joe Jones was an occasion of much good to the church at Starkville. We thank God and take courage. And we follow the "brave preacher" with our benedictions and our prayers.

Books.

THE CHURCH IN THY HOUSE. Daily Family Prayers for Morning and Evening. By Rufus W. Clark, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Detroit. Thomas Whittaker, publisher, 2 and 3 Bible House, New York. Price, sixty cents.

This little volume is well described in its title, and consists of a number of simple prayers arranged for each day in the week, with appropriate Scripture selection. Written by an Episcopalian minister, we should suppose it to be specially adapted to members of that communion.

TWENTY-FIVE GOOD SERMONS. 12 mo. Compiled by Wellesley W. Bowditch, D. D. J. S. Ogilvie, publisher, 57 Rose Street. On the title page is written: International Sermons delivered in the Old John Street Methodist Episcopal Church, New York by Prominent Ministers of Different Denominations.

These sermons were addressed mainly to the business men of New York in evangelistic services for their benefit, held in the above church. The volume is somewhat above the average of sermonic literature, and should be allowed to circulate,

MILLER—Mrs. SARAH M. MILLER (nee Etter) was born in Rogersville, Tenn., March 18, 1802; professed religion in early life, and joined the Methodist Church immediately, it being the church of her choice. She was happily married to the late Rev. Charles P. Miller in 1825. They moved to Ripley, Miss., in 1836, where they spent the remainder of life. Sister Miller took a prominent stand for the Master on her arrival here. She seemed always ready for every good work, her life being a living comment on practical godliness. We have known none more ready to sacrifice time, pleasure and means for the cause of Christ than she. The truth is, it was a pleasure to sacrifice. She "lived for others, and not herself."

All the preachers who have ministered here the last fifty-four years will, doubtless, have pleasant recollections of Sister Miller's kindness to them. Her house was always the preacher's home. She was so constant in her attendance at God's house that her seat was not vacated until strength failed to carry the body to its accustomed place. Even then she counseled, worked, hoped and prayed for the church. As a neighbor, she illustrated the meaning of that term by her readiness to help the needy, suffering and dying. I suppose she has endeared herself to this community by her early and constant ministrations to the sick as much as anyone who has ever lived at Ripley; so much so that both white and black feel they have lost a dear, good mother. No one has contributed more to the moral status of the town than she. She always sought to be on the right side of all questions. As a mother, her devotion to her children was undying. She taught both by precept and example, and thus tried to obey the injunction, "Raise your children up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." She leaves three daughters: Mrs. Dr. J. Y. Murry, Mrs. R. J. Thurmond and Mrs. A. Brown. She was also the aunt of Dr. W. G. E. Cunnyngham, our Sunday-school editor. She died as she lived—a Christian. Her prayers were literally answered. All she had asked her pastor to pray for, as to her own case, was that she might die easy. She fell on sleep as sweetly as a babe going to sleep in its mother's arms. Thus passed away, on March 21, 1890, our Grandma Miller, who, though dead, yet speaketh—who will wait and watch for us on that beautiful shore.

May she not be disappointed in the gathering of all her loved ones in the sweet by-and-by! D. W. BANN.

LANE—Died at her home, in Fort Worth, Texas, Saturday morning, May 24, 1890, Mrs. LIZZIE P. LANE, wife of W. A. Lane, Esq.

Mrs. Lane was born in East Feliciana parish, in the state of Louisiana, on August 30, 1839; was married to Mr. Lane in the year 1869, and in 1873 removed with her husband and two little girls to Fort Worth. For nearly fifteen years she has been an invalid, and during the larger part of that time a great sufferer, closely confined to her home. Throughout all these years of suffering no word of impatience or complaint ever escaped her lips. She knew long ago that disease had marked her for its victim, and with an intelligent eye watched the stealthy approaches of the dread destroyer; but she had no fear of the end. Her only desire in this respect was that her children might not, in their years of infancy, be deprived of a mother's care. In this she has been gratified, for she lived to see her two "little girls" grown to be women, and her boy almost to man's estate.

It would be useless to attempt a portrayal of the character of the deceased. No words could convey to those who knew her not any conception of what she really was. Those of us who knew her well know what we have lost, and can only sympathize and mourn with each other at the loss which we have sustained.

A FRIEND.

—Fort Worth Gazette.

We have known Mrs. Lane from her childhood. We walked to school together many, many days. She was a bright, cheerful girl. She grew up into a noble Christian matron. She was a thoughtful wife, a loving mother, a faithful friend, and a true woman in every sense of that great word. We were pained at heart to hear of her death; but she was ready, and that is enough.

EDITOR.

CALLENDER—Bro. JAMES SWAYZEE CALLENDER was born in East Feliciana parish, on August 28, 1816. He lived in that parish until about twelve years of age, when his parents died and he went to live with his uncle, Alex Callender, with whom he remained until nearly grown. In 1835 he married Miss Malinda Hamon, who lived but a short time. He was then married to Miss Sarah Grilling in 1837, by whom was born to him eight children; only two of these are now living.

He joined the Methodist Church in early manhood, but did not profess conversion for some time. His life was so consistent that the preachers and people claimed him for some great and good work. He was converted quietly at home with his family. It was but a short time before the enemy began to strive to make him think it was a delusion. This greatly troubled him, so much so, that on the following morning, while on their way to church, he told his wife that he believed he would desist, and not go to church—that it was no use; but she plead with him with tears to go with her until he agreed to go on. When he reached the church he met the venerable John C. Johnson, an eminent preacher, in whom he had implicit confidence. Bro. Johnson said to him: "Bro. Callender, there is a great work for you to do here." He answered: "There is a great work to do in my own heart." Bro. Johnson calmly, but tenderly said: "You are a disbeliever." This produced such pungent conviction that he retired for secret prayer with the tacit promise if the Lord would again bless him, that he would never doubt his saving power. The Lord answerd his prayer and he ever after claimed his acceptance with his Savior. He adorned the gospel by a consistent, upright walk and a pure, manifested love for the glorious work. In 1846 he moved from Claiborne county to Jefferson county, five miles south of Union Church, where he lived until his death a devoted Christian, a kind neighbor, an excellent citizen; one who was ever ready, with a free heart and willing hands, to assist the needy and relieve the distressed. He was remarkable for wise Christian counsel. When there was any misunderstanding between the members of his church, or among the neighbors, "Uncle Jimmy"—as we all called him—was the one we consulted first to get to serve as peace-maker, and he usually accomplished the desired result. He was always ready to speak a word of comfort to any who were in distress. His life and Christian character was a continual light to all in the house and church and neighborhood. As far as his name was known, it was the synonym of integrity, purity and uprightness. But he is gone; and "How we will miss him!" is on every tongue. He died January 4, 1890. Our loss is his gain. His last words to his weeping daughters were, "Weep not for me."

May the mantle of the Lord fall on some equally faithful officer in the church! Is the earnest desire of his pastor and the prayer of the bereaved congregation at Nebo, where he has been a punctual attendant for so long.

His Pastor, H. BRADFORD.

DEAR—Sister HANNAH P. DEAR, daughter of John B. and Margaret Posey, was born near Jackson, La., May 4, 1818; died March 18, 1890. Sister Dear joined the Methodist Church when about fifteen years of age, and ever afterwards maintained that sacred relation with Christian fidelity. She was married to Mr. John B. Palu in 1835, who died about four years after. She was again married in 1841 to Mr. Frederic Dear, who died in 1861, leaving her with four children. Then for a series of years she had a hard struggle to maintain her family. The oldest son and daughter being married, she moved with her younger son and daughter to East Baton Rouge parish, where she has been a near neighbor to this writer—a neighbor after the good Samaritan type. My children being left motherless soon after she came here—now twelve years ago—they have ever since been treated as physician and nurse in all their ills by this faithful old mother in Israel, who always came in with a word of cheer and pleasantry for the sick one, and was apt to know just what was wanting, but would not profess to know much about medicine. We shall ever cherish the memory of this old mother, and we voice the sentiment of the whole neighborhood when we say we loved her for her Christian virtues.

She loved the Methodist Church, and attended upon its ordinances as best she could. She was a most affectionate mother; her children in turn loved and honored her to a degree seldom seen. They are all members of the Methodist Church, all trying to follow the precepts and example of their saluted mother, who told the writer, a short time before her death, that she was ready to go, rejoicing at the same time. She was buried in Magnolia Cemetery, Baton Rouge, with an appropriate funeral service by Rev. J. A. Parker, of Baton Rouge station.

WILEY BROWN.

PHILIPS—Mrs. HARRIET PHILIPS died at her home, near Grand Coteau, La., April 5, 1890, aged seventy-eight years. Her long, consistent Christian life deserves to be recorded with the names of saints in your obituary column. She was one of the many who have lived, maintained a Christian character, and lived and labored for the church, both in riches and poverty, before and since the war.

My acquaintance began with her in 1853. During the years 1853 and 1854, when I was pastor of the church in Mansfield, La., she was a bright, intelligent Christian woman. Her cozy home was a delight to the itinerant preachers of that day and time. She was able and ever ready to sustain the church in all its various interests. After the war, being broken up and reduced in circumstances, she, like many others, with her husband, Lewis Philips, had to struggle for the essentials of life. When the infirmities of age came upon her, she had many sore trials and much affliction, but she maintained her Christian integrity to the last. Her faith was equal to her trials, and it kept her safe till her final exit. Thus another long, useful, and an eventful life has ended in a rich reward.

J. P.

GREENHAW—Mrs. JANE GREENHAW, the subject of this notice, was born near Charleston, S. C., in 1806; removed to Mississippi in 1852. Before her earthly house had been put in order she was left a widow, with several small children dependent on her alone for all the training—physical, mental and moral—they are to get. With a sublime courage born of faith in God, the heroic little woman set herself to the work of training her household. She did it well. Her children, when they had come to years, walked into the house of God in company with the mother. It was a great joy to the dear old saint that her four living children were in the church militant, and all the rest of her home-circle in the church triumphant. She would say: "We shall meet again—yes, after a little while." Such was her faith and hope.

Her last sickness was brief, but severe. Oh, the pain! Yet she never whispered a complaint; 'twas praise and song. The old songs of her young days came back to her, and of heaven she sang. She died as she wished—at the home of her youngest child, Bro. George W. Greenhaw, of Clarksdale, Miss. Her remains were carried to Grenada for burial. Eighty-four years of toil and care are ended. What a record for goodness, patience, meekness, they were!

The writer knew Grandma Greenhaw when he was but a boy, and through the years that have flown by no one that he can recall more fully exemplified the truths of the gospel or adorned the doctrines of Christ than she. Seventy-five years and more a painstaking, consistent Christian!—a pronounced Methodist Christian! Happy in life; triumphant in death. What more? Nothing more, till the infinite fullness of the other life is known. May the children not forget her words and works!

T. W. DYE.

ELLIS—Mrs. ELIZABETH ELLIS, widow of the late Mr. Thomas Ellis, died at the residence of her son-in-law, Mayor W. J. Deles, in Yazoo City, Miss., April 2, 1890, aged seventy-six years. She was born in Yorkshire, England, April 6, 1814. At the age of eighteen years she was married to Mr. Ellis. They sailed for America on the day of their marriage. After a tollsome voyage, touching at New York and Mobile, they settled at Aberdeen, Miss., where they spent eight or ten years, when they removed to Yazoo City, where they lived to the end of their earthly pilgrimage. He was a Baptist and she a Methodist; but they were one in Christ, baptized into the same spirit, walking by the same rule, minding the same things.

Sister Ellis was a member of the Methodist Church for forty five years. Her Christian virtues shone throughout a long and useful life with a steady light. The beneficent work of her hands was restricted only by the limitation of her powers. She delighted in doing good; she had a large, sympathetic heart. The generous impulses of her heart were a continuous outflowing of Christian hospitality, and "in her tongue was the law of kindness."

Universally loved, her death is universally regretted. Every class, from the highest to the humblest, were represented at her funeral, attesting, in the most affectionate manner, the high esteem in which she was held in the community. She leaves two dutiful sons, a daughter, and many grandchildren, who "arise up and call her blessed."

R. S. WOODWARD.

SIMS—LITTLE PAGE SIMS was born in Shelby county, Ala., October 6, 1822; was married to Mildred N. White, February 16, 1845; embraced religion in 1855, being soundly converted, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which he was a consistent member up to the day of his death, February 2, 1890, at his home near Siloam Camp Ground.

As a husband, he was kind and loving. As a father, he was affectionate; as a neighbor, he was obliging, and had a host of friends. He gave liberally to the church, and for many years he filled the position of steward in a most acceptable manner. Visiting him during his illness, he told me he was ready to pass away, and the smile which broke over his face before death, and which still lingered as he was sadly laid away, bore evidence of the truth of his words.

He leaves behind to mourn his loss a wife and three children. The faithful wife who for forty-five years traveled life's vale with him still travels, but alone and desolate. Her gaze is upward, seeking that "city" and that "rest" which is to come. May God comfort her, and lead the children home at last!

GEO. A. MANDEVILLE.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

The Best Blood Medicine

So say Leading Physicians and Druggists, and their opinion is indorsed by thousands cured by it of Scrofula, Eczema, Erysipelas, and other diseases of the blood.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla has won its reputation by years of valuable service to the community. It is the best."—R. S. Lang, Druggist, 212 Merrimack st., Lowell, Mass.

Dr. W. P. Wright, Paw Paw Ford, Tenn., says: "In my practice, I invariably prescribe Ayer's Sarsaparilla for chronic diseases of the blood."

Dr. R. R. Boyle, Third and Oxford sts., Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "For two years I have prescribed Ayer's Sarsaparilla in numerous instances, and I find it highly efficacious in the treatment of all disorders of the blood."

L. M. Robinson, Pharmacist, Sabina, O., certifies: "Ayer's Sarsaparilla has always been a great seller. My customers think there is no blood-purifier equal to it."

"For many years I was afflicted with scrofulous running sores, which, at last became so bad the doctors advised amputating one of my legs to save my life. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla and soon saw an improvement. After using about two dozen bottles the sores were healed. I continue to take a few bottles of this medicine each year, for my blood, and am no longer troubled with sores. I have tried other reputed blood-purifiers, but none does so much good as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—D. A. Robinson, Neal, Kansas.

To Our Subscribers.

Notwithstanding bills have been sent to all the delinquent subscribers, there is still a large amount due, which, doubtless, could be paid by a slight effort in each individual case. This effort we earnestly request each one owing the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to immediately make. Hand amount of indebtedness to the preacher in charge, or remit same to this office. Should, however, any such be unable to pay up before the meeting of Annual Conference, as usual, we will wait till that time.

The expenses of a newspaper office continue the same the year around. All the employees must be paid as well as newspaper and ink bills. In order to meet the current expenses, the current receipts should continue to grow. There is no reason why the 6,800 subscribers, that we now carry, should not promptly pay for their paper, and thus enable us to meet all just demands.

Brethren, send in your $2 at once, and let each subscriber also send $2 for a new subscriber, and thus drive the subscription list to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE up to 10,000.

A strong pull, and a pull altogether, of pastors and laymen will produce this result within the present year.

Family Religion.

"Then David returned to bless his household." (II. Sam. vi, 20.)

It had been a busy, joyous day in Israel. Early in the morning the king and the "elders of Israel, and the captains over thousands, went to bring up the ark of the covenant of the Lord out of the house of Obed-edom with joy." "And they brought up the ark of the covenant of the Lord with shouting and with sound of the cornet and trumpets and with cymbals, making a noise with psalteries and harps." "And David blessed the people in the name of the Lord." "Then David returned to bless his household." The evident meaning of this sentence is, that David returned from the public service and worship of God to hold religious service and worship in his own house. The word translated "bless" is a word used to describe an act of religious devotion. David, after having spent the greater part of the day in an important public act of religion, went home in the evening and held religious services in his family.

Religion has to do with life, all life. It is itself a life—a new life. It has been said that "the original, natural foundations of life are in the family." Life begins in the family. If we would have religion exert itself in its own proper way upon life, we must let it begin its work where life begins. Individual life commences in the household. The religion that is to sanctify and bless the individual life should begin its work just where the individual life begins. If it does not, then it does not exert all its influences.

The family is also the foundation of social and national life. So if the social life shall receive the best and most lasting benefits which religion can confer, religion must begin its operations upon the foundations of that life. And if the national life shall feel the full effects of a pure religion, running along all its channels of business and politics, that stream must flow out from its very foundations. Looking, then, at the family as the foundation of all life, we see the beauty and propriety and necessity of family religion—a regular religious service in every family every day. This ought to be enough on this subject to everyone who believes in religion. Just this one thought—that the family is the foundation of life, and that religion should begin its work on the foundation in order to make life what God intended it to be—should induce every head of a family to resolve to let no day pass without some sort of religious service in the household.

It is a most astonishing thing to find all over the country people who have taken the church vows and yet seem to have no conscience at all on the subject of family worship. They believe in the Scriptures, and regularly attend the services of the sanctuary, but have no home altar! Day after day comes, bringing bountiful blessings to the family; yet the parents and children never come together around the hearthstone to send up a family thanksgiving to God for his goodness. If an earthly friend bestows a gift, all the family are made cognizant of the fact, and are called to express their gratitude; but God's daily gifts are not so acknowledged. Such neglect on the part of the head of a family has two bad effects. It diminishes his faith in his own piety and it weakens the faith of the family in his religion. Those heads of families who live in this neglect, and who are now reading this article, know that the first is true, and those of their families who are reading it know that the second is true. No man can have a perfect faith in the sincerity of his own religion, if he lives in the neglect of any of the known duties which it imposes, nor can anybody else have that faith in it, not even the members of his family. Profession without practice is the conclusive evidence of insincerity, and insincerity is ruinous to the faith of others in us and to our own faith in ourselves. And when our families wake up to the fact that we profess more than we practice, an insuperable barrier is thrown across our influence for good. This adds a fearful resonsibility; but, alas! few seem to realize it. May the Lord be merciful to those living in the neglect of family worship!

Regeneration.

BY JOSEPH B. COTTRELL, D. D.

In the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, of April 10, "Gilderoy" favored us with a dissertation on the scriptural presentations of regeneration—varied as they are. I enter no caveat against his presentation; but I invite consideration of a few points that have elicited thought and inquiry in, at least, one mind. As a natural generation and natural birth are different in the order of time and fact, may there not be between spiritual generation (termed "regeneration" because subsequent to natural generation) and the new birth? Regeneration and new birth are not synonymous. The former is in order to the latter. What, then, is regeneration? I answer: It is any reconditioning of any soul, qualifying it for repentance, faith and obedience. This is, through virtue of the atonement, wrought by the Spirit of God in everyone; hence the reprehensiveness of not coming to the spiritual birth. We are regenerated upon no condition of our will: but to come to the spiritual birth and cry, Abba, Father! is upon condition of our electing to do so. Regenerated we may be, unconditionally, so far as our own choice or volition goes; but to be "born again," we are to choose, and to come into the measures prescribed. Regeneration conditions our nature so that we may freely refuse or consent; but to pass into the kingdom, and have assurance of faith and receive the witness of the Spirit to our heirship with the saints, are conditional upon our voluntary consecration.

"The grace of God that bringeth salvation unto all men hath appeared." The new birth is the beginning of sanctification. We grow in holiness, going "from faith to faith." The horizon widens indefinitely. Is the question raised relative to complete elimination of sin before we leave the flesh? I answer, No! I answer, Yes! That whereof Paul predicates the term "sin" in many places is the merely natural; not the reprehensible. It involves no guilt. Adam had it before he transgressed. It was of it came his transgression. Infants, without guilt, have it. They are not unholy because of it. They are not holy because of the regeneration, whence they may pass from out a Christian infancy into a Christian childhood, on to a Christian manhood and womanhood. It is of character, and not nature, the terms "holiness" and "unholiness" should be predicated. Is man, by nature, unholy? No. Is he, by nature, holy? No. He is by nature human; and he is as human after he is born again as before; after death as before. Is there no conversion there? Yes—conversion from primary to secondary, and on to higher degrees, even as cotton is converted into rolls, rolls into thread, thread into cloth. Of course, the intelligent reader will apprehend the difference between analogy and comparison. There is no parallelism between the physical and the moral. They are analagous, but not similar. No soul comes into being other than by the purpose, power and favor of God; for "we are created in Christ Jesus, unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should work in them." Christ is the vine, and our being is organic with his by no grafting. When "Gilderoy" says that the Holy Spirit is the agent and the Word is the instrument in our regeneration, etc., I apprehend that he falls into the error which caused the dellection of the mind of Alexander Campbell from the true line of doctrinal development. The Word that is efficient—"quick and powerful"—is the Logos, the wisdom; "the Word that is nigh us, in our mouths and in our hearts." "He (the Word) is the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." In predicating of the written word what the Scriptures affirm of the personal Word, in the matter of regeneration, the new birth and sanctification, Mr. Campbell laid the foundation of pretty nearly all the errors of his new church.

FRANKLIN, Ky.

Years ago the name of E. A. Burke was placed in the new Constitution of the State of Louisiana. Everybody knows the result. Now it is proposed to place the name of John A. Morris in a new Constitution. Is it a coincidence? Will anybody predict the result?

"The Louisiana Lottery Bill."

A bill was introduced in the House of Representatives of Louisiana, last week, entitled "An act providing for the submission to the electors of the State, for adoption or rejection, an amendment to the Constitution of the State, by inserting therein an article on levees, schools, charities, pensions, drainage and lotteries."

This bill embraces the offer of John A. Morris, principal stockholder in the Louisiana Lottery Company, of $25,000,000, to be paid to the State of Louisiana during twenty-five years from January 1, 1894, for the continuation of this gigantic fraud and terribly demoralizing institution during that period. So little confidence has this Lottery king in this money being distributed as he wishes, that he directs that $350,000 anuually be expended for the public schools; same sum for building and repairing levees; $200,000 to charities and pensions, and $100,000 for the drainage and sanitation of the city of New Orleans.

Thus he hides his bribe by the thin veil of beneficence. So completely have the minions of the Lottery king hoodwinked thousands of good people of the State of Louisiana that they believe that John A. Morris will faithfully carry out what he promises. They also believe, which is not true, that our State is so pauperized as to be unable to care for its insane and indigent, to educate its illiterate, white and black, to build its levees, and otherwise provide for the public weal of its citizens, when for the last ten years or more Louisiana has been on the up-grade. There is $500,000 within control of the State Levee Board for the repair and construction of all the levees damaged by the recent overflow; there are ample funds in the hands of the State treasurer to care for the indigent insane of the State. All that is requisite to supply the educational funds, to remove the curse of illiteracy from us, is to deepen and broaden the interest in this subject in the country parishes and induce local taxation to the amount needed to meet the local costs of schools.

The false idea of poverty so strongly pressed by the advocates of the Lottery bill are not true, and their continuing to urge these pleas after they have been proven false shows the desperateness of their cause.

The citizens of several parishes of this State have instructed their legislators to vote against this application for an amendment to the Constitution. So artfully has the Louisiana Lottery Company used its agents, funds and influence that it is feared they will be able to obtain two-thirds majorities in both Houses of the Legislature should the present bill be vetoed by Gov. Francis T. Nicholls, who is an outspoken anti-Lottery officer. Should this be the case, the fight against this gigantic evil must be maintained throughout the State during the next two years, and will demand fearless, tried, wise, active leaders at every primary and ward meeting throughout the State.

The Anti-Lottery League was formed with this possibility fully in view. This League will spare no effort to prevent the fair name of Louisiana from being buried in a gilded coffin made by the Louisiana Lottery Company, containing the honor, integrity and virtue of the State.

The evils that confront us are the degradation of our people, the destruction of the morals, especially of our youth, and the undermining of the religious structure of our commonwealth; so that we crumble rapidly into ruin under the mereiless tyrant, the Louisiana Lottery king. It is reasonable to expect that if John A. Morris secures the renewal charter of the Louisiana Lottery Company for the next twenty-five years, that he becomes dictator of the State. No governor, legislator, State or city official can be nominated without his approval; no bill can be presented in the legislative nor in any municipal body throughout the State that does not receive his sanction. Every judicial officer, from constable to judge of Supreme Court, will become a satrap of this Lottery king; every school-teacher and employee of the State will be under his domineering influence; every bank, industry, commercial and agricultural enterprise will be literally under the control of this king of the State.

Nor will this evil be limited to State lines. It is well known that the henchmen of this Louisiana Lottery Company are to be found in Washington, and many think they occupy high positions. If the Louisiana Lottery Company succeeds in securing a renewal of its charter in the State of Louisiana, it will not be long before it will boldly control and manage the United States mail service and defy all opposition to the transmission of its mail matter. Therefore this is not a State, but a national question; it touches the home-life in all this land. It is the gigantic trust of the nineteenth century.

Let the nation be aroused to the importance of this subject, and North, South, East and West unite their religious and moral forces to suppress this enormous outrage. The advocates of this bill boast that our sister States are now drained of over $10,000,000 a year for the benefit of the Louisiana Lottery Company. In five years from the date of the renewal of its present charter this sum will approach $100,000,000 a year. So insidious has this foe worked its way into cities, towns and hamlets of our United States, that from small postoffices in out-of-the-way places, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, pour monthly contributions into the maw of this rapacious monster.

There is a noble band of Christian men in the State of Louisiana composed of all creeds, who are manfully battling for deliverance from this millionaire destroyer. Were it not for the fact that God is on our side, and that he upholdeth the righteous, heareth their cry, we might well be discouraged. Knowing that God maintaineth our cause, we propose to fight to the end.

Fraternity—Union.

A spectacle, greater than it seemed, was presented to the public, when the fraternal delegates of the Methodist Church, North, were received in St. Louis by the General Conference of the Methodist Church, South. These delegates eloquently portrayed the aggressive religious work of two great Christian churches, the work of the past, the work of the present. The great beautiful undertone, that kindled joy upon the responsive faces of preachers of the Methodist Church, South, was, that these two noble and vigorous branches of the great Wesleyan revival had a common heritage in the heroic deeds of the fathers, and that to-day each branch was actuated by the same spirit and possessors of essentially the same doctrines. But these fraternal delegates expressed a wish for organic union. We can not doubt that this wish on their part has coupled with it the belief, that this organic union would work a greater good for both branches. But the wish is simply the outcome of an Utopian dream. Suppose such a union, the will of the majority would determine the policy and the elections of the united Methodism. And Northern Methodism would be the majority. Northern majorities are not unfrequently fearfully blind to the interests of Southern minorities. At least, it is so in interests of state. And really good Christian people are at the head of this political majority too. Southern Methodism, at present, can scarcely feel quite assured that a Northern Methodist majority would be any more regardful of a Southern Methodist minority. Organic union is Utopian. The manly statement of this fact by the senior Bishop of the Methodist Church, South, wreathed all around with the smiles of humorous allusions, ought to eliminate, hereafter, reference in fraternal greetings to this happy dream, unless altered circumstances, arising from a yet unmade history, force the topic upon both churches for consideration.—Round Table.

The Prohibitionists.

The Prohibitionists have received a number of defeats recently—in Rhode Island, where the prohibition law was repealed, and in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and elsewhere. It was to be imagined that they were demoralized by these reverses, but their defeats appear to have had no effect on them, for they are as energetic as ever.

The people of Nebraska this fall will vote upon a prohibitory amendment to the State Constitution, and the Prohibitionists propose to make a vigorous campaign there; and later on New York will be invited to pass on the subject in a popular election.

New York would seem a very bad field for the Prohibitionists, for it is one in which the liquor influence is stronger, politically, than in any other part of the Union; yet they think they see some chance of success. The trouble is that they do not seem to know when they are whipped, or at least will not stay whipped. —Times-Democrat.

For once the T.-D. sees clearly. During the Revolution, Washington and his little band were "whipped" any number of times; but the next day, or the next week, the "whipped" Colonists would turn up as pugnacious as ever. Defeat is nothing to a righteous cause, except the rallying-point for a more determined effort. The Abolitionists were defeated a thousand times, yet they marched on to victory at last. The cause that never suffers defeat never gains any strength. In every department of life difficulties develop wisdom and strength, and these lead to triumph.

Notes.

Mark Guy Pearse says: "My faith in perfection is very weak when I look at others; it is extinguished altogether when I look at myself."

When every preacher comes to the conclusion that his church is not a field to work in, but a force to work with, then we will begin to see wonders!

The London Methodist Times recently published statistics of membership in the Wesleyan Methodist Church for 1890. There are 423,615 members, being a net increase over last year of 2,633. There are 28,158 members on trial. There have been 5,370 deaths. There are "junior society members," 60,790, and 88 candidates for the ministry. There were 47,250 new members received, and 24,907 "ceased to be members."

Zion's Herald:

It is stated in the Century that nine thousand manuscripts have been submitted for publication in the last year, of which it was possible that the most to use only four hundred. The 8,600 were rejected, not because without merit, but for utter lack of space. Every magazine and newspaper is thus plied with contributions which can not be used, for the same reason. If voluntary contributors would for once apprehend the situation, they would cease to feel unkindly towards the editor who returns their manuscript.

Lord Randolph Churchill recently "opened a bazaar" for the Methodists at Barry Road, and in his speech on that occasion we find some words at which some Episcopalians on this side the water will "open their eyes." His Lordship said:

I notice that your welcome is as cordial as it could be, although the person addressing you does not belong to your communion, and is a member of the Church of England. But I imagine that it must be a source of pleasure and pride to any member of the Church of England to co-operate on all convenient opportunities with the great Wesleyan community. No member of the Church of England, if he possess any instruction, can fail to acknowledge the great debt under which the Established Church lies towards the Wesleyan community. We who belong to the Church of England can not forget that had it not been for the renowned and historic effort of the great reformer from whom your community takes its name, our church would probably have ceased to exist as an establishment and perhaps even as a church; and if we see the Church of England in full life and vigor, actively performing its duty, we must, in a large measure, trace that result to the stimulus it received from that great and gifted and almost inspired man, John Wesley, whose example you are all following.

Personal and Otherwise.

Prof. Arthur H. Beales, of Paducah, Ky., has been elected president of the Industrial Institute and College at Columbus, Miss.

The Prohibitionists of Tennessee have nominated Rev. Dr. D. C. Kelley for governor. The opponent of Dr. Kelley will have a warm and lively time, certain.

Henry M. Stanley is to be married, July 12, to Miss Dorothy Tennant, who is said to be a descendant of Cromwell.

It is said that Rev. Sam Small has been elected president of a Methodist College at Ogden, Utah Territory, and that he has accepted the position. So Sam is "boating around" still.

Dr. Gambrell, in his address before the Baptist Education Society, recently in session in Chicago, said: "Take Mississippi, and, at least, every eighth person is a member of the Baptist Church."

Rev. E. B. Chappell, of Austin, Texas, has been elected Regent of Southwestern University, at Georgetown, Texas.

The University of North Carolina has conferred the degree of D. D. on Rev. F. L. Reid, editor of the North Carolina Christian Advocate. An honor bestowed on a worthy man!

Remember Dr. John Mathews, of St. Louis, lectures Thursday evening, 19, 8 P. M., at Washington Artillery Hall, for the benefit of Rayne Memorial Church Organ Fund. Subject: "The Vagaries of the Age." If you want an enjoyable hour, go and hear the inimitable John Mathews.

"The eloquent divine" seems to have mixed matters when he spoke of "that land where there is no darkness, neither night, that land of perfect rest, where the purified angels assemble at the glorious twilight to bathe their wearied wings in the limpid waters of the river that flows eternally with milk and honey." Rather a sticky bath for "wearied wings!"

The "reform movement" is marching on, like John Brown's spirit. In Philadelphia the park commissioners have prohibited smoking in the public parks, and one of the street car companies has prohibited spitting in its cars!

Mr. Euclid Borland, representative of the tenth ward of this city, when approached by a committee of the Lottery, and requested to vote on that side of the question or resign, answered in writing:

The Democratic doctrine is more thoroughly settled that no right resides in the people to instruct a representative after his election. I must, therefore, decline to accede to your request to support the Lottery proposition of Mr. Morris—or, for that matter, any lottery proposition—and I must utterly repudiate your right even to request me to resign.

I did not seek the position, and I was away from the State when it was tendered me. I considered it a great honor, coming as it did, and accepted it as a sacred trust. I intend to stand at my post and to return the charge intrusted to me untarnished, and I am willing to stand or fall upon my record, past and future.

All honor to Mr. Borland!

Postal Card Reports.

—Bro. C. F. White writes from Bunkie, La., that the Lord's cause is prospering in that place. The new church has been painted, two Sunday-schools operating well in the town, with clever teachers, bright scholars and plenty of literature. The preacher, Bro. Hoffpauir, is in favor with all the people and pushing the work with accustomed zeal and energy.

—Rev. J. H. Mitchell writes from Macon, Miss.: "We closed a meeting in Macon station, North Mississippi Conference, last Tuesday night, that had been in progress for three weeks. Results: church greatly benefited; ten professed conversion; five joined our church (more will join); one joined the Baptist Church, and one the Presbyterian Church. We are indebted for valuable ministerial help to Rev. J. W. Luter, of Brooksville, Miss., and Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Aberdeen, Miss. We hope to realize greater blessings still before the close of the year."

—Rev. J. E. Buck, writing from Rome, Miss., says: "Our second Quarterly Conference convened May 24 and 25. Dr. Wheat, our beloved presiding elder, was absent attending General Conference, but the occasion was not an unprofitable one. The charge very well represented, and reports show an upward tendency. At the conclusion of the eleven o'clock service I administered baptism to four infants. We are trying to save the babies, since the old will not be. We observed Children's Day at Rural Hill at nine o'clock on Sunday. The occasion was a delightful one. Those on exercises acquitted themselves well, and the collection fair. Revival season is on us. May God help us to preach and work as we never have during this season for unfortunate humanity! Pray for us."

—Rev. A. C. Flowers writes: "Clark circuit is still improving in some respects. We have one class meeting at work; three prayer meetings and six Sunday-schools. We are sorry to say there are not more than a dozen subscribers on this work to the ADVOCATE, when there ought to be six dozen. We find in some places more than a third dozen secular papers and no religious ones. Children's Day was observed with an offering of $7 70 more than last year. A niece bureau in the parsonage now. Baptized five infants last Sunday. We want you, dear editor, at our camp meeting, September 12, 1890, at Andrew Chapel."

—Rev. G. W. Bachmau writes, June 16: "Commencement exercises of Grenada Collegiate Institute are in progress. Rev. J. B. Stone preached the annual sermon yesterday morning, and Rev. J. W. Honnoll preached at night. Both were appropriate and edifying sermons, and were listened to by large audiences. Rev. J. E. Thomas has been granted leave of absence from his charge for one month, on account of ill-health, that he may travel and recuperate. North Mississippi Conference is being pretty well evangelized. Near three hundred persons have been added to the church during the year."

—Rev. J. G. Sibley writes: "I have just returned from Pearlington and Logtown, Miss., where I spent five days with Bro. Adams and his generous people. The District Conference held there recently was, indeed, a great blessing—was really a feast of fat things. This charge is now in a healthy state of pure religion, and is growing in grace and knowledge. Bro. Adams does his work well. He does not only stir the soil to its depths, but also removes noxious weeds. While there I preached three times and sold more than $50 worth of good religious books. I am so glad and so thankful my health has improved I feel like saying at all times, 'Glory to God in the highest!' I leave in a few days for my father's, where I expect to take part in a family reunion, and while there shall visit the place of my birth and childhood."

Notice.

To the Delegates of the Grenada District, North Mississippi Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: The time for our District Conference draws near. Hope you are making your arrangements to come. You can not come all the way by rail. We did expect our railroad to be in operation by this time, but it is not. Via Greenwood is your best route. If you will be at Greenwood, Thursday evening, by 6:30, you will find the steamer John Allen ready to carry you up the Tallahatchie river to Sunnyside, the site of our District Conference. The usual time of this steamer's departure is before 6:30; but Capt. Lueker has kindly consented to wait until after the westbound train on G. P. R. R. arrives. Usual fare, $2 50; but he has agreed to bring up all ministers and delegates for $1 25, or $2 for round trip. All parties that expect to come will please notify me at McNutt, Miss.

W. S. SHIPMAN.

JUNE 18, 1890.

Notice.

Will the preachers of the Holly Springs district, North Mississippi Conference, please send me the names of the members of the District Conference, distinguishing between local preachers, delegates, Sunday-school superintendents and recording stewards? Also send names of alternates. This is asked in order that a correct roll may be made before the meeting of the Conference, and thus save time in organizing. Brethren, please attend to this promptly. My postoffice is Hudsonville, Miss.

A Chance to Make Money.

A party having read Mr. Moorehead's experience plating with gold, silver and nickel, sent for a plater and says he has more work than he can do. It is surprising the spoons, castors and jewelry that people want plated. The first week I cleared $37 10, and in three weeks $119 85, and my wife has made about as I have. By addressing W. H. Griffith & Co., Zanesville, Ohio, you can get circulars. A Plater only costs $3. You can learn to use it in an hour. Can plate large or small articles, and can make money anywhere.

THE STORY OF A LITTLE BOY WHO WAS TURNED INTO A BIRD.

BY ROBERT H. FLETCHER.

Once there was a little boy,
And, for no reason why,
From the day of his birth nothing else on earth
Did he do but whine and cry.

He cried so very, very much
That no one would go near him;
The people said, "It beats the Dutch!
Why, the Man in the Moon could hear him!"

This boy's home was upon the beach,
Where the sea-gull's scream is heard,
And if there's a bird knows how to screech,
The sea-gull is that bird.

They scream their best when the winds blow high
And the sky grows dark and hazy;
But let that boy begin to cry
And he'd drive the sea-gulls crazy.

Until at last they said, "O, joy!—
We must be very dull—
This child's no use at all as a boy,
But he'd make a spleedid gull!"

So off they flew and told the king:
They told him not to doubt it;
That this boy's scream beat everything!
That's all there was about it.

The king he saddled his best curlew;
He flew down the wind like mad!
(I think 'twas a funny horse, don't you?
'Twas the only kind he had.)

And when he heard that little boy yell
He thought his ears would split,
And so he turned him into a gull.
And nobody cared a bit.

MR. EDITOR: I wrote once to your paper some time ago, and you were kind enough to publish it; so I am encouraged to write again. I am staying with my papa, who lives at Pleasant Hill. He is pastor of this circuit. I want this letter to surprise my grandmama, who lives at Keithville, La. I have no pets. I read a chapter in the Bible every day. Our Sunday-school secretary, Mr. Edward Mathews, made this request of us, and we are trying to comply. Bro. Harp is still our pastor. We all love him, and he loves us. This is his last year. I hope we will love our next pastor as well as we do him. I would like to know who of the little cousins can tell me where "greyhound" is found in the Bible. May God bless the "dear old ADVOCATE!" How we love to get it each week as it comes to our office! I guess I have written enough for this time.

Your little friend,
W. F. HENDERSON, JR.

PLEASANT HILL, LA.

MR. EDITOR: As it has been some time since I wrote to your dear paper, I thought I would write again. I was so proud to see my letter in print. I am a little girl eleven years old. I love to read the little cousins' letters very much I have one sister. She is married and is keeping house. She has one child. I have five brothers. The oldest brother is studying for the ministry; one is going to school; one is too small to go to school, and the other two work in the mills. I work in the mills also. My mama keeps house, and papa works on a wagon. I will answer Josephine Sewell's question. "River" is found in Exodus vii, 20 and 24. Please print this letter for your friend,

HATTIE WOODWARD.

WESSON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to your paper, I will now write. I am a little boy seven years old. I have one brother and one sister. I am a member of the Methodist Church. Adam Anders and I joined last October at New Prospect Camp Meeting. I am not [illegible] went to bring up the ark of the covenant of the Lord out of the house of Obed-edom with joy." "And they brought up the ark of the covenant of the Lord with shouting and with sound of the cornet and trumpets and with cymbals, making a noise with psalteries and harps." "And David blessed the people in the name of the Lord." "Then David returned to bless his household." The evident meaning of this sentence is, that [illegible] own faith in ourselves. A[illegible] when our families wake up [illegible] the fact that we profess m[illegible] than we practice, an insuperal[illegible] barrier is thrown across our [illegible] fluence for good. This adds fearful resonsibility; but, ala[illegible] few seem to realize it. May t[illegible] Lord be merciful to those livi[illegible] in the neglect of family worshi[illegible]

Regeneration.

MY JOSEPH[illegible] letters today, and it got me in the notion to write one, too. My school is out and I am at home. I have some very nice pets; a sheep named Woody that I wish all of the cousins could see. He will put her little head against me and drop her ears down and look so innocent. But then if I run off from him, he will come bounding to butt me. I also have two pet calves and two dogs. My calves are named Plunkett and Bill Arp. My dogs are named Dauby and Bragg. I have no mother; but there is none of you boys that love your sister any better than I do mine. I am eleven years old.

CHARLEY E. GRAY.

TEYES, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: I never see any letters from this part of Louisiana; so I thought I would write one. I have five brothers. Rev. W. L. Linfield is our preacher; we all like him so much. I am not going to school now, but will go the first of June. I study spelling, fifth reader, geography, grammar and arithmetic. Our Children's Day will be on the fourth Sunday. We would all be so glad to have you come and help us in our church. It is the only Methodist Church in this part of Louisiana. My little brother Angus has been very sick, but is better to-day. We were all so sorry to hear of the death of dear Aunt Ellis. We know that she is safe in heaven with her loved ones already there; but, oh! how sadly will all who knew her miss her sweet, loving welcome to her home at Amite, and her deeds of kindness and comfort to the needy!

EDITH OTT.

MT. HERMON, LA.

"Mother-sick."

I read a very sweet story the other day about a little girl and her mother, who were such good friends you scarcely ever saw one without the other. Once, when Daisy had been away a few days on a visit, her hostess brought her back, saying:

"I am afraid that Daisy hasn't had a very good time; she cried a little once or twice."

"Were you homesick, Daisy?" asked her mother.

"No, mama, not homesick, but I—I guess I was a little mother-sick. Were you real happy while I was away, mama?"

"Not very happy, Daisy."

"Then I guess you must have been child-sick, weren't you, mama?"

I wonder if Daisy ever learned that beautiful verse in the Bible: "Thus saith the Lord, as one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you."

HELP YOURSELF.—Fight your own battles. Hoe your own row. Ask no favors of anyone, and you will succeed a thousand times better than one who is always beseeching someone's influence and patronage. No one will help you as you help yourself, because no one will be so heartily interested in your affair. The first step will not be a long one, perhaps; but, carving your own way up the mountain, you make each one lead to another, and stand firm while you chop still another out. Men who have made fortunes are not those who have had five thousand dollars given them to start with, but boys who have started fair with a well-earned dollar or two.

Men who acquire fame have never been thrust into popularity by puffs begged or paid for, or given in a friendly spirit. They have outstretched their own hands and touched the public heart. Men who win love do their own wooing, and I never knew a man to fail so signally as one who induced his affectionate grandmother to speak a good word for him. Whether you work for fame, for love, for money or for anything else, work with your hands and heart and brain. Say, "I will," and some day you will conquer. Never let any man have to say, "I have dragged you up." Too many friends sometimes hurt a man more than none at all.—Selected.

Household.

Simple Life Best for Children.

Happiness is the natural condition of every normal child, and if the small boy or girl has a peculiar faculty for any one thing, it is for self-entertainment; with certain granted conditions, of course. One of these is physical freedom and a few rude and simple playthings. Agreeable occupation is as great a necessity for children as for adults, and beyond this almost nothing can be contributed to the real happiness of a child. "I try so hard to make my children happy," said a mother, with a sigh, one day, in despair at her efforts. "Stop trying," exclaimed a practical friend at her elbow, "and do as a neighbor of mine does." "And how is that?" she asked dolefully. "Why, she simply lets her children grow and develop naturally, only directing their growth properly. She has always thrown them, as far as practicable, upon their own resources, taught them to wait upon themselves—no matter how many servants she had—and to construct their own playthings. When she returns home from absence they await but one thing—their mother's kiss. Whatever has been brought for them is bestowed when the needed time comes. Nothing exciting is allowed to them at night, and they go to bed and to sleep in a wholesome mental state that insures restful slumber. They are taught to love nature, and to feel that there is nothing arrayed so finely as the lily of the field, the bees and the butterflies; there is nothing so mean as a lie, nor any thing so miserable as disobedience; that it is a disgrace to be sick, and that good health, good teeth and good temper come from plain food, plenty of sleep and being good." In order to thrive, children require a certain amount of "letting alone." Supreme faith in the mother, few toys, no finery, plain food, no drugs and early to bed are the best things for making them happy.—North Carolina Presbyterian.

NOVEL USES FOR OLD PAPERS.—Most housekeepers know how invaluable newspapers are for packing away the winter clothing, the printing ink acting as a defiance to the stoutest moth as successfully as camphor or tar-paper. For this reason newspapers are invaluable under the carpet, laid over the regular carpet-paper. The most valuable quality of newspapers in the kitchen, however, is their ability to keep out the air, says The Farm and Home. It is well known that ice completely enveloped in newspapers, so that all air is shut out, will keep a longer time than under other conditions, and that a pitcher of ice-water laid in a newspaper, with the ends of the paper twisted to exclude the air, will remain all night in any summer-room with scarcely any perceptible melting of the ice. These facts should be utilized oftener than they are in the care of the sick at night. In freezing ice-cream, when the ice is scarce, pack the freezer only three-quarters full of ice and salt, and finish with newspapers, and the difference in the time of freezing and quality of the cream is not perceptible from the result where the freezer is packed full of ice. After removing the dasher, it is better to cork up the cream and cover it tightly with a packing of newspapers than to use more ice. The newspaper retains the cold already in the ice better than a packing of cracked ice and salt, which must have crevices to admit the air.—Farmer's Review.

TRANSPLANTING POT.—A valuable addition to the working outfit of a gardener is a new transplanting pot made in three parts, the body being divisible and the bottom removable. In transplanting, the bottom is removed from the body, the pot inserted in a hole in the ground, and the keys which control the grip of the side pieces withdrawn, when the valves are pressed literally apart and raised from the earth, leaving the earth and plant it had contained in the new location.

Timothy Davis, postmaster at Pattersonville, La., says: "Some years ago, while living in Algiers, I contracted a cough that everyone thought would cause my death. I was unable to sleep, had night-sweats, and soon became too weak to work. I had several doctors and tried many remedies, but with no improvement. An old friend hearing of my condition recommended Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. It had cured him of a serious lung trouble, and he had great confidence in Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar. Before three bottles had been taken I was up and about, a well man. It saved my life. I always recommend it for consumption, asthma, bronchitis, any lung or throat trouble." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

The Fuel of the Future.

Though the natural combustible gases are destined to speedy exhaustion, their effect on the economic methods of our civilization are certain to be enduring. The use of this new fuel has accustomed the public to a better method of bringing burnable material to the factories and dwellings than has been pursued since the dawn of civilization. It will certainly be a matter of surprise to the future historian of the economic science of our day that we have so long persisted in the practice of bringing crude fuel to our furnaces and domestic fireplaces, and have patiently endured the trials which smoke, dust, and ashes have imposed upon us. It is not to be expected that any of the thrifty cities which have enjoyed the advantages of rock gas will be willing to return to the ruder processes of firing which they have so long abandoned. Nor is it likely that other rival towns will be content to accept the deprivation of this good which their geologic conditions impose upon them, provided any economic method whereby artificial gas may be furnished them can be devised.

The invention of water gas seems to provide an art by which we may hope to supply a vaporous fuel at a cost which will little exceed the average tax laid upon consumers by the companies which pipe the rock gas to many of the Western towns. This form of fuel is produced by passing steam through large vessels containing incandescent carbon in the form of coke or anthracite coal. The result is a mixture principally composed of one atom of carbon and one of oxygen, known as carbonic oxide, together with hydrogen. The water of the steam is, in fact, decomposed, the oxygen combining with the carbon and the hydrogen remaining uncombined. When burnt at the point of use the carbonic oxide takes up from the air another atom of oxygen, forming carbonic dyoxide and the hydrogen also combines with oxygen forming water. These processes give rise to the evolution of a great heat. By enriching the gas with the vapor of petroleum or other hydo-carbons, the material may be made to afford an excellent light. Although only one-fourteenth of the weight of water gas is hydrogen, this element is extremely valuable in giving heat to the flame, for it yields caloric in burning in larger share than any other known substance.—The Arena.

"ERIN GO BRAGH."—From Mr. Charles de Kay's "Irish Kings and Brehons," an illustrated article in the Century, we quote as follows: "War-cries, meant originally to keep the fighting men aware of the place of their own clan in battle, or when scattered in woods and hills, came down to the baronial period, and were used by the Anglo-Norman nobles out of consideration for their Gaelic retainers. The commonest shout was some name of famous place or famous man with the addition aboo, a word well fitted for the clamor of a band of fighters, being at once more musical and less wearying to the voice than our 'hurrah.' The Kildare retainers cried 'Crom aboo!' in honor of Crom Castle, a citadel in Limerick County, originally a stronghold of the O'Donovans, which one of the intrusive Geraldine families, named after the town of Kildare, occupied while turning Irish. The O'Neils cried out, 'Lawv dareg aboo!' because the Lawv dareg, or Red Hand, was the badge of the family and clan. The O'Briens cried, 'Lawv Laider!' or 'Laudir aboo!' or 'Strong Hand Aboo!' The translator of Geoffrey Keating's 'History of Ireland' suggests as the meaning of aboo the Irish word booa, victory; but analogy would point rather to boa (beotha) lively, awake, spirited; when aboo would be an exclamation like the French alerte! and vive! A parallel in Irish is the well known Erin go bra! 'Erin till judgment day!' where go bra, forever, implies the same idea of living which the word beotha actually contains, since the latter is the Keltic equivalent or Greek bios. 'Yabu!' is the exclamation of Tartar horsemen when urging their steeds forward. While on this topic it may be interesting to note that this Irish word, or its Welsh equivalent yu byw, corrupted to boo and boh, is found in our colloquial expression, 'He doesn't dare say boo to a goose.'" is the power to eat, digest and assimilate a proper quantity of wholesome food. This can never be the case while impurities exist in the system. Sunday-School Lesson.

(Burbart and Simpson's Lesson Commentary, Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

LESSON XIII.—June 29.

TEMPERANCE LESSON.

Dan 1, 8-17.

TIME.—B. C. 606.

PLACE.—Babylon.

8. Daniel purposed—Daniel was tender. The three other youths shared in his purpose. This was neither bravado nor superstition, but conscientious loyalty to their covenant God. Defile himself—It was the custom to throw a small part of the viands and wine upon the hearth, as an initiatory offering to the gods, so as to consecrate to them the whole entertainment. To have partaken of such a feast would have been to sanction idolatry, and was forbidden even after the legal distinction of clean and unclean meats was done away. "Libations" were never taken from vegetables; they were not specially sacred to the gods, and hence might be used by pious Jews without any essential defilement of conscience. Daniel and his three friends stand out like an oasis in the desert. Requested—While decided in principle, we ought to proceed with gentleness.

9. God . . . brought Daniel into favor—The favor of others toward the godly is the doing of God.

10. I fear, etc.—The remark in ver. 9 that God had brought Daniel into the favor of the prince is by no means in conflict with the tenor of this reply. Worse liking—Looking less healthy. Properly sad, lowering, of a peevish appearance. Your sort—Of your age, or class; literally, circle. Endanger my head—An arbitrary Oriental despot would, in a fit of wrath at his orders having been disobeyed, command the offender to be instantly decapitated. Corporeal soundness and a handsome form were considered indispensable among the ancient Orientals for those who were destined for court service, a view which is still shared by the Turks.

11. Melzar—Rather, the steward, or chief butler, intrusted by Ashpenaz with furnishing the daily portion to the youths. The word is still in use in Persia.

12. Pulse—Vegetable food in general.

13-15. Illustrating Deut. viii. 3, "Man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord." And as thou seest, deal with thy servants—That is, according to the result of thy observations. Whether this consequence of their vegetable diet is to be regarded as something miraculous, or as a purely natural result, may be questioned. There is something extraordinary, indicative of supernatural co-operation, in the fact that at the end of three years the appearance of Daniel and his companions excelled that of all the other youths in fullness and beauty, and not less in the additional fact that they excelled these latter in point of intellectual qualities and scientific acquirements.

16. Better, and the steward (henceforth) took away their appointed food and wine.

17. As for these four children—Properly, And God gave . . . to these four, etc. God gave them knowledge—Exod. xxxi. 2, 3; 1. Kings iii, 12; Job xxxii, 8; Jas. i, 5. 17.—Daniel had understanding . . . dreams—God thus made one of the despised covenant people eclipse the Chaldean sages in the very science on which they most prided themselves. So Joseph in the court of Pharaoh. Daniel in the praises of his own "understanding" speaks not through vanity, but by the direction of God as one transported out of himself. In all learning and wisdom—As in ver. 4, literary knowledge, acquaintance with literature, erudition.

TEACHING HINTS.

1. Daniel's Surroundings. Note that (1) he was a young man; (2) far from his home; (3) among worshipers of idols; (4) in a corrupt and wicked court. All these are circumstances to lead many astray. How many men in strange cities fall into temptation to intemperance!

2. Daniel's Character. Notice the vow which Daniel made. This was not a mere whim or opinion, but it arose from religious conviction. See in it (1) His independence of popular opinion. (2) His decision of character. (3) His conscientiousness. (4) His faith in God. He was not ashamed to show his colors.

3. Daniel's Test. His character was tested by the requirement to partake of the royal food and drink; just as many a young man's character is tested when wine is set before him. How nobly he endured the trial! Daniel prepared another test, that of experience. "Prove thy servants." The test was made, and Daniel and his friends subsisted upon plainer food for ten days, while others lived on the king's meat and wine. So now let those who use strong drink be compared with those who abstain from it. Who have the better health? Who can do the more work? Who can endure the hardest privations? Stanley will have none but total abstainers for African exploration.

4. Daniel's Reward. (1) Physically, in the reward of his carefulness in food and drink, Daniel received health and strength. (2) Mentally, he found clearness of thought and intelligence. (3) Spiritually, he possessed knowledge in the things of God, as the result of communion with God.

Missionary.

Achievements of Missionaries.

Where would our knowledge of the multitudinous languages of the world be but for the missionary? In his luminous path through the forest, the swamp, and the desert, he leaves a trail of light; he sends home some precious text or vocabulary or grammar, revealing new forms of structure, new word-stores, new and wonderful combinations of the logic and symmetry of the savage man, that cause astonishment in the study and classroom of the German scholars.

The first text is the Bible. At the Congress of Orientalists at Vienna, in September, 1886, in a hall full of Roman Catholics, I presented to the Congress translations of the Bible, or of portions, in one hundred and four languages of Asia, Africa, America, and Oceanica, spoken by two hundred millions, and all prepared at the expense of the great Bible Societies. I told them what they were. My present was received with applause, and will be placed on the shelves of the library of the University of Vienna.

In my far-off Eton days the boys used to talk about some of our number becoming generals, or bishops, or senators, or judges; and such has proved to be the case. But the idea never rose in the minds of those ancient heroes, Dr. Goodall and Dr. Keate, of any Etonian being a missionary. It was beyond their conception that there was a higher walk—that some of the public schoolboys hereafter would be evangelists, pioneers of Christ, the conquerors of new kingdoms; and yet it has proved so. Men like Selwyn (father and son), Steere, Patterson, Mackenzie, Hannington, and many others, have been found ready to die, not only for their own people, but for the poor, benighted heathen. A new epoch of crusaders has been opened out. Knights-errant go forth in the panoply of faith, not to rescue the sepulchre of the Crucified, but to tell the nations of the risen Savior.

Some of your numbers may achieve greatness; may administer the affairs of great subject provinces, as in my youth I have done; or may be present in great battles, as I have been; but how can anything of this kind be weighed in the balance with the saving of souls? Some of our great governors have found a province a den of wild beasts, and left it a smiling garden. But over the grave of some missionaries it is recorded that, when they landed on a certain island, there were no Christians, and when they died there were no heathen; that when they landed the people were naked, savage, and illiterate, and when they died they had the whole or portions of the Bible translated into their language—and with such skill that no single lonn-word was required to represent a new idea, as the unbounded wealth of combination of vocables was equal to every requirement; and, moreover, these translations were printed by reformed cannibals, or children of cannibals, in the Mission Press, and used in the mission schools.—Dr. Cust's Address in Balliol College, Oxford.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.—Sixty-one Women's Foreign Missionary Societies are recorded as now at work on the "wide field." Thirteen of them were in Great Britain last year, with an income in 1889 of $234,000, and nine were in Canada, with an income of $84,267. In the United States there were 39 organized societies of women, with 25,000 auxiliaries, and 8,000 children's bands. There were half a million members of the auxiliaries and 200,000 of the bands. The total receipts of these societies in 1889 were $1,731,083; from the beginning of work from the Women's Boards, $10,000,000. These societies report in the aggregate 1,200 missionaries; 2,500 native Bible women, teachers and other helpers, and have under charge 2,500 schools of various grades, with 60,000 pupils.—Christian Union.

GETTING AT PEOPLE.—People are easily accessible if you have any kind of enrichment to communicate of which they are not possessed. Two lakes lying at the same level will perhaps not exchange their waters, but Erie has no difficulty in getting into Ontario. Getting at people involves ingenuity, but ingenuity of the heart rather than of the intelligence. Love will always find a way; love will always find the door. You can not save a man until you are able to meet his case by having learned to see things as he sees them, and to feel things as he feels them—that is, you have got to be yourself perfectly, and you have got to be, be perfectly, and the two so integrally that he is not going to be able to tell where one leaves off and the other begins. Condescension is fatal. You have got to be the man that you save—saved and savior in one unscarred experience—just as the Savior was man, and, therefore, could put his arm around man without stooping, and was God, and could, therefore, lift man without faltering. And when we get into that kind of relation, God in us, and we in touch with man, the circuit complete, there is almost nothing we can not do. It costs—it costs us ourselves; there is a good deal of Calvary about it. There always is in redemption. It may not always prove effectual, and we are not responsible for people's being saved—we are responsible for their having ample opportunity to be saved; and I had rather take the chances of an atheist before the judgment bar of Christ than take the chances of a "saved" man who does not make it part of the business of his life to be a savior.—C. H. Parkhurst.

A Few Words on Indigestion.

It is not our intention to give the history of the Canadian, Alexis St. Martin, to whom a shot through the stomach brought fame, nor to tell you how long it takes to digest Strassburg pie or sourkrout. No doubt you know by experience. It has been well said: "Some men never seem to know they have a stomach." However, we do not write for this fortunate class.

The celebrated Purdon thoroughly "digested" the Laws of Pennsylvania. But there are few Purdons. The old Romans do not seem to have suffered from indigestion. The gastronomic feasts of our Teutonic fore-fathers are almost incredible, and we read the accounts of "Homeric Banquets" with a feeling approaching to incredulity.

Our manner of life has impaired our digestive powers. We do not spend enough time in the open air; we rise early and retire late to rest. We bolt our food, and do not rest afterward. To those and other incidents of a high degree of civilization is to be traced one of our most common maladies, Dyspepsia. We shall not attempt to portray the mental or bodily condition of its victims. We shall simply point out a way of escape, and refer you to a work, giving a full account of many cures, with abundant testimonials, which you can verify by writing to the patients themselves.

Write for our Treatise on Compound Oxygen. It is a carefully written medical work, giving the mode of action, nature, results, and, in short, a full account of this great vitalizing agent. in all departments, and every grade of goods, from the cheapest to the most expensive, in endless variety. I have all the latest and most fashionable designs, and, as I have only purchased from factories whose goods I have been selling for the past six years, can and do guarantee every piece of Furniture that leaves my establishment.

LOW PRICES

are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.

A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and whether you wish to pay $40 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs.

I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.

I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Senator Gibson, of Louisiana, made a good fight for the River and Harbor Bill in the Commerce Committee on June 12. The restriction against levee building by the Commission was stricken out, and the appropriation increased from $1,000,000 to $3,500,000.

A delegation from the tenth ward, this city, called on Representative Borland and requested him to vote for the Lottery or resign. He declined to do either, claiming the right to exercise his own judgment in the matter.

The total amount appropriated by the National House of Representatives for pensions is $160,419,731.

The ninth annual convention of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor met in St. Louis last week, about five thousand delegates being reported as present.

The completion of the twenty-fifth academic year of Vassar College was celebrated on June 12 with appropriate ceremonies. Geo. W. Curtis delivered the address.

The Conference Committee of Congress having charge of the bill for a public building at Alexandria, La., will report in favor of an appropriation of $60,000, this being a compromise between the amount allowed by the Senate and the House.

Terrific storms and floods visited Illinois on June 13. Rockford and adjoining county are under water.

The International Typographical Convention, which was held in Atlanta, Ga., adjourned on June 14. A law was passed prohibiting regular compositors from holding cases more than six days in any week.

The U. S. Senate adopted a bill, on June 15, making all army promotions by seniority.

A serious accident occurred at Brierly Park, Mass., on June 15. At least 5,000 people had assembled to see a man jump from a cable stretched across a miniature lake. As he struck the water hundreds of people on a rustic bridge made a rush for the place, and the structure fell with a crash. About twenty-five persons were seriously hurt.

At the Republican county convention held in Nashville, Tenn., on June 14, to select delegates to the gubernatorial convention in July, resolutions indorsing President Harrison's administration were voted down. Half a dozen counties in the State have refused to indorse the administration.

In an explosion of fire damp in the Hill Farm Mine, Fayette county, Pa., on June 16, thirty-two miners were killed outright or suffocated.

Representative Butterworth, of Ohio, has presented in the House a resolution providing for the meeting of the House of Representatives on July 4, at 11 o'clock, and for the setting apart of the day for celebration by suitable exercises of the adoption and promulgation of the Declaration of Independence. It also provides for the presence and participation of the Senate in the exercises.

FOREIGN.

A serious riot occurred at Barmen, Rhenish Prussia, on June 13, owing to the entry into the city of a band of salvationists, in spite of the strict prohibitory regulations against salvation army meetings. As the visitors attempted to march through the streets they were set upon by a large crowd armed with sticks and stones, which they used freely.

The excommunication of ex-President Garcia, of Mexico, by Archbishop La Bastides, because of the former insisting that the masses of the people there do not profess the true Roman Catholic religion and are idolatrous, causes considerable excitement.

Field Marshal Baron Bauer, minister of war of Austria, says that the peace of Europe is not secure, and that therefore a considerable increase in the army is necessary. The cost of such increase would amount to from 80,000,000 to 100,000,000 florins.

The first Canadian Woman's Rights Convention opened in Toronto, Ont., on June 12. Reports which were presented showed fair progress in the cause.

It is said that France is about to recognize the provisional government of Brazil, and that the minister of foreign affairs has intimated to the Brazilian representative that President Carnot is willing to received him.

The Congregationalists of London are preparing to erect magnificent buildings in East London, in which will be established a university for the education of the poor exclusively.

Negotiations for the settlement of the Bulgarian question are to be renewed. The movement was initiated at St. Petersburg. The Russian government persists in refusing to recognize Prince Ferdinand, but offers to recognize Mr. Stambouleff, the Bulgarian premier.

It is expected that Chancellor Caprivi will accompany the Emperor of Germany on his visit to the Czar. Such a movement will convert the meeting of the sovereigns from an exchange of imperial courtesies into a diplomatic event.

Premier Crispi recently declared that Italy's relations with both Franco and Russia had become cordial, and that the epoch of European difficulties had passed and a long period of peace was guaranteed.

There were nine deaths from cholera in Puebla de Rugat, Spain, on Saturday. Seven fresh cases are reported. Two-thirds of the inhabitants have fled from the towns.

The Egalite, a Paris newspaper, made severe comment upon a recent movement of the local anarchists, and in revenge thirty of them made an attack upon the office of the journal and demolished everything in sight.

Henry M. Stanley has been tendered and has accepted the governor-generalship of the Congo Free State. He will not enter upon his duties until the beginning of 1891, unless he should be called upon to assume them earlier by King Leopold.

For restoring the color, thickening the growth, and beautifying the hair, and for preventing baldness, Hall's Hair Renewer is unsurpassed.

All contributions and communications intended for the Transit and Building Fund Society of Bishop William Taylor's Self-Supporting Missions, should be sent to Richard Grant, treasurer, 181 Hudson St., New York.

The advice with each bottle of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment is worth many times the cost.

It is well known among successful merchants that liberal advertising is indispensable to the economical and successful working of their establishments.—Price Current.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

ROBERT HANDLE, P. E.

Ball players and athletes need Johnson's Anodyne Liniment for bruises, lameness and cuts.

Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, of New York, says: "The way to fill the pews is first to fill the pulpit."

The only reliable vegetable substitute for calomel, which acts on the liver, blood, kidneys and stomach, and best anti-bilious purgative, is Maguire's Cuudurango. Endorsed by Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia; Rev. McNally, of St. Louis, and a host of prominent people.

Monteagle Assembly and Summer Schools.

EIGHTH ANNUAL SESSION, JULY 1 to AUGUST 15, 1890.

Assembly Park open to Summer Residents from June 1.

MONTEAGLE, TENN., widely known as the "Southern Chautauqua," is on a mountain plateau or spur of the lower Cumberlands, reached by mountain railway, one hour from Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis R. R. at Cowan, Tenn.

Rising 2,000 feet above the sea level, dry, pure air, no malaria, no mosquitos, magnificent scenery and abundance of pure spring water, it is the great natural sanitarium of the Southwest.

With 100 acres of picturesque, wooded heights enclosed; with improved water-works, sewerage, daily mails, telegraph, public buildings, and near 100 cottages; with the annual Assembly Platform and Summer Schools, affording a continual feast, it is a quiet "lodge in the wilderness," having all the world within call.

Parties desiring cottages for the summer should make early application.

For full particulars as to rates, advantages, etc., or any information desired, address.

Mansfield Female College
Conservatory of Music and Art,
MANSFIELD, LA.
One of the most popular and flourishing institutions of the South. The Sixty-sixth Session opened September 11, 1889, and the Spring Term begins February 1, 1890, with an able and experienced faculty. Curriculum comprehensive, instruction thorough. Advantages in Music unsurpassed, as in the best conservatories. The pianos are new and of the best make. The Technicon and the Technichone are used to facilitate the work in the music department, placing this deparment beyond competition. Departments of Fine Arts and Industrial Arts under specialists.
The location is unsurpassed for beauty and attractiveness, and the school is celebrated for the remarkable record for good health maintained. The climate is the best in which to educate, and the place is the safest for girls. The main building is of brick, massive and commodious, with a large and well-shaded campus. Rooms large, well furnished, warmed and ventilated. Ample provision for the table of the best the market affords. All necessary comfort secured. Expenses very low and the school very economical. A new building with a large audience hall is in contemplation, and extensive improvements are in progress to make this the grandest institution in the State.

THE PARTED SPIRIT.

Mysterious in its birth,
And viewless as the blast,
Where hath the spirit fled from earth?
Forever past.

I ask the grave below—
It keeps the secret well;
call upon the heavens to show—
They will not tell.

From earth's remotest strand
All tales and tidings known;
But from the spirit's distant land
Returneth none.

Winds wait the breath of flowers
To wanderers o'er the wave;
But no message from the bowers
Beyond the grave.

Proud science scales the skies,
From star to star to roam;
But reaches not the shore where lies
The spirit's home.

Impervious shadows hide
This mystery of heaven;
But where all knowledge is denied
To hope is given.

Corrupting the Word.

BY REV. S. S. KEENER.

The awful responsibility of the ministry of the Word of God was never more impressed upon Paul's heart and mind than when he said, "For we are not as many, who corrupt the Word of God." He had seen those who handled the Word for gain; those who mixed it with so much error that the genuine and the impure could not be separated. In those days the Judaizers and seekers after Greek wisdom, the asserters of license for liberty and laxity of moral life, were numerous; and to support their doctrines, the Word was corrupted and warped from its original meaning. Handling the Word of God deceitfully was one of the first evidences of the devil in the church of God, and the ages have seen merely a repetition of this artful and very powerful way to neutralize, if not abolish, the power of the Word, namely: to have a corrupt Word emanate from the pulpit. The barest and baldest methods were used in the earlier ages of corrupting the Word and handling it with insincerity; but, though more subtle and refined, the corrupting of the Word of these latter days is just as effective in ruining and wrecking men for eternity. While it may not be for gain, as in ancient times, it is for self, ultimately. When the ministry adulterate the truth, either by only declaring a part of it, or by toning it down, or by false interpretation to suit sects, schisms, or denominations, it is corrupting the Word of God, and will end in the shipwreck of souls for eternity. For any man professing the call of God to the ministry to tone down the great cardinal doctrines of repentance, faith, salvation, and make them so simple and easy of accomplishment that there is no soul-struggle or heart-agony or deep moving, stirrings to the depths of a man's being, is the most vicious corrupting of the Word. It ends in ruin to the congregation; it is building up the hopes of a congregation upon a foundation of straw or wood. It takes no less power to regenerate a soul through the blood of Jesus now than it did when the jailer was saved, and it takes just as deep repentance, and just as thorough a change, now as then. To teach that a man only has to turn around and go to heaven by stop going to hell, is to simplify until the whole statement of conviction, repentance and salvation becomes nothing. The supernatural is lost in this species of corrupting the Word. There is a certain religiousness, perfunctory in character, which is barren of spiritual power. This is the legitimate outcome of a ministry that is adulterating the Word of God. There is a religious interpretation of a text that you might call legitimate; but the spiritual thought, the power of the Word, seems never to have dawned upon the preacher. The Word may produce morality in the listener, a religious feeling; but there is no spiritual energy and Holy Ghost power. This species of using truth so that it is shorn of its power, is as certainly corrupting the Word as the one of old, who did it for gain or for license to sin. Then there is the corrupting the Word like the huckster of wine, who gave the color and quantity of wine, but not the strong and pure vintage. So with many people—they call for a gospel which has the semblance of religion, pure and undefiled; but it is without Holy Ghost power. They are all babes; they want milk, and diluted milk at that. "Now, my brother," they will say to you, "draw it mild to-day." "Our people don't like such strong and plain talk." It must be very thin gruel, not conviction, which makes a soul feel as if he was on the verge of hell; "but an acknowledgment that you are not what you ought to have been, and you will try to be better than you are." The lust for praise makes many a minister corrupt the Word by omission, or leaving unsaid the strongest and most pungent truth suggested to his mind by the Holy Spirit; and he preaches but half-truths, and when these half-truths are full of strength in moving men, how awful that this man has lost half the power he should have wielded! Some congregations are always crying for this adulterated, weak gospel, and pastors truckle and acquiesce in this demand until the congregation becomes a mass of religio-moralists that have had no spiritual power or life for years and years.

"Corrupting the Word" is deadly in its effect on the minister as well as the people, for he feeds on the same nutriment that week after week he sets before his audience. His life is leaner than that of the people, if possible. He is eating the husks, and throws aside the corn to secure the husks. If he seeks popularity, the praise of men, and is thus preaching a minified truth, an adulterated gospel, a partial fact, an easy access to religion, after awhile these great realities will dawn upon his soul and fill him with remorse and deepest humiliation. A man who preaches only as in the presence of his audience is sure to corrupt the Word; but the man who preaches as only in the presence of God will surely declare the whole counsel of God. Such a man may be very bunglesome, awkward, uncouth, but everyone will feel this one surely is a prophet of the Lord, while, on the other hand, the corrupter of the Word may be refined, brilliant, a perfect orator, a finished scholar, an exact logician, complete in tone, gesture and sentence; but all in vain, the spiritual power is lacking and the Word is not in demonstration of the Spirit.

The audience should be banished from the speaker's heart and mind both in the preparation and delivery of a sermon, if the "truth as it is in Jesus" is sought after. Strong, vigorous, and the spiritual treatment of a text can only be by the guidance of the Spirit. The minister is "as clay in the hands of the potter." So his mind is under the leading of the Holy Ghost. "Corrupting the Word" may then come from the mere mental treatment of a text; taking a truth, like a study in literature, and running it through your mind. The mind alone never finds the spiritual cost of a truth, nor does it attain that strange spiritual energy or power in a sentence of the divine Word, for our hearts and living souls are to be strangely instrumental in getting to the utmost true depths of a great spiritual truth. Mental analysis is very fine, but for true power like a sweeping avalanche, by which the heavenly thoughts are revealed to a soul, the greater truths of the gospel come through soul and heart by the influence of the Holy Spirit. If your mind gets hold of the Word that is splendid, best wait. Stay by the altar, brother; your heart and soul must also be permeated by the Word before you can give it to the people strong, vigorous, that breaks down all opposition, till all the hearts shall feel "the Lord has spoken to us by his servant this day." But of all the dead, insipid, unimpressive and fruitless sermons, one of these mental exegesis or brain analysis of a text surpasses them all. It's a skeleton of power as well as of thought; and the minister feels more spiritless, flatter, more insipid than the poor audience which have not felt a shadow of life pass over them; their hearts have not been moved, and their souls have not felt a single quickening impulse. Is that Word the power of God? Is it sharper than a two-edged sword? Does it accomplish that whereunto it was sent? The man has corrupted it till it is blunt, dull, lifeless, powerless, spiritless. The poor preacher goes forth, crying from the depths of his soul, "O Lord, forgive; have mercy on me."

But for the exact thought, the true meaning of the text, who can solve it, who discern it, who unfold it? "For these things who is sufficient?" Brother, "our sufficiency is of God," for the Holy Spirit shall show you the truth; he will lead you into the truth; he will declare to you the hidden things. Call upon him, and he will induct you into the truthful and glorious till your mind, soul and heart are full of the glories of the Word.

District High Schools.

BY REV. H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN.

When about to begin Kavanaugh College, six years ago, I had a conversation on the matter with that princely layman, W. H. Foster, of New Orleans, who urged me not to start a college, but a high school, where boys and girls should be prepared for college. I then thought, as I now think, and as all educators engaged in college work must think, that this is the one missing link in our educational system, the demand for which grows more and more imperative every year. If this missing link between the primary schools, public and private, and our colleges could be supplied, there would exist at once a harmonious correlation of our educational work, which would foster and encourage the primary schools on the one hand, and feed our colleges and normal schools on the other, with a larger and better patronage. This proposition is too patent to need proving. If each district in Louisiana and Mississippi had its high school, co-educational, or one each for the sexes, well equipped and properly managed, there would begin at once an educational revival more thorough and widespread than the building of three such colleges as the grand Millsaps promises to be could possibly produce; and the benefits that would accrue to Methodism can not be estimated. Whitworth and Millsaps, Mansfield and Centenary, and all the other colleges would feel the upward impulse of such a movement; and the pastors on the circuits and in the stations would soon find their work more fruitful because of the more cultured Christianity of the church membership.

The church must educate. Intellect and soul, thought and feeling, education and religion are, by nature, so intimately related that education becomes as much the work of the church as evangelization itself; indeed, evangelization is very largely educational. "Go teach all nations" is one form of our great commission. It is not the province of the State to educate; but in a republic where the voter is the ruler, the voter must be educated, or the State will be misruled; and when the church fails to do her work, the State, in sheer self-defense, must become an educator. While a State school is as incongruous as a State church, we are compelled not merely to acquiesce in the system, but to foster and encourage it, because the church has not and will not provide ample facilities for the education of the masses. The general policy of State education, as expressed in our public school system, is to confine its work to primary schools, leaving the high schools and colleges, in the main, to be conducted by the church. The church having fallen short of her duty even in this higher and easier work, many of our States are establishing colleges and universities of various grades and kinds. Mississippi already has no less than four. State schools must, of necessity, be undenominational; and in the effort to be so, the tendency is to become not only unreligious, but positively irreligious. No greater calamity can come to any people than a system of godless education. But public primary schools, however undenominational they may be, are perfectly safe, so long as they are taught by Christian men and women trained in our church colleges. Our college work, therefore, must be done by the church. Now, then, the gap between the public school, or primary private school, and the college is a very wide one, and must be bridged by the high school. Who is to furnish these high schools? Some of our towns and cities are establishing such; but they are hardly ever in anywise correlated to the college, aiming rather to fit the pupil, by a sort of near route, for some calling in life; so that he may go directly from the high school into business, or to some professional school. Such high schools do not at all bridge this chasm. The church must establish these schools, or the church colleges—hence the church itself—must suffer for want of them.

Why has not the church established such schools? She has done so; quite a number have been started in Mississippi, but I do not know of a single one which survived so long as half a dozen consecutive years. The Winona district had one at Lexington eight years ago, but it lives only in sad memories to-day; Jackson district boasted of one three years ago at Benton, where only a monumental failure now stands; and the Seashore district, nothing daunted, embarked in the good work at Hattiesburg a few years ago; but if it lives at all, it must be so deeply in articulo mortis as to be speechless, for we have heard nothing from it for more than a year. So when my friend Foster said, "Start a high school, not a college," much as I prized his judgment, I demurred, and, starting a college rather than a high school, have saved myself the humiliation and expense of a failure.

How is it that every attempt yet made by the church to establish such schools—so much needed, so much demanded, and whose very existence promises so much—has resulted in failure? This is the one educational problem before the church. To say that they were mismanaged is no satisfactory solution, for how could it happen that the fatality of mismanagement should cling exclusively to high schools, leaving our colleges almost entirely exempt? The real solution is found in the fact that every college, and many of the universities, have preparatory departments, where pupils are fitted for the college classes, into which they pass directly without change of locality, and often without examination. A prominent university, whose catalogue is before me, teaches reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, and History of the United States—does the work of a primary public school; and many of our children are learning the alphabet at college. Now, if Bro. A. has a son and a daughter to educate, having given them, possibly, their primary training at his little neighborhood school, he does not care to send them to some district high school to get them ready for college, for such a school, under our present system, can promise him nothing more than he can get as easily and as cheaply at the college itself; and such a school may not be at all correlated to the college curriculum; so he sends his girl to be prepared for Whitworth in Whitworth, and his boy is fitted for Centenary at Centenary; and what Bro. A. does the other fathers and mothers in the church do; and so the district high school must depend upon its own immediate locality for its patronage, and becomes not a district, but barely a circuit high school, and finally dies of starvation. Does some one suggest that the matter would be mended if the high school were properly correlated in its curriculum to the college? I answer, Possibly—but to which college must it conform? No two of them have the same curriculum; and, indeed, some of them have but a little higher curriculum than the high school should have.

It may be suggested that it would be better to let the matter continue as it is. I think not.

1. Because such high schools would reach and benefit a large number of pupils who will not be able to go to college, and who could hardly be induced to seek in the halls of a college the limited amount of education they hope to obtain; and many of these, after having completed the high school course, would be encouraged to attend college, who otherwise would go almost entirely uneducated. I have had some very positive experiences along this line, which have been very instructive.

2. As Bishops, editors, college presidents, and even presiding elders, sometimes make rather poor pastors, and would make still poorer stewards and Sunday-school superintendents, so college professors and presidents, whose thoughts are mainly concerned with the ologies and atics of a genuine college curriculum, make very poor teachers of geography, elementary arithmetic and grammar, hic, hæc, hoc, Xenophon and Cæsar. I have had some very positive experiences along this line also. I readily grant that it takes a first-class teacher to successfully do preparatory work; but, however proficient one may be, it is hard to teach logic and geography on the same day with the same enthusiasm; and teaching without enthusiasm is a body without a soul.

3. These preparatory departments, as a matter of fact, do not generally pay their own legitimate expenses. College presidents look upon them somewhat as a necessary evil.

4. The forced association of "preps," as they are almost contemptuously called, with the collegiates, especially in cases where the "prep" is older than the collegiate, is both humiliating and demoralizing upon the former, and very often drives him home.

Beyond all question, we need the district high school. The college needs it, the primary school needs it, the Christian home needs it, the church sadly needs it. How are we going to get it? When our universities confine themselves to university work, and our colleges to college work, the necessity for the high school will be so intensified, and made so manifest, that they will at once begin to exist, the very demand for them calling them into being.

The Mother of Surday-Schools in the South.

BY R. ABBEY, D. D.

In 1826 there was not a Sunday-school in Mississippi; nor, so far as I know, was there one nearer than Philadelphia, or, perhaps, some few in Virginia and South Carolina. The American Sunday-school Union was the union of three Sunday-school Societies in New York and Philadelphia in 1824.

Mrs. Eliza Little, of Natchez, in those days was the wife of Mr. Peter Little, one of the wealthy men of those wealthy times. He was a liberal man with his money, leaving all household and church finances to his wife, who knew so well how to manage them. She was a Methodist, and in her still, quiet, and very noiseless way, did the doing part of many sensible and financial things about the Methodist Church in those early times, best known to those who then lived there.

How she got the idea of a Sunday-school I do not know. All I do know is that she made one out of raw material, and without a model. She visited the families in town, and, with the assistance of a few other ladies, gathered up children, particularly the poor, and formed the school. On Sunday morning her carriage, with her faithful driver, sometimes with herself, would go through the city gathering up children and teachers.

About the first that I remember about it is, that she told me: "Now, you be sure to be at the church promptly at nine o'clock, for you must teach a class." She asked nobody, only gave directions; but her cheerful, smiling, winning ways were so pleasant that we were all glad to do her bidding. She brought her own books, arranged her classes, and appointed her teachers to suit herself. And then frequently she would have a considerable portion, or all, of her teachers at evening entertainments at her house, where her large, elegant parlors were well filled with young folks and music and nice things.

It is wonderful, as I look back from later years upon those times, including the latter years of the twenties and the early thirties, to see what I did not see at the time: how that elegant and pious woman ruled, as with a rod of iron, a large, but select portion of the young men and grown, or nearly grown, girls of that city. While hers was a rod of iron, the iron was not seen, nor was its rigidity felt, for it was always covered with the softest velvet, and tinseled with the most beautiful flowers. She was herself a model of exquisite taste, and exact neatness in person and dress—no rich ornaments, but as precise in selection as the fringes of a pink. In social manners she carried the unapproachable dignity of a queen; precise in address, lofty in decorum, and yet the familiar patron-friend of scores of young people, and a recognized leader in religious society in Natchez for many years. She died, if I am not mistaken, in 1855.

How long Mrs. Little's school continued before the church took formal control of it, I do not remember. I was one of her teachers several years, but how long is not remembered. I left Natchez early in 1840.

Such was the humble beginning of Sunday-school enterprise in this country. We now have, in our church alone, over four hundred schools and more than sixteen thousand scholars in one-half of Mississippi. And we have, as yet, made but a beginning.

A THING OF BEAUTY IS A JOY FOREVER.

BY JOHN KEATS.

A thing of beauty is a joy forever:
Its loveliness increases, it will never Pass into nothingness; but still will keep
A bower quiet for us, and a sleep
Full of sweet dreams, and health, and quiet breathing.
Therefore, on every morrow, are we wreathing
A flowery band to bind us to the earth,
Spite of despondence, of the inhuman dearth
Of noble natures, of the gloomy days,
Of all the unhealthy and o'er-darkened ways
Made for our searching: Yes, in spite of all,
Some shape of beauty moves away the pall
From our dark spirits. Such the sun, the moon,
Trees old and young, sprouting a shady boon
For simple sheep; and such are daffodils
With the green world they live in; and clear rills
That for themselves a cooling covert make
'Gainst the hot season; the mid-forest brake,
Rich with a sprinkling of fair musk rose blooms:
And such, too, is the grandeur of the dooms
We have imagined for the mighty dead;
Or lovely tales that we have heard or read;
An endless fountain of immortal drink,
Pouring unto us from the heaven's brink.

In Memoriam.

We are remiaded by the recent departure of our beloved and lamented Sister Booth that "God's children are gathering home."

Sister Helena Booth was born January 3, 1826; married March 10, 1851, and passed out of the body to the spirit world, April 22, 1890.

At the age of ten years she was brought to New Orleans by her parents, who settled here in 1836. When a child she was a member of the Poydras Street Church Sunday-school, and formally connected herself with the people of God, worshiping in that church in the year 1837. Subsequently, the family moving up town, she joined what was then considered suburban mission churches, one on Magazine near Robia, and another on Dryades street, near the site of the Dryades Street Market; but on the consolidation of these enterprises into the Elijah Steele Church, on the corner of Chestnut and Felicity road, in the (then) city of Lafayette, she had her name put on the register of this charge, where it continued until her removal from the church militant to the church triumphant.

H. N. McTyeire, of honored memory, afterwards senior Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was the useful and beloved pastor. In this charge she was for more than a score of years a faithful, intelligent and diligent Sunday-school teacher. She was from early youth an indefatigable Bible student, and omniverous reader and collater of books and articles helping to a better understanding of the Holy Scriptures. She sat for long years as a disciple at the feet of Bro. William Sherry, of precious memory, which was of itself a biblical education. She was a constant, careful and appreciative "hearer of the Word," as all of her old pastors—McTyeire, Parker, Keener, Walker and Carter—could testify. As a reader and subscriber to our NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, she ranked high, being a subscriber from the first number, and a constant reader until she read no more.

She was a patient co-laborer in numerous charitable enterprises. Modest, faithful, shunning notice or mention, only anxious to please the Master, and shout forth his praise, and hoping to hear him say, "She hath done what she could."

One of her pastors writes thus: "How well I remember her testimonies in class! Her words were always full of confidence in God. She had implicit trust in her heavenly Father. She was one of the true and helpful women of Old Felicity. I can remember her kindness to me when I was a little boy; but it required the more matured years of manhood to properly appreciate her womanly and Christian character."

Once, in speaking about her own dear boys, she said she "had faith to believe they would all become followers of Christ." Surely a religion so highly commended to their reverence and love by their sainted mother's lifelong consistency in showing forth "the beauty of holiness," can not be too early espoused and championed by each one of them. To meet such a mother among the glorified should be felt to be a grand incentive.

Another minister, also once a Sunday-school scholar at Felicity, writes: "I can never forget one who had so much to do in moulding my life and opinions. I treasure the memory of Sister Booth's sweet and gentle face; how kind she was to the young people. I remember when Bro. Walker was pastor he announced a six o'clock Sunday morning prayer meeting. At that meeting, assembled for prayer, was the pleasant presence of Sister Booth, and I have never forgotten the delightful hours spent in these prayer meetings. It is said among the old Moravians, when God called one of his saints to come up higher they blew a trumpet and three times shouted, 'Victory.' So in such an experience we can rejoice, and say, 'The Lord has given and taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.' I expect to meet Sister Booth with many of the honored and saved who have gone to their heavenly home."

The compiler of these facts and statements long knew and profoundly venerated the Christian character of Sister Booth, as she so beautifully let her light softly and gently shine in all the varied and responsible relations of life. She was brave, without boasting; diligent, without complaining; firm, without obstinacy; and gentle, without weakness, and modest, without fear. Her memory is as ointment poured forth, and leaves a long perfume.

As wife, mother and friend, life was pleasant for her to live, and nature would have said, "It is good to be here;" but resignation, faith and immortal hope said, "it is far better to depart and be forever with the Lord."

The angels escorted Lazarus to Abraham's bosom, and dying saints are sometimes permitted to see heavenly visions and listen to celestial songs, singing, "Sister spirit, come away." The dimming veil of flesh hides the vision, and the dullness of our ears hushes the song into silence to us; but for the dying the veil is often lifted to their vision and the angelic song is audible to them.

It was the writer's privilege to see Sister Booth sink to rest in the Savior's arms as calmly as a babe pillows its head on the soft breast from which it draws the juice of life. Nothing could have been more fitting her quiet and gentle life than its calm and peaceful close. She, indeed, "drew the drapery of her couch about her, and lay down to pleasant dreams." The Christian's anchor enters into the heavenly vail and is fastened to the everlasting mercy-seat; it "holds;" he outrides the storm; the voyage ends in the haven of endless rest. What godless atheist shall say, "Death is a leap into the dark, an eternal sleep"? No, no! It is but the awaking into the newness of endless and blessed life. In the darkness the "Light of men" shines upon us, and a voice divine breaks the silence, "I am the resurrection and the life." And, again, the inspiring Spirit says, "Write, Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; they rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

Our Church Law about Amusements.

The following paper, reported by a special committee of fifteen on "the Spiritual State of the Church," and adopted by our General Conference, is not only the "deliverance" of that body on the subject of worldliness, but is the law on that subject, at least, until the next General Conference. Let every Methodist read this paper, and then abide by it.

To the Ministers and Members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South—

BRETHREN: The General Conference of 1890 is sorrowfully constrained to believe that the description of the spiritual state of the church employed by the Bishops in their pastoral address of 1874, and republished by order of the General Conference of 1882, is, in a large measure, true of the church now as then. After reviewing the causes of devout gratitude to Almighty God for his signal mercies vouchsafed to our Zion, the Bishops add: "In this gratifying review, however, we find nothing to flatter our pride, but much to foster our humility, to awaken sentiments of repentance, and to cherish purposes of amendment. Our piety, our self-sacrifice, our Christian enterprise, have not been equal to our growth, much less to our standards, and to our time-honored ecclesiastical landmarks. Fundamentally correct in our views of scriptural truth, and, in the main, commendably consistent in our conduct, we have departed, in some instances, from the simplicity of the gospel as we first received it. An inordinate love of the world, in the forms of wealth, of fashion, and of amusement, has largely diffused itself amongst our people and corrupted their spiritual integrity. The peculiar institutions and usages of Methodism have been frequently neglected or abandoned, and a relaxation of wholesome discipline has diminished our strength and impaired our testimony against the vices of the age in which we live. To these tendencies, to which we are perpetually exposed by the pressure of the world, the flesh and the devil, and to these actual departures from 'the old paths,' we call your prayerful attention."

At a later point of the address, to which are attached the signatures of the sainted Paine, Pierce, Kavanaugh, Wightman, Marvin, Doggett and McTyeire, and our present senior Bishop, occurs this still more explicit and emphatic statement:

"An explicit utterance was given by order of the last General Conference in our pastoral addresses on the subject of 'Worldly Amusements.' We now repeat that utterance. We abate none of its teachings with respect either to the manifold inconsistency of such indulgences with the spirit and profession of the gospel, or the peril which they bring to the souls of men. Their multiplied and insidious forms are a source of perpetual temptation and danger, and are denounced by the Word of God, and by that part of our General Rules which forbids 'the taking of such diversions as can not be taken in the name of the Lord Jesus.' This denunciation is explicit and comprehensive, and 'the name of the Lord Jesus' in this connection is a decisive test; and we are content to leave the issue to its sovereign arbitrament. Amongst these indulgences which can not stand this solemn test is the modern dance, both in its private and in its public exhibition, as utterly opposed to the genius of Christianity as taught by us. When persisted in, it is a justifiable ground of action by the church authorities."

In this same condemnation, as equally contrary to the Scriptures, which declare that "the friendship of the world is enmity against God," to our General Rules and to the vows which our members have voluntarily assumed, this General Conference would include card-playing, theatre-going, attendance upon race-courses, circuses, and the like. These offenses are, likewise, justifiable grounds of discipline.

What is the remedy? Our appeal is, first of all, to the government of the family, which, in the nature of the case, is the most efficient ally of the church. Fathers and mothers, by both precept and example, can do much to restrain the young people of the church from the commoner forms of worldliness. "It can not be disguised," say the Bishops, in the address already quoted, "that family religion has been sadly neglected in many of the households of our people. Our own observations confirm the too general complaint on this subject. The duty of offering the morning and evening sacrifice of prayer and praise upon the family altar has not only the sanction of scriptural authority, of the constitution of the domestic relation, and of the practice of the Christian Church in all ages, but it has been universally recognized and enjoined by the Methodist economy as an indispensable exponent of consecration to God and a rich and influential means of grace. It is hallowing in its effects upon parents, children and servants—enduring in its results—and it transmits to posterity, by the agency of the family organization, a legacy of the faith and the habits and the associations of genuine piety; it transforms the household into a church, replete with blessings, and capable of infinite successions."

We greatly deplore the danger that comes to the purity and power of our blessed church from such worldly practices among our members as are named and described above.

As a further remedy, we urge our pastors to give all diligence in warning our people against the dangers of every form of worldliness, and to execute with love and fidelity the requirements of the Discipline in all cases of violation of our General Rules. "The mild, but firm administration of discipline," say the Bishops, "is an integral and spiritual part of our economy. The purity and integrity of the body of Christ must be preserved at all hazards, so that neither heresy in doctrine nor corruptness in life be tolerable for a moment, lest they increase into more ungodliness. There is a growing tendency in this direction, and we take the liberty of speaking a seasonable word on this behalf. Our legislation is sufficient on this subject. It only remains that its processes be faithfully followed according to the provisions of our Discipline by those entrusted with its execution. A solemn responsibility rests upon the respective authorities of the church to see that its sanctity be fully maintained."

This General Conference unreservedly adopts this utterance of the Bishops as its own, and most earnestly invites the attention of all our ministers and members to every regulation of our Discipline. Methodism has won evangelical Christendom to her way of thinking concerning the incompatibility of the spirit of this world with vital godliness. Faithfulness at this juncture, on the part of preachers and people, will secure a proximate universality of the old-time simplicity and purity, and, with these, of the old-time power. What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? "What communion hath light with darkness? What concord hath Christ with Belial? What agreement hath the temple of God with idols? Ye are the temple of the living God." "Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

From the Work.

LIVINGSTON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The second Quarterly Conference for this charge was postponed from May 10 and 11 to June 11, on account of the high water. The most of the country is still under water from the Nita crevasse. I came with Creole Ben and jumper to Port Vincent, and took the steamer Louise for Maurepas Island. At French Settlement, Bro. Huff and family and several others came aboard on their way to the quarterly meeting. About sundown, on June 10, nine of us landed on an old flat at this place, and, by the assistance of Com. Cunningham and his skiff, we were all on dry land and snugly housed at Ben and Frank Cleneay's and at Squire Miller's. The Squire's mother is a remarkable woman. She has borne fifteen children, thirteen of whom lived to be grown. She is in her eighty-fifth year, and possesses a good degree of physical and mental vigor.

On our way from Port Vincent we saw thousands of cypress logs along the banks of the river, or, rather, where they will be on the bank when the water falls. We were told that there were now logs enough out and secured in rafts to run all the mills on this side of the lakes for three years. I was shown certain logs here and there that were worth from ten to twenty dollars. There is wealth in this fine timber. The waters are higher here than ever known before, and timber in the back bays and on the outskirts have been rafted that could not be reached before. Not only the timber which has been cut in the last two years is being brought in, but they are busy cutting green timber. While I write I hear the trees falling. I am told any good axman can make two and a half dollars a day, while a regular swamper can make from four to five dollars a day. While the overflow has caused trouble and distress in many respects, yet the timber thrown into the market will flood this country with money.

The quarterly meeting has been a good one in many respects. The quarterage report was good. Three persons were baptized to-day. Bro. Huff and family, in addition to the troubles incident to the overflow, have all been sick, and had also the great misfortune to lose by death their sweet baby-girl. The flux, the disease with which she died, has prevailed here to some extent. Bro. Huff has manfully stood by his people, and did the best he could, filling with great regularity his appointments. He received, as applicants and otherwise, eighteen members this quarter. He is doing a good work here. As the waters are falling, his scattered people will soon be back in their homes, and then we expect greater results in church work. We had services twice yesterday and twice to-day. To-morrow morning we expect to return on the steamer to Port Vincent, and then make a pushing drive for the Quarterly Conference at Clinton, La., at eleven A. M. on Saturday.

MAUREPAS, LA.

WOODVILLE DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The second round of Quarterly Conferences has been completed, and we send you a few notes that may be of interest. As our District Conference came off early, March 27–30, the pastors pushed the pastoral visiting and all other lines of church work, so as to have somewhat to report. Up to the present they have maintained the vantage-ground gained in the early part of the year. The assessments for ministerial support are in advance of last year $128 for presiding elder and $1,074 for the pastors. We have two pastors more than last year. There is, I think, a steady growth in grace. Generally speaking, we have peace, good congregations, and good behavior. In portions of the district the people are almost totally dependent on our preachers, for a gospel sufficiently pure to save the souls of men. Our system, with the preacher sent, means that he is aggressive; and the pursuance in the midst signifies that he is one of them, and that he has come to stay, and his consecration to the one work shows his people that he is ready to work for their spiritual good whenever and wherever opportunity affords. We are steadily gaining ground at nearly every point with a firm and systematic effort.

There are interests within the district of which we are disposed to say a few words. Centenary College, at this place, has had a prosperous year. Judging from the rate of increase for the last two years, we expect to see two hundred students here next session.

Rev. H. W. Featherstun is to take charge of the "Edward McGehee College for Girls," formerly known as "Woodville Female Seminary." There was a great deal of enthusiasm manifested in his meeting with the trustees. In a town like Woodville, in such a fertile soil surrounding it, and at some distance from any of our other Conference institutions, it ought to do well. I am persuaded that Woodville is ready for the revival.

Three of the charges have suffered from the overflow—Percy's Creek, New River, and Livingston. While the losses of our people may be great, the pastors have remained and nurtured every interest of the church.

JACKSON, LA.

PLEASANT HILL, LA.

Our meeting, which began at this place two weeks ago, closed last night. The Lord has visited his church here, and has caused the saving influence of the gospel to be felt, and we feel that great good has been accomplished. The membership of the church were not revived as they ought to have been; yet we had outpourings of the Holy Spirit, until, with some, there was great rejoicing. Shouts of praises were heard in the camp. There were nine accessions, and several professed to have found peace with God. Though we held the services both at eleven o'clock A. M. and 8:30 P. M., yet there was no abatement in the interest or attendance, and the best of behavior and attention prevailed throughout. Bro. H. J. Boltz, of DeSoto circuit, was with us four or five days, and did very effective work. He is earnest and fearless in his preaching, and the Lord honored his labors here. He seems destined to do a great work for God. May the blessings of God ever abide with him! I am very much encouraged with the spirit pervading the entire work. The Master is with us, and we confidently expect a revival all over the circuit. The fire is beginning to burn and will soon break out in living flames. To God be all the praise! Pray for us.

BOOKS.

THE FOREKNOWLEDGE OF GOD, OR THE OMNISCIENCE OF GOD CONSISTENT WITH HIS OWN HOLINESS AND MAN'S FREE AGENCY. By Joel S. Hayes. Printed for the Author, by Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Nashville, Tenn.

We promised the author to give this book a careful reading. The rashness of that promise was demonstrated before we had finished Part I. We screwed up our courage, however, and energized our determination and waded slowly and painfully and dangerously along through Part II. The main proposition of these two parts is, that God does not and can not foreknow free volitions. The author does not hesitate to differ with Watson, Whedon, Bledsoe, Marvin and Edwards. In his argument he got us so confused about the "may be" and "will be," "causation" and "contingency," "free volition" and "necessitated acts" that we became completely muddled and obfuscated. We waded on in a sort of dazed and befuddled way until we reached the chapter on Probabilities and Moral Certainties; but when the author demonstrated that a "probability" might come so near to a "certainty" that it would be represented by a fraction whose numerator was 1, and whose denominator contained 1,279,830 figures, we saw that the "vanishing point" of "infinite littleness" had been reached and we lost our balance and slipped off among the atoms of shattered foreknowledge, with all our mental apparatus creaking and groaning and grinding under the dreadful strain!

Seriously, the author has made some good points, cleared up some obscurities; but whether he has "carried his case" we can not tell.

THE FOURFOLD GOSPEL. The Four Gospels Consolidated in a Continuous Narrative, presenting the Life of Christ in the Order of its Events. By J. Glentworth Butler, D. D. 12mo. 212 pps., cloth, seventy-five cents. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

The words of the four inspired biographers are here woven into a single continuous narrative, giving a complete and connected view of our Lord's life and ministry. With the complete detail of every transaction, parable and conversation, as variously recorded by two or more of the evangelists, each event or saying will be more satisfactorily studied and better understood; the interest in the study, and the impression wrought by the clearer knowledge, will be deepened.

IDLE THOUGHTS OF AN IDLE FELLOW. By Jerome K. Jerome. Publishers, Henry Altemus, Philadelphia; George F. Wharton New Orleans. Price, fifty cents.

This book is No. one of the Altemus Idle Hour Series, and is a good book to pass away an idle hour. In a humorous style the author discusses various subjects interestingly. The Weather, Being Hard Up, Being in the Blues, Being Idle, Being in Love, Being Shy, Eating and Drinking, Furnished Apartments, Memory, Cats and Dogs, and Getting on in the World are some of the subjects treated.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF REV. GRANVILLE MOODY, D. D. Edited by Rev. Sylvester Weeks, D. D. Cranston and Stowe, Cincinnati. Price, $1 50.

All biography is interesting. An autobiography is fascinating. In this book we have the life-work of a preacher of the gospel as written by himself. We see the man going through all the stages of a Methodist preacher's career, from license to superannuation. It is the old ever-thrilling story ending in "peace at last" on the eternal shore.

URSULA VIVIAN: THE SISTER-MOTHER. By Annie S. Swan. Cranston and Stowe, Cincinnati. Price, seventy-five cents.

This is an interesting story told in a manner that will arrest the attention of the young people especially.

PERIODICALS.

—THE LADIES HOME' JOURNAL, for July, is full of interesting matter on all sorts of subjects. Dr. Hammond, Mrs. Whitney, Dr. Talmage, Mrs. H. W. Beehn and other popular writers contribute to this number. Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia. Price, $1.

—The TREASURY, for June, sustains its high character as a valuable periodical for pastors and people. It has sermons by good preachers, editorials, missionary articles, Sunday-school lessons, and many other valuable things. Published by E. B. Treat, 5 Cooper Union, New York. Price, $2 50.

—The GOSPEL IN ALL LANDS devotes the June number to Africa, and as Africa is now the diplomatic battle-ground of the great nations of Europe, this number can not fail to be interesting to all lovers of the cause of missions. Published by Hunt and Eaton, New York. Price, $1 50 a year.

—BIBLIA is a journal for Bible readers, devoted to a systematic study of the Scriptures. The June number has several interesting articles, such as The Wellhausen Theory of the Pentateuch, by Rev. W. F. Markwick; Hebrew Word Studies, by the same; The Language of the New Testament, by Dr. C. H. S. Davis, and other papers. It is published by S. L. Harrel, 198 Broadway, New York City. Price, $1 a year.

—The FORUM, for June, has eleven articles on important subjects, some of which we give. Roger Q. Mills writes on New England and the New Tariff Bill, while Culture and Current Orthodoxy engages the pen of Rev. Dr. Behrends. Prof. Lester Ward discusses Genius and Woman's Intuition, and American Interests in Africa are looked after by Henry S. Sanford. Fetichism in Politics, is by Henry C. Lea, and Encroachments of the Sea, by Prof. W. J. McGee. Bronson C. Keeler writes on Public Control of the Telegraph, and Dr. Cyrus Edson contributes a paper on Defenses Against Epidemic Diseases. Altogether this is a good number of the popular monthly. Forum Publishing Company, New York. Price, $5.

—THE MAGAZINE OF ART, for July, has A Study of Cats, with frontispiece of same; Portraits of Robert Browning, Current Art, Easter in Florence, The National Gallery of Ireland, and other good reading. Cassell Publishing Company, New York. Price, $3 50.

—We have often said we know nothing better than the QUIVER. The July number is especially good. It is an illustrated journal devoted to Sunday and general reading. The price is only $1 50. Published by Cassell Publishing Company, New York.

The Lottery.

Having considered calmly and temperately the issues involved in the offer of a million of dollars by Mr. John A. Morris to extend the lease of the Lottery Company for twenty-five years, we have determined to oppose the recharter of that institution on political and material grounds.

In offering opposition we will admit candidly that at one time we were inclined to view with some degree of favor a proposition so glittering and enticing, but have realized the fact that the acceptance of this proffer, which has temporarily blinded a large number of good people, would be a tacit admission that the State is a pauper and its citizens are dependent on the donations of the Lottery Company to sustain their charitable and public institutions. This admission would operate to the detriment and injury of every section of the State by retarding material development which follows in the footsteps of immigration and the investment of capital in industries and enterprises. Capitalists, investors and home seekers must have little faith and a reserved opinion, perhaps, of a State which must rely on the so-called charity doled out by a Lottery Company to maintain its public institutions, and provide the means necessary for the education of its children. The result in material damage that will surely follow the direct and indirect influence of the Lottery in retarding the development and advancement of the diversified interests in the State can scarcely be estimated. Already the State is a reproach and held in derision everywhere throughout the Union, and people from abroad will not come to Louisiana when placed in the attitude of being so poverty-stricken and helpless that its necessities must be relieved by a Lottery Company. The proffer of a million dollars is a ridiculously insignificant sum compared to the millions of profits which are raked into the pockets of the few men interested in the recharter of the company whose life expires in 1893.

The Lottery Company is an institution created by carpet-baggers during the carnival of spoliation that blotted with disgrace the fair name of Louisiana, and is now controlled by Republicans who had promised to retire from business at the termination of its lease.

Will the company be ready to surrender in 1918 if it succeeds in securing an extension of the privileges for which it is making a desperate effort? Will it not have grown so powerful and arrogant as to become the complete master of the State and the people? Will it not dictate and control the policy of the State in politics to the exclusion of everyone who may have incurred its displeasure or may not be in accord with its views? We have reached the conclusion that the Louisiana Lottery Company cares little for the Democratic party and would co-operate without hesitation with the worst Republican element to perpetuate its power for a quarter of a century, and longer if necessary. The Lottery is first, last and all the time for the Lottery. It is soulless.

Having temporarily divided the white people and sown discord in the Democratic party, the Lotteryites in the Legislature, defeated at their own game, are attempting to boost their amendment on the shoulders of the levees, the schools and the charities, which has been referred to a committee on which Allain, the Senegambian representative from Iberville, was expected to decide the issue in committee if necessary. Why place Allain or any man of his kind in a position to dictate a policy to white men on so vital a question as this? And yet the Lottery Company claim that they do not intend to meddle in politics. Only recently the lines were drawn and well defined in the contest in a ward in New Orleans by the Lottery Company who elected their candidate to fill a vacancy in the Legislature. The same deplorable condition of affairs exists in the Fifteenth Senatorial District, where both sides were thoroughly organized for the fight. It is, therefore, preposterous for anyone to assert that the Lottery Company will take no part or meddle in politics if it is granted the privileges it seeks for which it offers $1,000,000, a nigardly amount when contrasted with the fabulous profits it derives from the sale of tickets. The very life of the Lottery rests on its success in politics, and to perpetuate its power every agency or measure necessary to silence or throttle opposition will be employed. Are the people prepared to surrender their cherished rights, their liberties, for any sum of money? Are the people willing to accept a proposition that will increase the wealth of a few men to the detriment of the many? On this and in every issue the Caucasian is with the people and for the people and will strike some heavy blows in the fight against the Lottery which must come before the people in some shape in April, 1892.

In waging the fight against the Lottery Company, one of the most powerful organizations in existence, the Caucasian will be conciliatory in its arguments, conservative but positive in its utterances, and will not attempt to drive people into its way of thinking. Arguments, not threats, is the weapon we propose to use, and we feel confident that when the issues are well understood and the glitter of the $1,000,000 shall have faded from the vision of those now willing to accept the proffered donation, which would place the State in the attitude of a mendicant or pauper, they will fall into line and oppose the re-charter of the Lottery Company, whose term of existence is limited to 1893, when it must retire from business in this State forever.—Daily Caucasian, Shreveport, June 14.

Sunday-School Lesson.

(Hurlburt and Simpson's Lesson Commentary, Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

LESSON I.—July 6.

Lawful Work on the Sabbath.

Luke xiii, 10-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath days.—Matt. xii, 12.

TIME AND PLACE alike indefinite; possibly A. D. 29, in some town of Galilee.

10. In one of the synagogues—The mention of synagogue teaching becomes much rarer at this later stage of Christ's ministry. It is most probable that from some at least of the synagogues of Galilee he was excluded by the "lesser excommunication."

11. A woman...bowed together—The description indicates the accuracy of the trained observer. The duration of the affliction (as in Acts ix, 33), the symptoms of permanent curvature of the spine, the very form of the two participles, bent together—unable to unbend—are all characteristic. The phrase a "spirit of infirmity," that is, an evil spirit producing bodily infirmity, implies a diagnosis that the seat of the powerlessness, as in some forms of catalepsy and aphasia, was in the region in which soul and body act and react on each other. The presence of such a sufferer in the synagogue may, perhaps, be held to imply habitual devotion, and, therefore, the faith that made her receptive of the healing power. A spirit of infirmity—Her weakness was the effect of permitted power of the evil one (ver. 16). The Authorized Version has here mistaken the position of the word it renders "in no wise." It means altogether, and belongs to the phrase not lift herself. No application for help is mentioned.

12. Woman, thou art loosed from thine infirmity—Better, thou hast been loosed. The words were obviously a test of the woman's faith. "Thou art loosed" expresses the setting free of her muscles from the power which bound them down—and then, ver. 13, the laying on of the divine hands confers upon her strength to rise and stand upright. It would be, in such a case, one thing to be loosed from the stiffening of years—and another to have strength at once conferred to stand upright.

13. And he laid his hands on her—The bodily act was, as in the analogous cases of the blind and dumb, a help to the faith which was necessary, on the woman's part, that she might receive the full benefit of the divine act of power. When this was done she poured forth her joy in a continuous strain of praise.

14. Ruler of the synagogue—The synagogues had no clergy, but were managed by laymen, at the head of whom was the "ruler," whose title of Rosh hakkeneseth was as familiar to the Jews as that of rabbi. His functions resembled those of a leading elder. With indignation—The traditional law for the work of the Jewish physician was that he might act in his calling on the Sabbath day in cases of emergency, but not in chronic diseases, such as this. This law the ruler of the synagogue wished to impose as a check upon the Healer here. In them, therefore, come and be healed—Few remarks of the opponents of our Lord were so transparently illogical and hypocritical as this. It was meanly indirect, because it was aimed at Jesus though the man is too much in awe to address it to him, and the implied notion that it was a crime to allow one's self to be healed on the Sabbath day springs from an abyss of Pharisaic falsity which could hardly have been conceived. It was the underhand ignorance and insolence, as well as the gross insincerity of the remark, which called forth a reproof exceptionally severe.

15. Thou hypocrite—Rather, hypocrites! classing the man with the whole sect to which he belonged, and whose shibboleth he used. They were hypocrites (that is, they were acting a part) because they were disguising secret enmity under a pretense of Sabbatical zeal. The Lord saw the real thoughts of his heart, that they were false, and inconsistent with his pretended zeal, and addressed the multitude as represented by him, their leader. A man hardly could give forth a doctrine so at variance with common sense and common practice, without some by-end with which he covered his violation of truth. That by-end here was enmity to and jealousy of Jesus. Doth not each one of you—The principle is the same as that in chap. iv, 5; Matt. xii, 11, but the case is put in even a stronger form. There the illustration is drawn from what might seem an exceptional act for an exceptional emergency; here from the regular practice of men where their own interests were concerned. The objection, standing as it did, in contrast with the practice of those who urged it, was stamped ipso facto with the note of hypocrisy. If they pleaded that it was not for their own interests, but those of humanity to the brutes committed to their charge, the answer was obvious that the daughter of Abraham was "better" than the ox or ass. On the Sabbath loose his ox—Our Lord varied from time to time the arguments with which he abolished the fanatical formalism of the Pharisees respecting the Sabbath. Sometimes he appealed to his own inherent authority (John v, 17-47); sometimes to Scripture precedents (vi, 3-5), or to common sense and eternal principles (vi, 9). Here, as in xiv, 5, he uses an argument ad hominem, refuting their traditional rules by the selfish insincerity with which they applied them. They allowed men to loose and lead to water their cattle on the Sabbath, and thus to break their own Sabbatic rules to save themselves the trouble of providing water over night, or at the best, to abridge a few hours' thirst. Was then this suffering woman not to be touched, not to be spoken to, to end eighteen years of suffering?

16. Ought not—Our Savior gives him back his own word, "ought"—but the man's "ought" had been one of ceremonial obligation, and the "ought" of Jesus was founded on the divine necessity of love. Whom Satan hath bound—The words imply the belief that there was another source than mere bodily disease for the infirmity—in part, at least, the belief that all disease, or very many forms of it, is directly or indirectly traceable to the power of the enemy. So St. Paul's "thorn in the flesh," assuming it to be some sharp bodily suffering, is "the messenger of Satan." As to the reason for introducing the person of Satan thus, we must assume that Jesus said only the truth; and we can see that Satan's agency in the case gives pungency and force to his rebuke of the scribes. They growled at Jesus as if he were desecrating the Sabbath, and would not allow him even to rout and oust the devil from this daughter of Abraham on God's day of mercy to man. Under what law of satanic agency does this case fall? Was it a form of demoniacal possession? or does it come under the general fact that Satan—supremely malign as he is—loves all human suffering and has both hand and heart in all these sore ills of humanity? On this question it may be said that in several respects this case differs from the demoniacal possessions recorded in the gospel histories, for example, in being ascribed, not to demons, but to Satan; in the fact that her mind was unaffected; also, that Jesus put his hand upon her to heal her, a method never adopted in the expulsion of demons.

17. When he had said these things—Rather, while he was saying these things. So far am I from thinking a description of this kind to be a mere general close, put in by the evangelist, that I would take it as an accurate effect of our Lord's power and irresistible words, and the following parables as spoken immediately thereupon, showing the people the ultimate conquest which the kingdom of God should obtain over all opposition, however strong.

Missionary.

The Foreign Mission Movement and Its Progress.

Mr. Walter J. Clark, recording secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions, has prepared for publication, in The Boston Missionary Herald, statistics of the organization. Mr. Clark says: "Five thousand persons have signed the volunteer pledge. It is estimated that 1,750 of these are at present college students, 450 theological students, and 125 medical. About 650 are in academies and 200 in grammar schools, while 500 are not now in the schools, by reason of the failure of health, or lack of means, and 500 are not students. Of those who have completed their course of study 275 are still in this country, 125 of whom are not likely to reach the foreign field, while nearly 250 have gone to their work in the foreign field. About 250 have renounced their decision and 50 have been rejected on account of ill-health or for other reasons. Considered with reference to the time required to complete proposed courses of study, the 5,000 volunteers are in the following stages of readiness: Study completed and gone abroad, about 250; study completed and still in the United States, 150; to be completed in 1890, 400. In each of the four years following about 550 will complete their courses of study, while 1,200 have more than a four years' course before them.

"About 500 are uncertain as to the length of time required. To complete the 5,000, the 250 who have renounced and the 50 who have been rejected must be added." The pledge of the organization which is alluded to is this: "We are willing and desirous, God permitting, to become foreign missionaries." Comment on the figures is made by Mr. Clark: "It is evident that an immediate and overwhelming emigration of missionaries from the volunteer ranks is not to be expected; nor is it just to measure the success of the movement by contrasting the 250 who have already entered upon service in foreign land with the 5,000 volunteers. Rather should the number who have completed their studies be taken as the basis of comparison. The main object of the movement is to lead young men and women to respond to the needs of the foreign field, to encourage them in making thorough preparation, and in using every proper effort to reach the field, as well as to urge them to enlist others in the same work."—New York Christian Advocate.

A WAIL FROM HINDOOISM.—The London Missionary Society furnishes its readers with an extended extract from a very significant pamphlet recently published in Calcutta, which sounds a loud note of alarm from the Hindoo community. It may be read with advantage by those who are wont to declare that hitherto Christian missionaries in India have almost deserved the name of failures.

The pamphlet declares that owing chiefly to the influence of Christianity, brought steadily and constantly to bear upon the national mind for nearly a century and a half, the life-blood of Hindooism is fast ebbing away, and irreligion is fast destroying its vitals—the so-called irreligion being, of course, Christianity.

It further declares that as the result of a national apathy upon the subject, especially in Bengal, Christian missions are in a fine way of accomplishing their object by their persistent and systematic efforts to change the moral, social, and domestic lives of the Hindoos. It declares that unless those efforts are counteracted at an early day, there will come a mighty and remediless collapse of Hindooism. The appeal also speaks of the imminent danger to which Hindooism is exposed from Bible-women in the homes of Hindoos, and from mission schools to which the children of Hindoos are sent, because there are no Hindoo schools for them.

It is stated that as a result of this appeal and confession of weakness and of danger, two or three schools have been established near those of the London Society, but without any diminution of the number of pupils in attendance upon those schools.

This is most encouraging missionary intelligence. It is a confession of the early doom of Hindooism, and a prophecy of the triumph of Christianity, as the results of persistent labor and prayer by God's people. How much do our readers wish to hasten that day?—Evangelist.

Temperance.

THE MAINE LIARS SHOT TO DEATH.—I have just received a slip from some Western paper, in which a Mr. Riehman, a member of the Iowa Legislature, is reported to have "quoted Neal Dow's utterances to show the failure of prohibition in Maine." I wonder these people are not weary of repeating that old falsehood. Thurlow Weed, not long before his death, said the same thing, and when taken to task for it, excused himself by saying "he had seen it in the papers." Now will Mr. Riehman and all the rest of them receive this as a sample of "Neal Dow's utterances" on the matter of prohibition in Maine? It has been no failure, but a great success from the day of its enactment in June 1851. 1. It has suppressed every distillery and brewery in the State, of which there were many. Seven of the latter (and two of the former being in the city of Portland, large ones, not one remains. 2. There was no State in the Union in which more liquor per capita was consumed than in Maine. Now there is none where the quantity consumed is less. The value of the traffic has not now more than one-twentieth of its former dimensions. 3. Maine in the old rum time was the poorest state in the Union and now it is one of the most prosperous. We save annually, directly and indirectly, more than $24,000,000 by reason of prohibition, which under any form of license would be spent and wasted in drink, as in the old rum time. 4. In 1884, after an experience of the benefits of prohibition for more than thirty-three years, our people put it into the constitution by a vote of three to one; a majority of 47,075. Does not all this show conclusively that the Maine law is a great success and no failure?

NEAL DOW.

THE HOUSE BAR CLOSED.—Charitable persons having expletives and objurgatory adjectives at their command should send them to their representative in Congress. The shadow of Speaker Reed, gigantic and strongly sulphurous, fell athwart the halls of Congress. "This is the end!" as Miss Fanny Squeers said. Not content with abridging their liberties, with making fun of their ire-eating proclivities, with counting them against their wills, he now has aimed a cowardly blow at the personal comfort of our statesmen. He closed the bar-room of the House. Without a word of warning he shut off the supply of whisky. The blow has no parallel. It is unprecedented, revolutionary. The attempt to deprive the Senate of similar privileges resulted in the tremendous reform of calling whisky "cold tea" and serving it in china cups instead of glasses. But no Speaker before has been driven to such desperation. Does he calculate to silence his adversaries by depriving them of their source of inspiration? It is a long walk from the House to the Senate restaurant, and Dutch courage evaporates rapidly.

This tyrannical abridgment of the rights of the minority should be properly resented. The aid of the Supreme Court might be invoked. Otherwise a nice trade in original packages will spring up in the lobbies. —Pittsburg Dispatch.

Personal liberty is violated, it is argued, if a man is not allowed to eat and drink what he likes. No one will dispute that statement. But it is a matter of environment. Every man must be allowed to eat and drink what he likes, provided he can get it. If he can not get it, his liberty remains inviolable, but his ability has run against a limitation of his environment. A man in Iowa may be very dry because there is nothing wet within reach. If he fails to get his schooner of lager when he wants it, his liberty to drink lager is not restrained—no more than if he found himself short of the necessary nickel. If a man wants anything, the first thing for him to do is to go where he can get it—not where he can't get it.—The Interior.

The Liver

When out of order, involves every organ of the body. Remedies for some other derangement are frequently taken without the least effect, because it is the liver which is the real source of the trouble, and until that is set right there can be no health, strength, or comfort in any part of the system. Mercury, in some form, is a common specific for a sluggish liver; but a far safer and more effective medicine is

Ayer's Pills.

For loss of appetite, bilious troubles, constipation, indigestion, and sick headache, these Pills are unsurpassed.

"For a long time I was a sufferer from stomach, liver, and kidney troubles, experiencing much difficulty in digestion, with severe pains in the lumbar region and other parts of the body. Having tried a variety of remedies, including warm baths, with only temporary relief, about three months ago I began the use of Ayer's Pills, and my health is so much improved that I gladly testify to the superior merits of this medicine."—Manoel Jorge Pereira, Porto, Portugal.

"For the cure of headache, Ayer's Cathartic Pills are the most effective medicine I ever used."—R. K. James, Dorchester, Mass.

"When I feel the need of a cathartic, I take Ayer's Pills, and find them to be more effective than any other pill I ever took."—Mrs. B. C. Grubb, Barwellville, Va.

"I have found in Ayer's Pills, an invaluable remedy for constipation, biliousness, and kindred disorders, peculiar to malarious localities. Taken in small and frequent doses, these Pills on the liver, restoring its natural powers, and aiding it in throwing off malarial poisons."—C. F. Alston, Quitman, Texas.

"Whenever I am troubled with constipation, or suffer from loss of appetite, Ayer's Pills set me right again."—A. J. Kiser, Jr., Rock House, Va.

"In 1858, by the advice of a friend, I began the use of Ayer's Pills as a remedy for biliousness, constipation, high fevers, and colds. They served me better than anything I had previously tried, and I have used them in attacks of that sort ever since."—H. W. Hersh, Judsonia, Ark.

Thoughts for Our Graduates.

Many of our young people are about to start on the journey through probation, and it may not be inappropriate to offer them some thoughts just at this time.

The most important thing to start with is a clear conception of the true work of life. Failures in life-work result, not so much from want of proper culture and training to do that work, as from obtaining and persistently retaining in the mind false estimates of life and its great duties. Deficiency of qualification may, to a large degree, be remedied by obtaining and keeping in the mind a clear apprehension of the value of life and a proper appreciation of its privileges and obligations.

A just notion of the true work of life can be obtained only from a clear conception of the true value of life. Many mistakes are made at the point of departure. Many start in life with false estimates of its value, and they are soon entangled in a net of difficulties which hampers all progress in right directions. We lay it down as an axiom, that the estimates we put upon the value of life determine the character of our life-work.

If a man regards life merely as a time to get all he can of this world's possessions, his life-work will be to acquire money. Such a view converts life into a babbling bazaar, in which covetousness is the domineering spirit! Such a view turns probation into a slaughter-pen where the passion of greed kills and devours everything godlike and everything human, except selfishness! Such a view contradicts the Savior, for he said, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."

If a man regards life as a time merely for sensuous and sensual gratification, his life-work will be to seek pleasure only. Such a view contradicts all history and is contrary to universal experience. The consciousness of mankind tells us in plain, sad words that life is not all bloom, and the history from Eden down teaches us that can not be.

If a man regards life as a time to play for the honors of men, his life-work will be to follow with untiring zeal the leadings of an inordinate ambition. Such a view converts the high privileges of probation into stepping-stones up which selfishness mounts to its loftiest pinnacle. Any view of life which does not exclude selfishness must be untrue, and must lead to a life-work which will end in the reproduction of Babel.

In making our estimates of life, its immense meaning, its grand aims, its noble uses, we must keep close to the teachings of the Author of life. When we look at life as God's revelation discloses it to us, we discover that it has a far higher end, a far nobler aim, a far greater significance than mere earthly pursuits and pleasures and possessions. In the disclosure God has made of human life, we see that all its meaning is centered in the fact that this life is connected with a life yet to come. Its full significance emerges at this point of connection. Its value is seen to hinge on the fact that it is bound by an indissoluble bond to the future immortal life. It is as the introduction to the eternal life that probation becomes so valuable. It is, then, simply the introductory and preparatory state to an unending existence in the future. The life-work that does not keep this thought ever in view will result in failure.

The true life-work, then, will have a direct bearing upon the future. It will exert an influence that will extend indefinitely. It will be a work connected with, yet above, the level of the ordinary toil of earth. It will be a work, taking hold of care and anxiety and pain and poverty and pleasure and wealth and honor and all else, and converting them into the scaffolding upon which to stand while building characters for the final tests. It will be a work, interfering with no honest pursuit, yet, in a large measure, taking away the original curse of labor and rendering the toil of craft and trade and profession honorable and endurable. The true life-work is done in the spiritual department, and it builds upon the foundation laid by the "wise Master Builder." Those who work in this department are "laborers together with God;" and they construct edifices which will pass the fire that is to "try every man's work, of what sort it is," and come out as gold purified. They will receive a rich reward for all their labor and win a renown that will fill the pages of Heaven's history with its glory. This great work—this true life-work—is simply to be an humble, devout, devoted CHRISTIAN.

Christian Education.—How Can Mississippians and Louisianians Advance It?

Time after time have articles appeared in the columns of the ADVOCATE, calling the attention of the people, and especially Methodist people, to the subject of Christian education, setting forth and urging the needs for such education, not in some distant field, but here at home in the patronizing territory of our own CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE—even in Mississippi and Louisiana. There is need that the church redouble her energies in the furtherance of a thoroughly Christian education in all her mission fields; that she sympathize with and help, so far as she can, every movement to this end in all sections; but let the Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana feel the importance of every effort to advance the Christian education of our church in these two States.

Millsaps College, under the direction of a competent Board of Trust, when wisely located (as we hope it will be), will partly answer the question at the head of this article; yet, however satisfactorily the work of this college may prove, it but half answers the question. How, then, can the question be fully answered? To my mind, only by the full endowment and equipment of Centenary College. But a question arises just here: Does the church of Mississippi and Louisiana need both Millsaps College and Centenary? What has already been said and done by the church is proof of the need for both of these institutions. The idea has for years been growing among Methodists of Mississippi, that Centenary could not be expected to meet the demands for a Methodist College in the northern and central portions of that State. Whether the church in that territory could support a first-class college, was to some a serious question, until a review of the field and study of facts cleared all doubt on this point; and just as the necessity of the new college was being realized by all, a large-hearted, beneficent layman, in the providence of God (may we not believe it so?) comes to the front with his liberal gift, which is doubled, and the inauguration of the college assured. Success to the enterprise!

But though the providence of God and the voice of his church proclaim so unmistakably the need for this new agency of Christian education, is there not still need for Centenary College? If the reasons given for the need of Millsaps College are worth anything, then we answer this last question in the affirmative. If Centenary is too far removed from the central and northern portions of Mississippi to meet the demand there, then it stands to reason that a college in that section will be too far removed to meet the demand in South Mississippi and Louisiana. That is, while a few would (in the absence of Centenary) go from this last named section to Millsaps College, a proportionally large number would seek a college education at some secular institution, while a number who are now attending Centenary would never get a college education at all.

Again, the voice of the church answers that Centenary College is needed. The Mississippi Conference, through its Board of Education, after declaring the necessity for a new college in that State, makes the following statement regarding Centenary: "It is greatly desirable to enlist the members of this Conference in an earnest and continuous effort to build up this venerable institution." And the Louisiana Conference, in its recently published Minutes, bespeaks for Centenary "a still more earnest and active effort for the further advancement of this chief interest of ours." It says further: "The Methodist population of the Louisiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, closely approximates 40,000. Of this number, at least, three-fifths, or 24,000, are of educable age. Deducting the number of matriculates from other States now studying in the three schools under the control of our church in Louisiana, it is doubtful if a number in excess of 200 out of this army of 24,000 can be found in our halls of learning." Is there not need, then, for Centenary?

Again, just at the time the church seems to more widely appreciate this "venerable" institution there comes from another open-hearted friend of Christian education an offer of $25,000 towards the endowment of Centenary, to be met by an equal amount from others. Is not the hand of Providence in this, bringing it within the power of the church to add $50,000 to the present endowment before another session will have closed? It does seem so. When, after a few years of adversity and seeming decline, Centenary was placed under the wise and energetic direction of Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, D. D., as its president, during the first year of whose administration the darkening clouds began to break away, do we not again see the finger of Providence?

Then, if there is need to the church for a Methodist college in the territory now occupied by Centenary, as is evinced by the voice of the church and the manifestations of Providence, the question is fully answered: There is need for Centenary College. But if Centenary meets this need, she must be well endowed, and now is the time to do it. It can be done, and so easily, if the church only realized it. Surely this has not been realized, or Bro. James would long since have been made to feel that his generous offer was appreciated by the church. But how so easy? An editorial in the issue of the ADVOCATE, for February 6, made this matter quite plain, and it is rather surprising that it has heard no response. What can the people be waiting for? Do they wish to see much-called-for professorships created, and greatly needed apparatus placed in the buildings before they provide the means wherewith to meet these demands? This can not be done. The endowment must be forthcoming; then Centenary College will flourish as a green bay tree. If fifty individuals would each raise only $500, the fifty thousand would thereby be added and the prosperity of the college greatly enhanced. Are there not fifty laymen who will undertake in earnest to raise this small sum? And might not a few friends of Christian education be found who are both able and willing to contribute as much as $25,000 each for the endowment of professorships?

The cause of Christian education is the cause of the church, which is the cause of Christ, and the Methodist Church of Mississippi and Louisiana can advance it by responding with their financial and patronizing support of Millsaps and Centenary Colleges. Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana, help at once to swell the rising tide.

UPSILON.

The Family Altar.

We ridicule the Utopian designs of socialism. It is held that our present home-life must be abolished. In congregations of a thousand, or more, men and women occupy vast caravansaries. All eat on one table. The children are consigned to huge nurseries. No contact between parents and offspring, even acquaintance ceasing; the former being taxed proportionate to the number of the latter domiciled in the nursery. Common sense will never submit to such unnatural life.

But, strange to say, in matters of religion the hooted system of socialism practically obtains in many cases. We put our children away—no religious instruction and encouragement, no family prayer at home. We consign them, in matters of religion, to the nurseries of Sunday-school and church, trusting to the hot-house process of a revival to make them truly religious.

I extol the Sunday-school, am grateful for recurring revivals; but neither of them can take the place of the family altar. Religious instruction and prayer at home are as necessary for the spiritual welfare of our children as suitable food and garments are necessary for their bodily good.

The family altar falls into decay with the decadence of the truly Christian home. Many reputed homes are looked upon by the occupants as a species of inn, asylum or prison. At home, they do not feel at home. The housewife is the soul of the home. It matters little if that home is in a palace or hovel. The character of that soul determines the character of the home.

I'm afraid that our morbid conception of female excellence and privilege is undermining true home-life. Servants can not make a home cozy. Strange hands can not satisfactorily minister to husband and children. A chief desideratum of our age is housewives—mothers who understand that darning stockings and preparing savory meals is as acceptable in the sight of God as singing alto in the church-choir and attending prayer meeting.

Not a few housewives are responsible for the collapse of the family altar in their homes. When, servant or no servant, breakfast is ready, punctually, at a given hour, when insistence is had that all the members of the family, young and old, shall appear promptly at the table, the conduct of family prayer will be an easy matter.

The conversion of the home into the dearest spot on earth can be accomplished only by the housewife. Here the members of the family constitute, indeed, a circle. All respect and love one another. In the twilight at eventide all group around papa, resting from the day's arduous toils. Mama tells of her childhood, of family prayer, of loved ones now in heaven. Papa assures that life is real, earnest. The daughter narrates a story recently read in the ADVOCATE. All sing a familiar hymn. Prayer concludes that hour of happy home-life as naturally as the benediction divine worship in the sanctuary. No oppressive formalism, no nauseating cant, no censorious correctives. Thus the family altar soon becomes the family's centre, around which all the members love to circle.

J. B. A. AHRENS.

The World's Fair.

Chicago has the high honor of being the location of the Columbus World's Fair, but the chief management of it is in the hands of the federal government.

The World's Fair bill, as reconstructed by the committee having it in charge, has passed both Houses of Congress and received the signature of the President. The modifications have been judicious, the most conspicuous feature of the perfected measure, aside from the change of date to 1893, being the transfer of direction and control to the federal government. This direction is to be exercised by a national commission composed of two members from each State and Territory, with eight commissioners at large and two from the District of Columbia, equally divided between the parties, to be appointed by the President within thirty days. These commissioners are to assemble at the call of the Secretary of State, in Chicago, to organize the exposition, of which they are to have exclusive direction, and to choose their own officers, appoint committees and assign their duties, and to deal directly with the local Board of Directors, or corporation, chartered by the State of Illinois under the title of "The World's Exposition of 1892." They are, moreover, to determine the scope of the exposition, allot space for exhibitors, appoint all judges, and award all premiums, and generally to have charge of all intercourse with exhibitors and representatives of foreign nations. They are required to appoint a Board of lady managers of such number and for such duties as they may prescribe, to dedicate the buildings not later than October 12, 1892, to open the exposition formally not later than May 1, 1893, and to close it not later than October 30 following. Under the act, foreign exhibits are to be admitted duty free, duties to be paid only after the sale of the articles, and the President is authorized to make proclamation of the opening of the exposition and to invite foreign governments to appoint representatives. The naval exhibition is to be held in New York harbor in April, 1892, and the sum of $1,500,000 is set apart for the national exhibit in connection with the exposition, to be placed under the special direction of a government Board.
—Our Day.

THE POLITICAL CONTEST.—Untold injury has been done both in Canada and the United States by the reluctance of the best men to do their duty in political matters. Some, from a mistaken sense of religious obligations, others, we fear, from sheer cowardice, have shrunk in many cases from giving their voice and vote in favor of the right, and against the tendency to dishonest and corrupt methods which always manifests itself, and has to be resolutely fought at every turn, if free institutions and upright administration are to be maintained. For Christian people to surrender the field of politics to the unscrupulous elements of our population is to be recreant to duty, both as citizens and as Christians.

Fidelity to our civic trust involves, of course, intelligent, painstaking inquiry into the merits of questions and of candidates, the most determined hostility to all corruption, no matter on which side it may be attempted, and a singlehearted, fearless—or, rather, God-fearing—resolve to support the right, as each may be able to know the right.—Canadian Baptist.

Notes.

Let a man magnify his office, and not himself.

Man, art thou journeying to the grave and dost not pray?

Does not he who assails Christ's disciple make war upon Christ.

Is there a disciple of "the loving Jesus, gentle lamb," who is a savage?

The church that attends strictly to its own business will have no time to lose.

"Does any man know enough to be able to say that there is anything unknowable?"

The vital problem is, What are we? The settling of this problem settles all the minor problems of life.

What is the significance of the fact that the Senate of Louisiana, by a vote of 22 to 12, refused to investigate the charges and rumors of bribery?

The saloon-keepers' children never go without bread! They are fed by the dram-drinker, whose children often go ragged and cry for food!

The percentage of increase in the Northern Presbyterian Church during the last year was fourteen and seven-tenths, or an addition of 103,023 members.

Though smaller than some other Christian bodies, the Congregationalists are doing home missionary work that compels admiration. They have a thousand missionaries in the West, and 2,282 schools under missionary oversight.

It was in a city of the United States, and by a so-called reflector of public sentiment, that it was said that Romanism had wrought with more zeal and method for the conversion of the world than Protestanism. Oh! ignorance, where is thy mask?

A Baptist pastor has published this:

During a pastorate of over seventeen years, I have been called to the deathbeds of noted infidels, religionless Universalists, irreligious men, and a few very wicked men. In many cases the mind was confused, the brain delirious, and no reliance was to be placed on conversation; but in all instances where the man was consciously approaching death, without one exception, he pleaded for the forgiving love of God, sometimes hopefully, but more often with excruciating hopelessness and despair.

"Gold is a wonderful clearer of the understanding; it dissipates every doubt and scruple in an instant, accommodates itself to the meanest capacities, silences the loud and clamorous and brings over the most obstinate and inflexible. Philip of Macedon refuted by it all the wisdom of Athens, confounded their statesmen, struck their orators dumb, and at length argued them out of their liberties."—Addison.

Long speeches and long essays on commencement occasions are a "weariness to the flesh." We observe that one school has confined its graduates within "reason's bounds." Of the essays of the graduates of Port Gibson Female Institute, it is said: "Not over six and a half minutes were consumed in the reading of any one essay!" We lift our hat to Bro. Monnger and Miss Compton! May their example "be catching" to other schools!

The number of students in attendance at Wofford College the past session was the largest in the history of the college. There were 112 in the college and 107 in the fitting school. Dr. Carlisle was unanimously re-elected president. Professors DuPre and Gamewell were also unanimously re-elected to their respective positions. Two professors—Goodloe and Long—declined re-election, and Prof. Coke Smith goes to the missionary secretaryship. We rejoice to chronicle the prosperity of this college.

Bright hearing has much to do with bright speaking. It takes two bright ones to brighten each other in conference. "Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend," says the wise man. It takes iron, or something equally firm, to sharpen iron. No wise man would say, "Iron sharpeneth putty;" or, "Putty sharpeneth iron." Unless there is keenness of thought in those to whom we speak, we can never be keen of thought in our speaking. We owe a great deal to those whose qualities of mind bring out the best there is in us, and we have a work to do in bringing out the best there is in others by being good hearers when they are in converse with us.—S. S. Times.

Tennessee has been heard from on the "lotry" question. "Big Sandy" warns the new editor of the Nashville Advocate "to let up on the Louisiana lotry," and that he has "no rite to say anything it is a good thing and perfectly fare." The editor is, doubtless, quaking and trembling and holding hurried and anxious conferences with his assistant and the agents about the matter, for "Big Sandy" swells with the threat—"I don't want no more in that paper about that lotry unless you speake knocuraging about it." There now! The new editors have gotten the "Old Central" muzzled already! And muzzled by the "Louisiana lotry" at that!

Personal and Otherwise.

Bro. Bowen writes that 108 persons have joined our church in Aberdeen since the Sam Jones' meeting. That makes 140 new members at this place this year.

Dr. John Mathews, of Saint Louis, lectured last Thursday evening, in Washington Artillery Hall, on "The Vagaries of the Age." The evening was rainy, but a goodly company were present and listened attentively, while for an hour and a half the Doctor entertained and amused them by his "vagaries." The Doctor's old friends were delighted to feel again the heartiness of his handgrasp.

Archdeacon Farrar characterizes Ingersoll's logic as "the unlimited enunciation of immense generalities."

Six District Conferences, all beginning June 26, give the editor and business manager an opportunity to "spread themselves."

We give large space this week to obituaries. We have been obliged to shorten many of them in order to get through with them at all.

Dr. R. M. Saunders, recently president of East Mississippi Female College, has accepted the presidency of Marlin Female College, Pulaski, Tenn.

Emory and Henry College has conferred the degree of S. T. D. upon Prof. Gross Alexander, of Vanderbilt University.

Rev. C. L. Chilton, of Saint Louis, has been elected agent for the Southern University, and will soon return to Alabama to enter upon his new work.

The Scribners announce that Stanley's "In Darkest Africa" will be published simultaneously in the United States, England, Germany and other countries, next Saturday, the twenty-eighth instant.

Bro. W. T. Barnett wants to know the present whereabouts of Rev. Joe Jones. Address Bro. Barnett at Arkabutla, Miss.

A note from Bro. Harper, presiding elder of Delhi district, says that Bro. E. B. Foust, of Oak Ridge circuit, La., is fast improving and hopes to be in his pulpit within a month. Being now a legless man, he will have to sit when he preaches.

Rev. J. H. Callaway writes from Eden, La., June 16: "My heart is sad this evening as I try to write this postal card. Our dear beloved brother, Samuel Whatley, who has been afflicted with heart disease, dropped dead yesterday morning while walking across the floor. He was buried this morning. We will prepare an obituary soon. God bless his many bereaved friends and relatives! Our second Quarterly Conference convened last Saturday and Sunday. Had a good turn-out. Bro. Alexander, our faithful presiding elder, was at his post. God bless him!"

Notice.

The Scottsville Holiness Camp Meeting, of Harrison circuit, East Texas Conference, will begin on the Thursday night before the second Sunday in August; it being the seventh instant. An efficient ministerial force has been secured, and the promise was never better for a precious season of grace. We trust our friends will try to adjust themselves to the time, and give us their presence and prayers.

Any information that may be desired relative to the meeting may be had by writing to our pastor, the Rev. J. W. Lively, of Marshall, Texas.

T. W. WINSTON,
Pres. Board of Managers.

HAZLEHURST, Miss., June 16, 1890.

Many people neglect a cold, thinking it will go as it came. Frequently with serious results, the cold of to-day may be the pneumonia of to-morrow. Nothing will cure a cough or cold so rapidly as Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. Its reputation has been established for over fifty years as the best remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, all throat and lung troubles. For croup and whooping-cough it is invaluable. Mothers will be saved much anxiety and loss of children by having Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar always on hand. Consumption has been cured many times by its use. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

Notice.

To the Pastors of the Shreveport District—

DEAR BRETHREN: Please send me at once the names of the delegates to our District Conference from your respective charges, and inform me definitely how many will attend. The Conference convenes in Robeline, July 16.

Ample accommodations for all who attend. Respectfully,

A. D. MCVOY, JR.
NATCHITOCHES, La.

Notice.

It has become necessary to change the time of Holly Springs District Conference, North Mississippi Conference, from July 11 to July 18; also the Sunday-school Conference from July 10 to July 17. I do this to accommodate Bishop Galloway.

J. B. STONE, P. E.

Alexandria District Conference.

The District Conference of the Alexandria district will convene at Colfax, La., on Thursday, July 24, 1890.

The spiritual life and power of the church can vitalize and save the world only when there is a spirit of consecration sufficiently deep and inclusive to accept the true principle of Christian giving.... Christ saw that the world could not be saved by legislation; that only by his being "lifted up" could all men be drawn unto him. He saw that he could not save the world without sacrifice; no more can we. The saving power of the church is its sacrificing power.—Josiah Strong.

Excursion Rates to St. Paul and Milwaukee.

The Queen and Crescent Route will place on sale excursion tickets to St. Paul and return on June 30, July 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6; good for return until July 15, 1890, at one fare for the round trip, with $2 added for membership account National Educational Association. Those desiring to remain longer can have their tickets extended to September 30. Also excursion tickets account Knights of Pythias to Milwaukee and return will be placed on sale July 4, 5, 6 and 7, 1890; good for return until July 21, 1890, at one fare for round trip for a single ticket. A still lower rate will be made for parties of 25 or more traveling together on one ticket. Detailed information will be furnished on application to agents of Queen and Crescent Route.

Remember the Queen and Crescent is the shortest and quickest between New Orleans and Cincinnati, the only line south of the Ohio river running compartment sleeping-cars in which a section is practically a state-room. Excellent train service and polite train officials make a trip over this line a comfort and delight.

The Best Ladies' College in America.

Few educational institutions in the country possess advantages equal to those offered by "Ward's Seminary," Nashville, Tenn., under the efficient management of Prof. J. B. Hancock. The original site of the seminary was selected by its founder, Dr. Ward, with a view to healthfulness and beauty of scenery, and the 25 years of its history have been marked by a steady growth in numbers and facilities until it has for years been acknowledged the foremost college for Young Ladies in the South. Parents can find for their daughters a Christian home, where lady-like manners and a courteous deportment are cultivated as assiduously as the various branches, practical and ornamental, which are essential to a thorough education.

Fortunes in the West.

Much has been said about the rapid growth of towns in the West, and the rapidly acquired fortunes that have been made by the fortunate possessors of real estate. It is no uncommon thing to "boom a town," but it so often happens that towns that are boomed sink afterwards into comparative insignificance. This, however, is rarely the case in the West, where prairies to-day are villages in a week; quite good-sized towns in a few months, and in a few years large, prosperous, thriving cities, filled with manufactories, capitalists and artisans. The untold wealth of the great West makes this course of events extremely probable in any city enterprising enough to bring its advantages before the eastern public.

Akron, Colorado, is being advertised quite extensively throughout the United States. Its advantages are brought prominently before the public, and besides the usual warm invitation, is made an additional incentive that appeals to the heart of every person. At present Akron has more land than people. By a special arrangement in a subdivision at the edge of the city, every alternate lot is offered to those who will apply. You do not have to go to Akron to get one of these lots. The Akron City Real Estate Association, of the city, are men shrewd enough to know that a man who has some real estate in a thriving Western city sooner or later will wander out there, and if the country pleases him, will move his household possessions. This Association in the last few months has given away a few lots, and now the result is seen by the number of strangers who are coming into town every day. The lots in the sub-division advertised seem to be few in number and choice as to location. We should suggest that our readers do not delay if they want one, as they are apt to be picked up. Henry A. Lewis, cashier Farmers' and Traders' Bank, will select your lot without charge.

There is a future for Akron, and those who can get these town lots now for the mere cost of recording, should take them while the chance is open. To own property and provide in this way for the future of a man's family should be his first duty. We would advise our readers to look over the advertisement of Akron, and, if possible, go out and see the city. There is big money in the West, and you have now a chance to get some of it.

Still Moving on Its Grand Career.

The friends of progress in the South will read with pride the announcement made in the large advertisement of Dr. Price's celebrated Nashville College for Young Ladies, printed in this issue. The trustees of the institution have begun the erection of another magnificent building, which is to crown their finished work. It will be in the most commanding position in the city, and, rising in its grand proportions, will be an object of conspicuous admiration to every visitor to the capital of Tennessee. It will be supplied with elevator, steam heating, electric connections, with a grand central rotunda the full height of the five stories, with ample halls, parlors and bed rooms. This College has risen within ten years from obscurity to national celebrity. Parents interested in the education of daughters should send for the Catalogue of this popular institution.

The Anglo-American Homestead System.

The attention of our readers is called to the card, in our columns of to-day, of the Anglo-American Real Estate and Improvement Company, Limited. Its plan seems somewhat liberal and not hampered by the usual inconveniences of the ordinary Homestead Associations. If we understand it right, the only requisite, until subscriptions are closed, is to pay the monthly purchase price as it accrues. Its subscriptions since May 4, of this year, to date attests its popularity, and we have no doubt that in the near future, when the plan is understood, everybody will own his home through the Anglo-American syndicate. It is officered by efficient gentlemen, well known in this community and abroad, and with its capitalization is likely to do much in the financial world. The stockholder is guaranteed an annual dividend of not less than ten per cent., which is not always to be found nowadays. The Anglo-American has the good wishes of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Monteagle Assembly and Summer Schools.

EIGHTH ANNUAL SESSION, JULY 1 to AUGUST 25, 1890.

Assembly Park open to Summer Residents from June 1.

MONTEAGLE, TENN., widely known as the "Southern Chautauqua," is on a mountain plateau or spur of the lower Cumberlands, reached by mountain railway, one hour from Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis R. R. at Cowan, Tenn.

Rising 2,000 feet above the sea level, dry, pure air, no malaria, no mosquitos, magnificent scenery and abundance of pure spring water, it is the great natural sanitarium of the Southwest.

With 100 acres of picturesque, wooded heights enclosed; with improved water-works, sewerage, daily mails, telegraph, public buildings, and near 100 cottages; with the annual Assembly Platform and Summer Schools, affording a continual feast, it is a quiet "lodge in the wilderness," having all the world within call.

Parties desiring cottages for the summer should make early application.

CAMP MEETING.

The Nineteenth Annual Camp Meeting on the SEASHORE CAMP GROUND will open JULY 11TH, next, and continue for ten days.

Eminent preachers will assist in conducting the religious services, as heretofore.

Ample accommodations will be provided for all visitors.

Two commodious bath-houses render the finest salt-water bathing on the coast accessible to all.

The Grounds are 78 miles from New Orleans, immediately fronting the beach, and on the line of the L. and N. railroad. All trains stop at the station during the meeting, landing visitors within 100 yards of the enclosure.

Reduced fares will be in force over all connecting roads for the meeting.

The gate fee for entrance into the Grounds is 50 cents for the season, or 25 cents for the day. The revenue thus obtained is used for improving the Grounds.

Preachers will be furnished sleeping accommodation free of charge, and tickets for meals at the restaurant at half rates, as heretofore.

Railroad tickets—Louisville and Nashville—on sale from July 5 to 22; good until 31st. Excursion tickets also on sale to Camp Ground; good to return on to September 30. All trains will stop at Grounds during Camp Meeting, July 11 to 22, inclusive.

STATHAM—Sister SUDIE STATHAM was born August 19, 1865, and departed this life April 10, 1890, aged twenty-four years, seven months and twenty-one days. She was the daughter of Wm. A. and Sarah Griffin, of Alexandria, La. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when only ten years of age; was educated at Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss.; was married to Mr. Jesse F. Statham, October 4, 1887. Sister Statham was always ready for every good work, serving the church in the capacity of organist and Sabbath-school teacher, and rendering efficient aid in every enterprise of the church. She was very fond of children, and consequently took great delight in pointing them to the "Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world." She was a devoted Bible reader. I have had the privilege of looking at her well-used Bible, and find that she often marked such verses and paragraphs that most impressed her. She was especially fond of that epitome of Christian ethics—Romans xii. She was one of the best developed Christian characters of her age that I have met with during my long ministry. She lived right in all the relations of life.

She leaves behind a fond husband and a little infant, together with aged parents, and sisters, brothers and a host of loving friends, who weep (almost with joy), knowing that she is a jewel in the crown of the Savior, and is filling a sphere of existence free from sin, suffering and sorrow, and awaiting their coming. We, as a congregation, miss her sadly, and are only consoled, knowing that "our loss is her eternal gain." "Say ye to the righteous, it shall be well with them."

Her pastor, B. F. WHITE.

CASSITY—ANDREW J. CASSITY was born in Wayne county, Miss., March 2, 1819, and died at his home on the Melrose Farm, in Bolivar county, Miss., April 19, 1890. In early life Bro. Cassity moved to Hinds county, and settled near Terry, where he spent the most of his life. He was first married to Miss Louisa Bolton, with whom he lived till her death; a happy life, a period of about thirty-nine years.

The last fifteen years of his life were spent at Melrose, where he soon became a leading citizen of the community. About two years before his death he was happily married, again, to Miss Medora Cook, to whom he was tenderly devoted, and who proved an affectionate and devoted wife. I have scarcely witnessed stronger mutual devotion than between Bro. Cassity and his now heart-broken and desolate widow.

Bro. Cassity was a man of fine character, combining energy, wisdom, fine common sense and excellent judgment. He was a liberal, public-spirited man, of sterling integrity. He was a safe counselor, a friend of the poor and needy, a man whose place will be hard to fill. He lived a consistent member of the Methodist Church. His death was the close of a long period of intense suffering. I visited him often and worshiped with him in prayer. Death had no terrors. He died in triumph, and was buried with Masonic honors at Meridian, Miss., April 24. His soul is at home with God.

C. H. OWEN.

GOODLOE—WILLIAM GOODLOE died suddenly of heart failure at his home, near Livingston, Madison county, Miss., on Friday morning, April 18, 1890. He was born in North Carolina in the year 1816, and was about seventy-four years old at the time of his death. He lived after his removal to Mississippi about forty years, I believe, in the same community, and hence was one of our oldest and best-known citizens.

He was loved by his relatives and intimate acquaintances for his many admirable qualities, and respected by all that knew him for his integrity. He attached himself to the Methodist Church at Livingston about twelve years ago, since which time he has manifested great interest in the success of the church. He had a stroke of paralysis some time last year from which he never entirely recovered, but was able to walk about the house up to the time of his last fatal attack. Having gone out to look after some business matter on the morning of his death, he was admonished by his symptoms that it was necessary to get into the house, and when near the door was met by his faithful wife, to whom he said: "Wife, I am almost gone; I will soon be home," and in a few minutes after, apparently without pain, he passed away.

NEWSON—Miss GEORGIA ADLADE NEWSON was born in Jefferson county, Miss., in October, 1870, and died, May 3, in Wesson, aged nineteen years and six months. She was the oldest daughter of Bro. George A. Newson. She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1885. She was the pet of her own family, and loved by all who knew her. We wring our hands in grief when the young loved ones die, and say, "Alas! called away so soon." Angels, perhaps, clap their hands in joy and welcome, and say, "You have come so soon."

A FRIEND.

RAMSEY—WILLIAM J. RAMSEY was born in Wayne county, Miss., December 15, 1811, and died at home, in Harrison county, Miss., April 7, 1890. He leaves only one surviving brother, the Rev. A. C. Ramsey, of Alabama, but he leaves quite a number of children and grandchildren to mourn his loss. He was twice married; in 1856, to Miss Mary Fairley. Some years after her death he married Miss Sabra Davis. She survives him.

He was one of the most prominent men in the community in which he lived; a man of fine sense, the very soul of honor, charitably disposed, and an humble follower of the Lord Jesus. He proclaimed his belief by his walk. He loved the messengers of the Lord, but desired to see them active in the service. His home was the home of the preacher. Many restful nights this writer has spent there after toilsome journeys. I loved to stop there, and hear from his truthful lips interesting incidents from forty to sixty years ago. He was a busy man, but could find time to read a portion of God's Word every day; also kneel and pray in secret three times a day. The Methodist Church in that section has lost one of its most valuable members. He sleeps now; but it is not forever. There will be a glorious dawn. His friends that love the Lord may expect to meet him in the resurrection morn.

T. S. WEST.

MILES—Sister NANCY MILES, daughter of Allen and Delilah Hudson, was born in Harrison county, Miss., on January 21, 1848, and departed this life on May 11, 1890, aged forty-two years three months and twenty days. She was married to Elbert Miles on December 3, 1868. She was the mother of fourteen children—nine sons and five daughters—all living. They are between the ages of one and twenty-one years. Sister Miles joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the year of 1879. She was converted in the spring of 1885 under the ministry of Rev. A. P. Cox.

She took up the cross as soon as she was converted. She assisted her husband in family prayer, and would pray in public whenever called on. She was quite able in prayer. She talked to her husband in her sickness, and stated to him that she had prayed to the good Lord to restore her to health, and if not, his will be done. She said to her brother, Charles Hudson, that she was ready to go, and that she might as well go now as any time. She died with typhoid fever. She was sick twenty-two days; but, thank God! our loss is her eternal gain.

J. H. HOLLAND, P. C.

MAYERHOFF—Bro. CHARLES F. MAYERHOFF was born in Hesse Castle, Germany, May 28, 1806. He came to America in early childhood; first settling in New York City, and afterwards in Pickens county, Ala., where he was happily married to Martha J. Marshall. In 1838 he moved to the new town of Enterprise, Miss., and engaged in the mercantile business. These were the good old days, when the Chickasawhay was the highway to the Gulf.

Numerous gray-haired men tell of the uniform kindness, generosity and fair dealing of Charles F. Mayerhoff. In 1859 he removed to his plantation, where he lived until the death of his wife, about three years ago. In his strong manhood he gave his heart to God, in whom he trusted unto the end. His last years were made pleasant by the motherly care of a true daughter. Without warning, pain or struggle, on the night of December 5, 1889, "he fell on sleep." "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord: Yea, saith the Spirit, for they rest from their labors."

JOHN W. CHAMBERS.

SMITH—Died at his home, in Ruston, La., March 6, 1890, Mr. A. M. SMITH. He was born near Lamar, Barton county, Mo., September 22, 1841; went to the Rocky Mountains when a youth, and at the breaking-out of the war enlisted in the Confederate Army, under Sterling Price, and served till its close; in January, 1868, was married to Miss Mary A. Minor, of Belmont, Ala.; was converted to Christ in 1873, and joined the Methodist Church at Shubuta, Miss., in 1885, under the ministry of Rev. W. D. Dominick.

Bro. Smith was a man of honor and integrity, spurned the evil and loved the good; was unassuming in manners, generous and kind; a devoted husband and father, he made home sweet to the loved ones (a wife and son) who mourn for him, but not as those who have no hope, for without fear he passed peacefully away in hope of a blessed immortality. May the Great Comforter comfort the sorrowing ones, and may the promise of reunion of God's people console them till we meet where parting is no more!

O. D. BOWEN.

CRISCOE—JAMES CRISCOE was born January 15, 1860; died March 30, 1890. He leaves a wife and six little children to mourn his loss; but, thank God! they mourn not as those who have no hope. He was professedly and practically a follower of our Lord Jesus Christ. He joined the Baptist Church, and suffered not worldly things to interfere with his church duties. Like the Psalmist, he was glad when they said unto him, "Let us go up into the house of the Lord. He was a devoted husband and an affectionate father. When he was nearing the moment of dissolution he called his precious little children around his dying-couch and kissed them for the last time on earth and invoked the benedictions of Heaven upon their youthful heads. His expiring words were: "They have come; I must go."

God bless the father and mother, the bereaved widow and helpless orphans!

P. H. HOWSE.

NORTON—Died, May 14, 1889, R. W. NORTON, aged seventy years and three months. The deceased was born in Sumpter county, S. C., and came with his parents to Mississippi in 1830. During the last fifteen years of his life he lived in Lincoln county, Miss., a valued member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and a citizen of high standing. He died, as he had lived, a kind and loving husband and father, and his departure for his heavenly home leaves a host of sorrowing friends and neighbors.

May the peace of the Christian rest with his bereaved family!

A FRIEND.

NASH—HARRIS B. NASH was born in the State of South Carolina, August 9, 1828, and died in Rapides parish, La., April 27, 1890. Bro. Nash's parents moved from South Carolina to Georgia when he was quite a boy. Here he grew up, was converted, joined the Methodist Church, and married. He afterward moved to Louisiana, whose his name will ever be remembered as one of the first who assisted in planting the banner of Methodism in Spring Creek circuit. Like many others, Bro. Nash had his misfortunes while here on Spring Creek. God took from him the wife of his early choice, whose maiden name was Martha C. Fletcher, but afterward gave him a companion in the person of Miss Edy S. Evans, whose example as a faithful and devoted wife is seldom equaled.

Bro. Nash was a sufferer for more than two years before he passed from earth to heaven. I visited Bro. Nash often during the last three months of his life, and often when praying together I was made to feel a precious nearness with my Savior. Spring Creek has sustained a great loss; a pillar, a soldier, a veteran has gone where "the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." He leaves a wife and a large family of children, most of whom are expecting to meet him on the other shore.

H. M. B.

TISDALE—Sister SARAH NEBRASKA TISDALE died at her home, in Jones county, Miss., on April 10, 1890. She was the youngest daughter of Robert and Eliza Graves, and was born in Jones county, near old Hebron Church, on October 15, 1856. All the preachers who traveled what was once known as Bethel circuit will remember Sister Tisdale. From a child she was a regular attendant at Hebron Church. She loved the church, she loved the ministers, and she loved the Savior.

When one of her neighbors saw that she was about to die she told her to put her trust in her Savior, and she replied, "I did that a long time ago." What a happy thing it was for her to be a Christian; She was buried on April 11, in the old family graveyard. She left behind five little children—one a very young babe only a few hours old. May God bless these little children and take care of them! This is a heavy bereavement to our dear Bro. Tisdale. May the Lord comfort him in his afflictions!

E. J. TAYLOR.

NORTH—Died at his home, in Benton, Miss., on the night of April 18, 1890, JOHN H. NORTH, aged nearly sixty-eight years. Bro. North was born August 28, 1832; was married to Frances E. Handley, October 22, 1862, with whom he lived happily for nearly twenty-three years, and who gave him eleven children, ten of whom still live to mourn the loss of both father and mother. Bro. North was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at the time of his death, and was one of the most devoted Christian men in or about Benton. Poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith, and an heir of the kingdom.

The present writer has spent many hours with him, talking on religious subjects and general church interests. He was a man of general information. His children were devoted to him. They will miss him; so will we; but our loss is his gain. May the Lord bless, protect and take care of his good children! is the earnest prayer of their pastor,

H. P. LEWIS.

JAMIESON—Dr. J. W. JAMIESON was born in South Carolina in 1822, and, with his parents, moved to Tennessee when he was twelve years old. When he arrived at manhood he studied dentistry and practiced successfully in different places, but principally in Lowndes county, Miss., where he had a quiet home and loving family, with all the comforts and conveniences of a model home, at which he died of heart disease on February 22, 1890.

Dr. Jamieson had many noble qualities; full of energy and perseverance, kind and social, a friend to every good word and work. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and died in the Christian faith. He was a Christian in whom Bible truth and Bible religion found a zealous and consistent friend. Truly a devoted Christian, a kind husband and father and a good citizen and Christian gentleman has gone to his reward. We miss him. Peace to his memory!

J. A. EGGER.

MYERS—JAMES EDDIE MYERS, son of D. L. and F. A. J. Myers, was born in Rankin county, Miss., August 17, 1869; joined the church in his eleventh year, and died, after suffering severely for several days, March 18, 1890.

Bro. Eddie was a good young man, and very much devoted to the church, and especially to the preachers. He seemed to be happy when it was his privilege to be associated with his pastor, and I, for one, had learned to love him dearly, feeling that he was one of my best friends.

We shall greatly miss him in the church and in the Sabbath-school, and more especially will he be missed in the family circle, where he was very highly esteemed by parents and all the family connection. May God abundantly sustain his sorely bereaved parents, brothers and sisters and connections by his grace! is the prayer of their pastor,

A. D. MILLER.

ELLIS—DAISY PEARL ELLIS, who died April 11, 1890, was the daughter of D. and W. L. Ellis, and granddaughter of D. G. W. Ellis, member of the Mississippi Conference. Six years five months and eleven days her sweet smiles and lovely little voice gladdened the home of her parents.

Whereas, God has permitted death to enter our circle, and reap one of the fairest of our number, the juvenile missionary society—the Clara Chrisman Juveniles—adopt the following resolutions:

Resolved, That our deepest sympathies are with the bereaved mother and sorrowing father. May God comfort, support and guide them, that they may meet their little one where parting will be no more!

Resolved, That in the days to come her vacant place in the missionary meetings will be an ever gentle reminder for us to emulate her sweet example and continue the sacred work she had just commenced.

ALMA BATES, for Com.

CLARKE—Died, at Ashland Plantation, Concordia parish, La., at two P. M., on May 8, 1890, LIZZIE R. CLARKE (nee Gibson), beloved wife of George N. Clarke, in the forty-second year of her age.

Gone from those who loved her, whose very heart-strings were rent in twain by her loss; but, by her sweetly serene face, saying that she is "not lost, but gone before." Quiet, unobtrusive, reticent to an eminent degree; yet, by her wisdom and prudence gaining the right to rank first in the hearts of those who loved her.

Stricken by the hand of disease during the prevalence of the present flood; cut off from relatives and friends who would gladly have hastened to her side and shown, by their kind attentions, the love they bore her; buoyed up from day to day by the delusive hope that the next trip of the boat would find her able to join those who anxiously waited and watched for her coming—each day found her growing weaker, till, at last, even the fond heart of him who loved her best yielded to despair, and thus she passed away.

Rest, sweet sister, in the flower-strewn home, where loving hands have placed but the senseless clay, for thy soul, restless to soar away, and longing for the angel call, watches from the bright realms above over the pathway of the motherless little ones who nevermore will know thy loving care and wants till the Father's summons shall release him, thy other self, to join thee in those regions fair and bright. Sweet will the meeting be!

A. C. Y.

MCCAIN—LOYD, second son of W. Y. and Addie R. McCain, was born February 13, 1873, and departed this life in Winn parish, La., April 22, 1890. This noble youth of seventeen years was converted at Ebenezer in a meeting, last September, held by Bro. Walker and myself. One marked evidence of a real change in his life was his having no relish afterwards for the so-called sociables of this country, which are so destructive to virtue and godliness. Loyd, perhaps, from timidity had not united with the church, but had expressed his determination to do so. From his gentle and obedient life and his calm and peaceful departure we have no doubt as to his eternal safety.

He was the first of a large family of children that these fond parents have followed to the Mt. Zion Graveyard, and their grief would be unendurable were it not for the sweet hope of meeting the precious boy again.

J. F. WYNN.

DEVLIN—LOUISE DEVLIN, daughter of W. B. and M. E. Devlin, was born at Winona, Miss., October 25, 1874, and died May 3, 1890, at the home of her stepfather, Bro. J. T. Harris. She was left fatherless at the age of four. Under the ministry of Bro. T. W. Adams, she joined the Methodist Church when but eight years old, and ever afterward until the day of her death was a faithful member thereof. She was always a joy to her mother and to all the friends who knew her well. Kind-hearted, patient and cheerful, she carried sunshine and joy with her. She was a regular attendant on the Sunday-school and on the regular services of the church, and there she leaves a vacancy, as well as in the stricken home.

May the comfort of the Holy One comfort the hearts of the bereaved friends in this time of sore affliction.

W. W. DRAKE.

AMERSON—Sister EUDORA AMERSON was born in Blount county, Ala., April 13, 1850; was married, January 29, 1867, to A. Amerson. They moved from Alabama to Tishomingo county, Miss., in 1871. She professed faith in Christ while quite young. She gave great satisfaction among us as a neighbor, as a Christian wife and mother. She was the happy mother of ten children. She had been a light to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for a number of years.

She suffered greatly for a few days before she was called from our midst. She bore it all with great Christian fortitude; often speaking of her hope of heaven and of her consecrated daughter and her little infant, both of whom preceded her to the grave in less than ten days of her departure. Her last words were, "God save my children." Her friend, LUTHER.

CALHOUN—JOHN PRESTON CALHOUN was born November 16, 1888, and departed this life April 13, 1890. His sweet little life was brief, but he filled his mission on earth, and has passed on to that land where sufferings never come. He is taken from the evil to come, for he who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of Heaven," has taken sweet little Johnnie to himself. All earthly hope in him is blighted; but he lives in heaven. He can not come back to his father and mother; but they can go to him some day in the future.

May God comfort the bereaved, and bring them all to meet Johnnie in the sweet home above. The funeral was preached by the writer. (Gen. xxxvii, 30.)

HOGAN—Near Richmond, Ky., on April 8, 1890, there passed away to his heavenly home, SAMUEL G. HOGAN, in the ninetieth year of his age. He formerly lived at Delta, La., and Corsicana, Texas, and spent most of his life in farming. He was a sturdy spirit; strong in purpose and prejudice, brave in action and suffering, and loyal in life to the two virtues of honesty and truth, which until lately he thought comprehended the whole duty of man. Unfortunately, the most of his life was spent in scenes and associations seldom invaded by religion, and it is hardly surprising that he felt little interest in the future or little appreciation of his Master's service.

His devotion to the world was twice rewarded with a fortune, and twice fortune made itself wings and flew away. But the strongest constitution falls at last, and the most careless soul will sooner or later sober under the shadow of eternity; so this aged man, while in Ocean Springs, in the family of his grandson, the writer of this memorial, gave his thoughts and finally his heart to God. His conversion was evidenced in unaccustomed patience and fortitude, a love of the Word of God, which he frequently had read to him, and of the public service of God, which in extreme feebleness he rode miles to attend. In realizing the sweetness of divine fellowship, and both the certainty and preciousness of the divine promises, he felt at death's approach no fear. On the contrary, he often remarked that he longed to depart and be at rest. Doubtless, he is at last with the Savior. The belated vessel has emerged from the storm weather-beaten and almost wrecked, and makes safe anchorage within the harbor.

How sad to think that out of ninety years of almost unbroken health, and certainly of great possibilities of usefulness and happiness, there were only two which afforded him the highest satisfaction, and not one that exemplified the nobler life of Christian activity! On the other hand, what exalted views of the divine patience and mercy, and what encouragement to our persistent endeavor, that the Savior worked through eighty-eight years to bless a soul, and at the very point to die pardoned, comforted and saved him.

WALTERS—LUTHER E. WALTERS was born at Jeneseo, Ill., August 16, 1863, and departed this life at Scranton, Miss., May 14, 1890, at the age of twenty-seven. He was left an orphan when eight years old, and he thus early began the conflict of life without financial aid. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church early; probably at the age of eleven. He was made superintendent of a Sunday-school when only fourteen. He spent two years in preparing for the ministry in the Methodist Church; but, on account of failing health, his physicians advised him to give up all hope of entering his high calling. Bro. Walters then became editor of the Beemer Times, of Beemer, Neb.; but overwork hastened the ravages of his disease (consumption), and his physician advised him to travel for his health. Acting on this advice, he first came to Jackson, Tenn., where he remained only a short while, and from there he came to Scranton, Miss., March 5, 1889.

During the stay of Bro. Walters here he formed a large circle of warm friends, and the telegrams received from his home in the North show in what high esteem he was held there. His bright Christian experience and triumphant death testify to the sincerity of all pretentions.

GEO. H. THOMPSON.

CRAIG—Mrs. MARIA LOUISA CRAIG (nee Love) was born near Trenton, Tenn., March 9, 1828, and died at Carpenter, Miss., May 1, 1890. Her father being a Cumberland Presbyterian preacher, she was raised to that belief until at the age of fifteen, when, with an aunt, she came to Mississippi. Finding no Cumberland Presbyterian Church here, she united with the Methodist Church, and ever afterwards proved to be a devoted member and faithful Christian. She was married, in 1845, to Mr. John H. Lloyd, who died in 1859. She was married the second time, in 1867, to Mr. W. H. Craig.

In the death of Sister Craig the church has lost one of her best members. No alarm at death was manifested, but with a firm confidence in God she met death and praised God continually, even to the last. Sister Craig was an earnest Christian and a faithful worker in her beloved church. She was self-sacrificing and generous to a fault. Her tender, loving heart would not let her rest at ease while her fellow-beings were suffering; but now God has called her home to rest forever.

May God comfort the bereaved ones in these their times of distress, and help them to wait with patience for the revealments of God!

WILL P. JONES.

HUDSON—DELILA HUDSON was born August 16, 1816, and departed this life at the home of her daughter, Mrs. G. W. Walker, in Harrison county, Miss., on April 14, 1890, aged seventy-three years eight months and twenty-eight days. She joined the Methodist Church at the age of fourteen years, under the pastorate of Rev. James Applewhite, at Union Chapel, on Pearl river, Marion county, Miss., and was converted at the age of twenty years, while at secret prayer in the silent grove. She lived a good, consistent member of the church from the time she joined, and ever demonstrated the Christian life after her conversion. She was often heard in the class and prayer meetings. She loved the church, and loved to talk of the love of Christ in the church whenever an opportunity offered. She leaves nine living children—three sons and six daughters—and also seventy living grandchildren.

She was sick forty days with the slow fever, but she was never heard to complain during all of her sickness. Thank God! she is where sickness and death never enter. Yes, mother is at the beautiful gate waiting for her children and loved ones.

J. H. HOLLAND.

PEARSON—EUDORA KITTURA YARBROUGH was born March 21, 1866; was married to James M. Pearson, December 27, 1883, and died of consumption, in the full assurance of faith, in St. Helena parish, La., April 8, 1890. Sister Pearson was born and raised in the church and trained up in the Sabbath-school, and when quite a child she took the vows of church membership upon her, which she ever regarded sacred to the day of her death.

It was my good fortune to visit her frequently during her protracted sickness, and witness the power of grace to sustain in calm resignation the Christian upon a bed of suffering and death. A few days before her death I found her troubled with doubts. I spoke to her of the mercy of God, and told her that the good Lord would not let her die under a cloud. And so it was. The day before her departure she seemed to be dying, and her friends gave her up as gone; but after a while she revived with renewed strength; told them that she had been home, had come back to spend another day with them; spoke beautifully of heaven, and admonished them to serve and trust the Lord, and to meet her in heaven. The next day I visited her and found her calmly waiting the hour to come. I told her that I heard she had gone. She said: "I did go; but I came back; am now ready to go. All is well." She soon began to sink, and when she had descended far down the valley of death—as we thought, out of hearing—I said to her weeping brothers, "Weep not for her, but weep for yourselves; you are in more danger than she is." She answered, as almost from the other shore, "Yes;" and she was gone!

May this, her last word, ever ring in their ears till it brings them to her Savior. She leaves a husband, two children, father and mother, and many relatives and friends to mourn, in hope of a reunion in heaven.

P. HOWARD.

SMYTH—Mrs. S. E. SMYTH was born in Edgefield district, S. C., December 14, 1805, and departed this life at the home of the writer hereof, near Arcadia, La., March 4, 1890. Sister Smyth was the most consistent Christian that it was ever my lot to meet. She joined the church in early womanhood and remained steadfast until God called her to her reward. Her delight was to read God's Word, in which she found food for thought and word of cheer to assist her in surmounting difficulties as they sprung up in life's pathway.

During the three weeks of illness there was not a word of complaint heard to pass her lips, but she was evidently in sweet communion with her Savior; for just a day or two before she died she looked up into the face of her daughter, and exclaimed, "Bless the Lord, oh, my soul!" She leaves five children this side of the little stream which divides time from eternity, and they follow in her footsteps. While we miss her from around the family altar, and her accustomed place by the fireside, and her motherly counsel, yet we bow in submission to the will of him who doeth all things well.

J. M. MANLEY.

SIMES—Mrs. TAMAR SIMES was born in South Carolina, February 7, 1791; moved to Baldwin county, Ga.; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church when she was thirteen years old. At the age of twenty-two she was married to William Simes. Moved to Bibb county, Ala., and then to Lauderdale county, Miss., where she lived to raise a large family, and at her death she was the mother, grandmother and great-grandmother of 140 children. On the night of March 9, 1890, at her daughter's house, the Master called her to her eternal home.

Sister Simes lived a consistent member of the church until her death. Every opportunity she had she would read her Bible until her eyesight failed her. Mother Simes lived to the advanced age of ninety-nine years, and was remarkably stout and retained her faculties of mind until her death. She was often heard saying, "I am just waiting for the call." On March 10 her remains were laid in the family graveyard by her husband to await for the last day. Mother Simes leaves many friends to mourn their loss. May God bless and save them in heaven!

J. N. WARE, P. C.

KING—ROBERT W., only child of R. W. and Addie B. King, was born July 25, 1881, and died April 22, 1890.

This precious child was the joy of the parents', heart and the sunlight of their home. As the vine entwines itself in the trellis for support, so interwoven were the affections of little Robert around the hearts of the now sorrowing ones. Like the sweet and tender bud, he came forth, imparting to parents the fragrance of his own life, and then departed, ere the sorrows and conflicts of this life marred the unfoldings of the full-grown flower. In the bloom of youth, while the flush of the morning light was upon his cheek, the messenger came and plucked this precious boy from doting hearts, and left the home sad and weeping. Yet loneliness is not desolation, when we can look up into the benignant face of God, and exclaim, "Our Father!"

J. T. CUNNINGHAM.

KERSH—Two more sweet little children have gone to the better world.

INA R. KERSH, infant daughter of Bro. D. A. and Minnie Kersh, was born February 12, 1886, and died September 9, 1888, being two years six months and twenty-five days old.

EDDIE C. was born June 16, 1889, and died February 16, 1890, being about seven and a half months old.

They were sweet little children, loved and petted by their parents, grandparents and all that knew them; but God saw best to take them to the home of the good in heaven; and now may he, by his grace, sustain our dear brother and sister and friends in their sad bereavement! is the prayer of their pastor and true friend,

A. D. MILLER.

PAXTON—Sister H. M. PAXTON, wife of Col. A. J. Paxton, died at her home, near Arcola, Washington county, Miss., on Saturday, April 26, 1890. The deceased was truly a good woman; a devoted, self-sacrificing wife and mother, a devout Christian, always ready in good works.

"THE LAND OF SUNSHINE."

The Peerless Young City of

EASTERN COLORADO,

Akron, Washington Co.

(4,600 feet Above Sea Level.)

The City Council of Akron, Colorado, have been Authorized to spend for the purpose of bringing what Akron has to offer to those who come and settle, so that every person who reads the advertisement will know what the West can do for them. Akron is located on a beautiful prairie which gently slopes upward from the center of the town. It is the largest and most prosperous city in the State, east of Denver. It is a division station of the Burlington railroad. It is the Southern terminus of the Akron & Holyoke railroad.

$20,000

The Burlington shops are here and the railroad company is going to enlarge them; 250 men are employed by the railroad company here. The Northwestern railroad, now building into Denver, will pass through Akron. This will make three railroads, and give employment to probably 500 people when all the roads are finished. The United States land office is located here. Government land can be had now, but not long, it will all soon be taken.

This means much to Akron. Every man who locates on Government land, will have to go to Akron to file his claim. This will make it the headquarters for the land seekers all over Eastern Colorado. It is now the supply point for scores of prosperous towns and villages and for thousands of farmers who are located in the vicinity.

Akron has a $20,000.00 school house; shown in the accompanying picture. The teachers are from the Eastern States and are using the same methods that are used in Eastern schools. Churches, plenty of elegant water, no lack of rain, soil that is four feet deep, and soil that only needs to be tickled with the hoe to make a merry harvest.

THESE THINGS MEAN that Akron is going to be a great city. These things mean that people are coming to Akron. These things mean that the farmers, merchants, men with money to invest, manufacturers, laborers of all kinds in the East, are going to see in these wonderful natural advantages MONEY FOR THEM, are going to see that a few dollars put out now are going to be many dollars.

The Akron City Real Estate Association

has authorized L. C. Stephenson, Secretary, to place alternate lots in their Kenneth, Capital Hill and Grand View sub-divisions, to be given away. There are just 850 of these alternate lots. These lots are so exceedingly choice, that the Association has decided to call special attention to them. They are close to the city. The postmaster, D. W. Irwin, has put up an elegant residence in this same sub-division, and a number of other prominent business men of Akron are building and have bought lots for this purpose. There are 15 or 20 fine residences under course of construction now. These lots will be given to those who apply first. There are so few of them that those who secure them will get prizes. They are valuable.

THE LOCATION of this sub-division is superb. A gentle slope rises a few feet above the prairie land. From it can be seen the broad prairies extending for miles in every direction. A few miles away is Fremont's Butte, so called because the General with his command was corralled there ten days by the Indians. On a clear day the white-capped Rocky Mountains with Pike's Peak standing grand and majestic can be seen though nearly 200 miles away.

AKRON HIGH SCHOOL.

HOW TO OBTAIN THIS PROPERTY:

Write to L. C. Stephenson, Secretary, Akron, Colorado, and you will receive a description of the lot offered you free of all charge, its location, and full details regarding Akron and its advantages. There are but few of these lots in this choice location, and those who do not take their lot within 30 days will find their lot gone, and their chance to make a little money in some one else's hands. Reply to this advertisement at once, and after you have received the description of your deed, ask Henry A. Lewis, Cashier Farmers and Traders Bank, Akron, Colo., to pick out your lot, stating which way you want the lot to face. Those with the Mountain Views are considered the most desirable. Applications will be filed in the order of their receipt at this office.

THERE IS NO HUMBUG about the beautiful location of this property, nor about the value of these lots. We are interested in Akron and are bound to have it grow and grow fast, and in contributing as our share these glorious properties, we want to secure the very best people to come to Akron to locate on our sub-division. This advertisement will not appear again. There will be no need to. The lots will be gone.

EXCURSION TO AKRON. These excursions will be run May 20, September 9 and 23, October 14. These five great excursions will take people from all points east of the Mississippi River with the privilege of stop over at Akron and thirty days time to visit the Rocky Mountains, Grand Canon, Pike's Peak and the Garden of the Gods. Ask your nearest R. R. agent about these excursions, first get your deed to your lot, then come out and see us, tell everybody what a glorious place Akron is, get your neighbors to sell their farms in the old country and come out here where farming pays. 50 to 75 bushels of corn to the acre, 60 bushels of wheat to the acre, the finest potatoes that are raised in the world are grown on these prairies, 300 bushels to the acre; also vegetables of all kinds in the greatest luxuriance. There is no lack of water in Akron; rains are plentiful. Come to the land of sunshine.

MARK THE PROGRESS.

Four years ago there was but one business house and three dwellings in Akron, and lots were selling at from $20 to $90 each; today there are 75 business houses and 200 dwellings, and the same lots are worth from $150 to $2,000. There is not a vacant house in Akron, nor can they be built fast enough to supply the present demands. If money, grit and liberal handed enterprise and wonderful resources will make a town, Akron will be one sure.

1,500 PEOPLE

VISITED AKRON IN APRIL, and a large number remained. Akron is growing rapidly, and is the coming city of Eastern Colorado. Money can be made by investing now. 50 farmers have located within a week. You will always be sorry if you do not get this property now when you can.

AKRON, COLORADO, March 7th, 1890.

To Whom it May Concern:

We, the undersigned residents of Akron, Colo., hereby certify that we are well acquainted with Capitol Hill, Grand View and Kenneth Additions to Akron, owned by the Akron City Real Estate Association, and that it is the most desirable and finest residence property in the city and lies within seven blocks of the business part of Akron, and within the corporate limits of the town. 500 lots in this property have been donated for advertising purposes, and they are the finest in the city. They are easily worth from $50 to $100 each. We also take pleasure in recommending said Association to the confidence of the business world as reliable and trustworthy:

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The Board of Engineers reported on the New Orleans bridge before the House and Senate Committees of Commerce. They do not think a bridge a positive necessity; but if one is constructed, it should be placed above the city.

A political debate may occur in the Senate this week upon the bill for the admission of Wyoming into the Union, which is the first order of business. When it comes up an amendment will be presented in the shape of an omnibus bill, providing for the admission of Wyoming, Idaho, Arizona and New Mexico.

Illinois, Minnesota and other Western States were swept by raging winds on June 20. Widespread destruction everywhere; villages in ruins. Seventeen persons were killed in Lee county, Ill.

The town of Sweetwater, Neb., was swept out of existence by a tornado on June 23. Not one of the 1,000 inhabitants were killed.

The Mormon Land Confiscation Act passed the Senate on June 21. It provides that all funds or property lately belonging to the Mormon Church shall be devoted to the use and benefit of the common schools in Utah.

The Lottery advocates and Lottery opponents in the Louisiana Senate met in conference, on June 23, to discuss the Morris proposition, and to establish harmony in the Democratic party. A letter was received from John A. Morris, offering to advance $1,000,000 in 1890 for the building and repair of levees in different parishes, and endorsing the recent proposition to submit the Lottery matter to the decision of the white primaries of the State. A spirit of harmony pervaded the meeting, and the matter was referred to a conference committee made up of pros and antis.

A national convention of colored men in the United States met in Chicago on June 23. A resolution was passed appointing a committee of one in each State to organize societies, which shall appoint delegates to the next convention at Washington, next February.

Senator Pierce, of North Dakota, has presented resolutions of the Farmers' Alliance of that State, urging upon Congress the importance of enacting such legislation as would restrict, as far as possible, the operation of lotteries in the United States, and to use all means to secure the passage of such laws as are recommended in the circular of the Anti-Lottery League of Louisiana.

Representative St. Amant, of Ascension, in the General Assembly of Louisiana, was arrested on June 20, on a charge of accepting bribes from the Louisiana Lottery Company.

The directors of the World's Fair have declared a preference for the lake front site. There was only one dissenting voice. A resolution was adopted instructing the committee on grounds to enter into negotiations with the city of Chicago, the Illinois Central railroad, and all other interested parties to secure an area on the lake front of not less than 250 acres.

There are prospects for serious complications and a bloody race war in southeast Missouri. The white people refuse to permit negroes to work on the construction of the St Louis, Arkansas and Texas railroad, and have attacked several times and scattered the negroes.

FOREIGN.

A conference of the finance ministers of the various German states will shortly be held for the purpose of discussing and agreeing upon the means of defraying the military expenses of their respective governments, as well as the contribution of each state to the maintenance of the imperial military establishment.

Hordes of famished wolves are overrunning Austrian Galicia, destroying thousands of sheep and many larger animals. In a number of cases men have been attacked by the ferocious beasts and devoured. In some regions it is extremely dangerous for the inhabitants to go abroad, and the people have organized large bands of armed men to exterminate the brutes.

Mr. Henry M. Stanley was presented with an address at Berwick, on June 19. In reply he spoke in the most enthusiastic terms of the wisdom of Lord Salisbury, as shown in the settlement with Germany of the African question. By the agreement between the two countries 500,000 square miles of territory were added to the British possessions in Africa.

It is reported that an additional duty of eighty cents per barrel will be imposed on American flour by Cuba on July 1. This will prohibit any flour trade between the United States and Cuba.

The Argentine Republic will stop the issue of bank notes for three years.

Great Britain is to be asked to pass retaliatory measures to offset the protective tariff of the United States.

The Brazilian minister has been received by President Carnot. Brazil's representative expressed his satisfaction at the resumption of ministerial relations with France.

Russia declines to wait until October for the payment of the war indemnity by Turkey, and demands immediate payment.

Dr. Windthorst, leader of the clerical party in the German Reichstag, has offered the adhesion of his party to carry the military credits, on condition that the government introduce a measure giving the Catholics effective control of their primary schools.

President Da Fonsica signed the new Constitution of Brazil at a ministerial dinner on June 22.

The minister of works has inaugurated the first cotton factory in Constantinople, which has secured a monopoly for twenty years. It is expected that this factory will produce cotton and woolen yarn at fifteen per cent. below the cost in the English fabrics.

There is comfort for the man with a prematurely gray beard in Buckingham's Dye, because it never fails to color an even brown or black as may be desired.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policyholders.
The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.
A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

Mansfield Female College
Conservatory of Music and Art.
MANSFIELD, LA.
One of the most popular and flourishing institutions of the South. The Sixty-sixth Session opened September 11, 1889, and the Spring Term begins February 1, 1890, with an able and experienced faculty. Curriculum comprehensive, instruction thorough. Advantages in Music unsurpassed, as in the best conservatories. The pianos are new and of the best make. The Technicon and the Technichone are used to facilitate the work in the music department, placing this department beyond competition. Departments of Fine Arts and Industrial Arts under specialists.
The location is unsurpassed for beauty and attractiveness, and the school is celebrated for the remarkable record for good health maintained. The climate is the best in which to educate, and the place is the safest for girls. The main building is of brick, massive and commodious, with large and well-shaded campus. Rooms large, well furnished, warmed and ventilated. Ample provision for the table of the best the market affords. All necessary comfort secured. Expenses very low and the school very economical. A new building with a large audience hall is in contemplation, and extensive improvements are in progress to make this the grandest institution in the State.

ALONE.

BY MRS. D. E. M. ALLEN.

Once, when I looked across the mystic sea
That ever round the shores of time makes moan,
And mingles with earth's sweetest melody
A low, sad undertone,

I turned me with a shudder from the brink—
Not that I feared so much my fragile bark,
Adrift upon that soundless deep, would sink
Beneath its waters dark,

Or failed to catch, beyond its spaces vast,
The glimmer of a lovely golden strand,
But that Love was so strong he held me fast,
As with an iron hand.

And so I prayed that I might longer stay,
If thus my Father willed, for Love's dear sake;
For well I knew, if I should go away,
One heart for me would break.

I could not bear, I said, that hands not mine,
In lonely age, should minister to him,
That other household fires should brightly shine,
And his henceforth be dim.

But all is changed since on that solemn sea
I saw his bark put forth one summer day:
The sun shone on his lessening sail—on me
The night fell, chill and gray.

And now I wait beside the wave-washed sands,
Nor shudder at the tide's low moaning sound,
Content to linger, if for these tired hands
Some work of love be found;

Yet comforted to know, when I embark,
Though kind lips breathe a farewell tenderly,
No hearthstone for my going will be dark,
No heart will break for me.

America's Ideal of Success.

FROM BISHOP HAYGOOD'S ADDRESS AT VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.

Let us ask ourselves, Is this nation, now taking, with a school-boy's glee and vanity, its eleventh census, conscious of itself? For the most part, only in a very vague and confused way. Most people are asking: "How many are we? How much are we worth—in dollars?" These are the least important things the census will reveal—how many heads and how much money. The answers will be in the millions and billions. What sort of people are we? What do we with so much money? These are the important questions concerning which the census will give us only confused and contradictory answers.

What a territory is ours! The surveyors tell us that we have an empire of four million square miles. Perhaps nobody has any clear conception of the meaning of such terms. These figures represent areas as do the numbers astronomers use in telling the distances of the stars from our earth; but the truths such numbers stand for are vague as vast.

Measured surveyor-wise, ours is, indeed, a very big country. Greece would hardly fill up the boundaries of some of our counties; yet Greece gave to the world more that can not die than all the peoples who went before us between the two oceans. When we are grown up, how many people will there be? With England's population Texas alone can maintain in comfort a hundred millions of human beings. With a population no denser the United States can easily find homes and support for many more than a thousand millions.

This is, indeed, a new country. We are a young nation; we are yet in our childhood. Time would fail me to tell of the riches of this last best gift of land to mankind. All that climate, soil, and minerals can do, all are here. And what a stock of people are here and coming! With what we may call an English basis, all sorts of people from all countries are here. I do not now describe them; I do not even name them; least of all, discuss any race problems, or other special questions that grow out of the manifold and multiplex relationships of these many and diverse people.

What are we here for? I answer, as a Christian—as one who believes in God and his Christ, and, therefore, does not despair of man. We are here to build a Christian nation. Nothing less would vindicate the wisdom of the Creator in preparing such a country; nothing less vindicate the Providence that first settled these shores with English-speaking Christian men and women, by divine laws of life driving hence and away the people who would not use their gifts; nothing less than a Christian state makes life worth living for us or our children.

The realization of this stupendous plan of Heaven will not come about by accident. The conditions of our problem favor success; but success is not of chance. Success, in any high sense, does not spring out of the earth as the grass and wild flowers spring out of the bosom of fertile prairies. The powers that rule the world are not blind; sightless fortune, flinging her favors about without discrimination, is a heathen conception. In a universe governed by law, the doctrine of chance has no place. If it could be proved (as it can not be) that there is no Providence—all-wise, all-comprehensive, and infinitely good—that there is no personal Law-giver and Almighty Ruler, the prevalence of a somewhat we call Law, has been proved beyond doubt or question. Where law is chance is not.

What a man becomes depends on his relation to the law of his being. The doctrine applies in its full force to nations. The man is the unit of the race, and what is good for one is good for all. Nations can no more be saved in disobedience to law than a man can be saved in disobedience to law. Obedience is the condition of life everywhere, and disobedience everywhere and everywhen issues in death. This, also, is salvation by faith, for obedience to law is the product of faith—faith in the law, if not in the Lawgiver. Expediency and right always coincide in the long run. There can be no true political economy any more than true religion that forgets or ignores righteousness—that is obedience.

At this point let us ask, What does this new and strong nation propose to itself? What does it wish to be? What ideal does this nation, just beginning its history, hold up before its gaze to stimulate and guide its energies?

Events, so far as men only are related to them, are the exponents of their thoughts and desires. Ideals determine men's lives and shape the history of nations. As the universe expresses a thought of the Creator, so the history of a people expresses their thoughts, so far as human purpose and effort determine history.

History is full of illustrations; so is the commonest, every-day life of men that never gets itself written. Business, art, poetry, science, literature, religion—most of all—illustrate the thought and enforce the principle that lies at the heart of the doctrine of ideals.

No man ever rises above his ideal to stay—nay, no best man ever reaches his ideal. In the nature of things, he can not; for there is no ideal that is not beyond the possibility of present achievement—unless it be a very low one, always tending downward. What is achieved is ideal no more. If the ideal does not outrun achievement, there is nothing to live for. If anything worthy is attempted and accomplished; if there be true life, and, therefore, healthful growth, the ideal will be forever reforming itself; it will grow larger, truer, diviner, and the mount of vision to-day only reveals a greater height near the stars for to-morrow's ascent.

This much is not in the least speculative; this much is clear beyond the need of argument—a man's real ideal determines the lines of his activities. Many fancies and vague dreams there may be that do not enter into volition, endeavor, or achievement; but what a man really makes his ideal—that which he truly and persistently wishes to be; that above all things he tries to be—to that he bends all else. He may, indeed, dream and talk sentimentally of other, and it may be in themselves of better things; but if we would certainly know what is uppermost in a man's thought of life; if we would be sure of his ruling love; if we would know beyond doubt what he wishes to be (and it is out of uppermost thoughts, ruling loves, and fixed longings, that the imagination creates its ideal), there is an easy way to find out what we wish to know.

When you seek to know what a man's ideal of life is, do not ask, "What does the man say?" His words may mislead you, as his posings deceive him. Inquire only, "What does this man really try to do?" When we find out what a man who can choose his lines of life steadily strives to do, we have found out what he really wishes to be; we know what his ideal is. Is pleasure, fine or gross, the thing he lives for? Then pleasure is his ideal of life; to him pleasure is the end and purpose of existence. In his philosophy of life pleasure is the final cause of creation; for pleasure the universe is.

Is he trying with all his might to win what men call fame? Then fame is his ideal, and praise is success. Is all his effort put forth to gain and to hold high office? Then power is his ideal, and his best man is he who is at the top of all the offices. Or does he bend his energies and consecrate all his powers to the accumulation of money? Then no matter how fine are his words in mere talk about the true end of life, we know what his ideal is—we have not yet learned how low it is. Christ knew, and he has told us. It is money this man wants; wealth to him measures human success or failure; his ideal is the richest man. To him come no greater thoughts than such as puzzle his soul concerning "greater barns."

Everywhere the statement holds good: A man strives hardest for what he most desires, and his ideal is involved in its realization. This is true, whether the ideal be noble or ignoble, divine or devilish. It would be a grave mistake to suppose that all ideals lift up; they as certainly drag down. The false ideal pursued not only degrades—it destroys. If a lofty ideal produces a glorious Lee, who, though in poverty, would not sell his name to even an honorable business, and makes for our times a man to be honored and revered by the true men everywhere, a mean, money-getting ideal of the chief good gives us, at least, three others who once followed the flag that heroism made immortal—three licensed gamblers—Beauregard and Early in New Orleans, and Mosby in Mexico, selling their fame and debauching men, that they may put money in their purse.

Honor forever to Gov. Nicholls, who would not sell the virtue of Louisiana to the hideous octopus—the slimy devil-fish whose den is in the Crescent City, but whose long and cruel arms reach into every State in our Union.

It is, indeed, true that many, perhaps most, men lack unity of purpose; they think of, or wish for many things; they may not be conscious of creating or entertaining such things as ideals; but, after all, the fact remains, a man's real desire, and, by consequence, his real ideal, is shown by what he most tries to do. "By their fruits ye shall know them" is the test of the divine Teacher, who not only gives us all true religion, but whose doctrine is the germ of all our science. With him facts determine what theories are to be, and this is the heart of the Baconian philosophy.

The principle we have been considering applies to nations as surely as to men. In any community, whether a little village, a great city, or a nation, the consensus of the people's thought as to what is the true summum bonum, the unmistakable chief good, "the best thing in the world," this creates the ideal, inspires the efforts, and determines the history of that community, of that nation.

History is rich in illustrations. Two only I barely mention. Take Rome in Cæsar's time. Rome was then fully conscious of herself, and knew perfectly well what she wanted. The end Rome sought was dominion, and Rome strained every nerve to make conquests. And so it came to pass that Rome governed the world. Greece, at her best, showed her ideal in her arts. And it came to pass that Greece also conquered a world, and gave the patterns for all the arts that came after her day.

There will not be unanimous consent among any people as to what is the one thing to be desired above all other things, the great pearl of price for which a man should sell all that he has; but there will be a predominant thought and a paramount desire, and this will determine, for the chief part, both the efforts and achievements of a people.

Here it may be inquired, What is the American ideal? It may seem difficult, or impossible, to find the answer. In no country of the world are there more "views," "doctrines," "creeds," "philosophisms" concerning human life pressed upon the attention of men. There are voices on every side, most insistent and clamorous for recognition. We can not find our answer by weighing the pleas which these many and diverse and most urgent voices make. We will reach our answer by asking a different and less complex question: In what path of endeavor does American energy most expend itself? At the end of that path be sure we find the ideal of our nation. What are the most people most trying to do? To ask this question is to answer it: making money. Not earning a support for one's family; not making honorable provision for old age, or comfortable settlements for one's children; but making money for the sake of money, and for the sake of what it commands. Find us the richest man, and the ideal American will be one richer than he.

To offer proof of the correctness of this statement would be like proving that twice two are four, as useless and as commonplace. Those who read the papers and know our times can not for one instant question the statement, that one richer than our richest is our ideal man.

I am not about to commit the folly of denouncing money; that having money and money's worth make for any human soul the chief good of life, I do utterly deny. In itself it is not good at all; perverted, it is a curse. Making money as the end and aim of life is a foolish and unmanly thing; making money, as a means to an end, may be a very wise, and also a very noble occupation. The power that is in money to do good is the one quality in it that gives it worth, that entitles it to respect, that lifts it above dirt and corruption. Measuring men by mere money gauges is heathenism. Making money having the chief end, and money-getting the chief occupation of life, works out the most deplorable results in the thoughts and lives of men. When the richest becomes the foremost man, and one richer than the richest the ideal man, we forget why a man is sent into this world, and cease to know what a man really is. Confusion enters into all our conceptions of human life. We apply false tests to ourselves as well as to others; we "call evil good and good evil;" conscience loses its polarity, and virtue dies at the root. When men choose occupations simply to make money; seek office only for salaries, perquisites, and, above all, opportunities; in a word, when money is the end, and money-getting the business of life, character and usefulness become secondary, whereas character and usefulness are in human life what God cares for, and what a wise and good man prizes above all the world.

Sometimes concrete illustrations are more helpful in getting at the very truth of things than elaborate arguments or exhaustive statements. Few of us realize how despotic this money ideal has become. Nothing is more foolish than the making of wholesale indictments of our times or of our people, unless it be the blindness that will not see a storm-bearing cloud till it bursts in desolating fury.

Of the evils brought to view, only in these remarks illustrations abound. Men known to be unprincipled are honored for their bank accounts. Men of fortune, and controlling the influences that command fortune, can hold high office, and feel themselves too safe to need vindication when charged with infamous crimes. It no longer startles us when an election to the United States Senate even not infrequently turns upon the gold, rather than the brains, virtue, or patriotic service of candidates. It no longer shocks us that the "barrel" enters as an essential factor into many elections, and not a little legislation. It has become so commonplace as hardly to be a scandal that party managers calculate the price of purchasable voters, and "levy contributions" to meet what they call "legitimate expenses." Big men make combinations that crush all weaker rivals, organize "trusts" that rob the people, and are called financiers. In ravenous greed they are the sharks of the business world, and, as to conscience, they are the successors of the Barbary pirates, who scourged the Mediterranean some generations gone. If they succeed, they enter the charmed circle of our immortals. A million dollars covers a multitude of sins, and many millions are of the essence of nobility. Thousands of people, finding to support them voices not a few in hireling newspapers, count it unpatriotic that a minority in the Legislature of Louisiana refuse a bribe of twenty-five millions, and curse the only man who are struggling to save the virtue and honor of the State. So high is money, so low is honor.

Take the commonest and vilest case in the world—the fathers and mothers who barter their marriageable daughters for money, and what, in their insane vanity, they consider social position. The Circassians who sell their tender girls to Turkish harems deserve more respect, for they do not know the Christ who has given us the pattern of all true knighthood, who has shown us how sacred womanhood is, and who, in glorifying wifehood and motherhood, lifts up the race of man. Alas! for the victims bound on this fiery and cruel altar. Moloch himself was a kinder god.

How can there be honesty in business, purity in politics, righteousness in government, or true virtue anywhere, while money is the essential element in our ideal of human success? How can it be otherwise than that our politics should be corrupted, that legislation should be poisoned, that government should be debauched under the tremendous stimulus of an all-abounding idolatry of gold? How can it be otherwise than that a fatal paralysis should strike down social and civil virtue? How can it be otherwise than that the church of God itself should show the glistening plague-spots of a leprosy so prevalent and so deadly?

Seashore Camp Ground.

BY J. M. BEARD, D. D.

There has been much debate about the probable residence of the first pair, some locating it in Assyria, others in lower India, and others, yet more speculative, at the North Pole and in North America; and for this there may have been cause; but what is harder to believe than any of the labored theories referred to, which have nothing to rest upon but greater and lesser displays of human genius and scholarship, is the fact that any of these original thinkers could, by possibility, have glimpsed that paradisical stretch of sea and shore and sky on the Mississippi Sound, near to Biloxi, yclept Seashore Camp Ground. It was just here, beyond almost any peradventure that could stand against anything but a genius for doubt, if we may judge from appearances at all, that the Creator smiled his sweetest smile, imaging all things beautiful in a yearning desire to create a heaven upon earth for his children, and said, while he continued to smile, "It is very good." What marvel of coloring in this sky of blue and shore of green and sea of opal, with its far-stretching border of pearl grey! What breezes blow here, and birds sing here, and "boundless contiguities of shade" embrace themselves in a never-ending rapture of repose here! How that spectacular host that shuts cloud-land from our view, rank upon rank, flash by like stately argosies bearing golden fleece, as they roll in transformational splendor seaward or sunset-ward! Was there ever such a delicious problem in the most ancient of sciences as the union of half-circle and uncompounded curve where the verdant shore blends with the shell-strewn beach? What lignum-vitæ and arbor-vitæ, of what innumerable species—including among the former ancestral water-oaks and magnolias—crowd each other in a race to the water's edge, and stand there in serried ranks to mark the spot where "man's control stops!" If anything could be more beautiful than these idyllic sylvan splendors, where birds sing madrigals all day long, and south breezes sigh amorous strains from morn to eve, it surely must be those ocean pastures beyond, where just now the lowing herds of Neptune are disporting themselves, and which presently will become a speckless mirror to contain the glories of a rare tropical sky; or yet again, with sudden fury will lift their voices to prolonged thunder, and assail the firmament with the order and discipline of veterans, "rolling upon the foe."

Yonder, just where the pale crest of waters is obscured by the haze of the descending horizon, is Ship Island, with its delicate forest-fringe suggestive of Elysia or Utica, or anything of that sort, while half a league westward a fleet of a dozen sail are dimly outlined against the ocean firmament, showing where the deep sea channel ends, and drawn up in order of sea battle awaiting their cargoes. It is said that no sea is richer in aquatic produce than that which mirrors the Almighty's form along this coast, and this we can readily believe who have fished in its waters, or have observed the piscatorial ventures of the professional reaper, or have purchased its luscious oysters at what would be a moderate cost for removing them from the shell.

One of the first settlers here, the sainted Bro. Notice, related to the writer, many years ago, a most astonishing piece of sea-lore to the effect that when the first campers occupied the camp ground, inaugurating that series of religious meetings which has given it national fame, that there was, owing to a miscalculation which often happens as to the subject of supplies when a sudden change of base occurs, a sort of famine in the camp, and that just at the moment when it reached the period of acuteness the sea lifted up its waves and ruined fishes upon the shore in a tidal torrent that continued for hours. The fish were of the choicest edible varieties only, and were gathered with the eagerness with which the Israelites reaped the quails in the desert, and yet the supply was greater than the demand. Of this miraculous supply of fishes, there are yet many living witnesses; and, like the draught in the Sea of Galilee, it was understood by many to be a figurative adumbration of those great spiritual harvests which have annually rewarded the labors of the fishers of men who have resorted hither. Such a fish and fowl and vegetable market as this is! and that, too, in spite of the proverbial indolence of the natives, who are much what they were when Bienville landed them, perhaps, on this very spot more than two hundred years ago (another proof that climate and Edenic situation will slow the pulse of any blooded strain that Europe can pour out to us). Apropos of this allusion, it is said that Bienville and Iberville, in the hope of obtaining supplies for their Biloxi colony, several times represented it to be on the point of starvation—a plea which was as often silenced by their royal purveyors, with the statement that by all accounts of fact and rumor, which had reached them concerning the newly discovered land of fruits and flowers, many of them indorsed by the beggars themselves, such an occurrence would be a physical impossibility.

But having said this, we wish to add that this is one of the Edens which man has not marred. Just as much art as will adorn nature has been lavished upon it, and no more. Just as much ethical virtue as the gospel contains has been employed to regulate its community, and no more, and no less. Here is as near a blending of the ideal and practical in human government as the world, perhaps, contains. If a man or woman or child is unhappy here, it is for much the same cause that heaven would prove an intolerable bore to them if they should, by chance, be transported thither. But let me pause, before reaching prolixity, to add an item of news, and run to your readers that the season has fairly begun here, each day bringing accessions to the community, and many being looked ahead, while the consensus of the prophets who, being abroad, are much honored, is to the effect that the approaching camp-meeting exercises will experience a greater popular overflow than for years.

What an unfortunate predicament for a sovereign State to be absolutely dominated by a close corporation of gamblers—men who carry on the most insidious and corrupting form of gambling known to the world, the kind that robs the laborer and house servant of their hardly earned wages, and offers to pay the state a million dollars a year for the privilege! It is the only commonwealth in this broad land where the Lottery is tolerated, and the Democrats have 102 majority in the legislature. We sincerely wish, as do many decent Democrats in Louisiana, that the Lottery may be defeated; but so corrupt is party management in that State, largely through the baneful influence of this Lottery fungus, there is scarcely a hope that it can be done.—Baltimore American.

THE HEM OF THE GARMENT.

BY CARL SPENCER.

He walks in the earth and the heaven,
The Lord in his raiment bright;
His robe is crimson at even,
It is gold in the morning light.
And it trails in the dusky mountains
With a silver fringe at night.

High over the people thronging
Is the light of his pure, calm face;
Can the uttermost need and longing
Come fronting that awful place?
But to touch the beautiful garment
Is a comfort and a grace.

The tender sweep of the grasses
Is smoothing away the smart;
And the light, soft wind that passes
Is a balm to the very heart.
Only the hem of his garment—
But I kiss it for my part!

The seamless blue and the border,
Where the earth and the heaven meet,
And the colors in mystic order
In the broideries round his feet;
It is but the hem of his garment,
But virtue is there complete!

He turns, and I am not hidden,
And he smiles and blesses low;
Did the gift come all unbidden?
—O, to think he would not know,
(Through even the hem of his garment)
It was faith that touched him so!

Methodism on the Gulf Coast.

Neither the coast of California nor the shores of Maine present a more heterogenous population than that of the Gulf coast—Saxon, German, Frenchman, Spaniard, Russian, Mexican, Canadian, West Indian, Chinaman, together with the Anglo-American and Africo-American—all insisting on the use of his own social customs and religion.

Most all sects of the Christian religion are represented in the population. Roman Catholics are by far the most numerous, and then follows the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Lutheran, Episcopal, Campbellite, Mormon, Quakers; but by far the greater number of the people belong to the large society of which Satan is at the head.

Many of us are really proud that we are the subjects of the "holy Pope," or followers of Luther, Calvin, Theodore, Wesley or Campbell, but to follow Christ is out of order just now! The Catholic Church furnishes the code that regulates the morals for us. Dancing is the besetting sin. It is used in all its forms, from the "hoodlum breakdown" to the dude "hug-me-tite." It is used for the "tough's" entertainment and the church's support. It is the essence of all amusements and the wind-up of all entertainments. The evil of drunkenness is not less. There is a bar-room for every two hundred of the population. The drinking habit reaches the women as well as the men. Plenty of opportunities for gambling are offered—cards, pool-rooms, rattles and boat races. Women are no less fond of such than men; some of them passing for Methodists have given rattles.

The Sunday excursions, given by the Louisville and Nashville road, render it impossible to retain a congregation at the morning services. They pour into the towns a lot of men, women, children and dogs, who go through the streets with guns and fishing-tackle; all to the extreme annoyance of the good people of the town. These excursionists are going out to spend the Sabbath in hunting and fishing.

It is in the face of all this, and much more, that the Methodist Church is trying to gain a footing. But I am persuaded that our attack has been too weak—too weak because we could not well help ourselves; we could not help ourselves because we did not have the force. All church enterprises here are a half-century behind other improvements.

Bay St. Louis, with a population of 3,000 or more, with a number of residences that cost from ten to fifteen thousand dollars, has a Methodist Church worth about $600, and with no parsonage.

Biloxi has a population of 3,500, with many magnificent residences and a public-school building worth fifteen thousand dollars and a Methodist Church worth about four hundred dollars. Ocean Springs and Scranton are just about up to this standard.

Devout worshipers could enjoy the services in such places, but those who would go out to be entertained would like to find a church with a better exterior.

But what is the class of Methodist preachers sent to these difficult places. A good class of the kind; but what is the kind? Three of our pastors on the coast were admitted into the Conference last December, and the fourth is not a member of the Conference. Dr. Harmon is the only pastor of experience (Bro. Carley and Moss Point do not belong to this discussion).

Of course, the preached gospel always has power, and will cause men to listen; but it is a very simple story that we boys can tell. Take from the preaching the charm of the gospel, and it would take the eloquence of Munsey, the reasoning of Joseph Drake, the humor and simplicity of Sam Jones to command attention.

But you ask, "Have you no good people?" Yes, some as good as the country affords. As a class, the people are remarkably liberal. They are neighborly and generous. Some defend the cross of Christ with precept and example. They have religion and enjoy it. But a general criticism that may be passed is. They use too much economy toward the church.

Treatment: Let the Conference make a bold attack. Send some of the best and most experienced men of the Conference here. Let Methodists, with a surplus, help to erect better churches and build parsonages. And lot what Methodists we have here watch and pray.

Vanderbilt Scholarships for Young Preachers.

Among the wise acts of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University is the encouragement given to higher ministerial education by establishing a number of free scholarships in the Biblical Department of the University. These scholarships yield one hundred dollars each, which, in addition to free tuition and room rent, will pay the cost of board and entrance fees for the scholastic year. They are limited to college graduates. The theological course of study at the Vanderbilt is thus placed within easy reach of the large number of young ministers of the church who may desire to enjoy and profit by the superior advantages offered here to all who are preparing for the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The College of Bishops, as members of the Board of Trust, are in a special and important sense the supervisors of this department of the University. There were graduates from twenty-two Southern colleges and universities among the theological students of the University during the scholastic year just ended. These scholarships are open alike to students from all the Conferences of the church.

FREE SCHOLARSHIPS IN THE BIBLICAL DEPARTMENT OF VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.

The Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University have established in connection with the Biblical Department eighteen free scholarships, yielding each one hundred dollars per annum, to be awarded annually to students pursuing the full theological course of study, and subject to the following conditions of award:

(1) The applicant must be a college graduate, and the application should be accompanied by the endorsement of the faculty of the college or university at which he has graduated, recommending him as a suitable person in character and scholarship to be admitted into the Biblical Department of the University, and to receive one of these scholarships.

(2) The applicant must give evidence that he needs the assistance sought to enable him to prosecute his studies in preparation for the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

(3) The scholarships for 1890-91 will be awarded by the theological faculty, not later than August 15, 1890, to those applicants who shall give the best evidence of high standing in their collegiate studies. As, therefore, they are to be awarded on merit of scholarship, it is desirable that the recommendations of the college faculties accompanying the applications should state the standing of the applicant in his college course.

(4) Worthy applicants who fail to receive a scholarship the first year, may yet receive aid from the Ministerial Loan Fund of the Biblical Department, sufficient to meet the cost of board in Wesley Hall, and may, if their class standing justifies it, receive a free scholarship for their second (or middle) year in the theological course.

(5) Applications for scholarships for 1890-91 should be sent in to the dean of the Biblical Department by August 1, 1890. For catalogue and other information, address

Port Gibson Commencement.

Port Gibson Female College has just closed a most excellent year; every phase of its life and work is bright with abundant promise of future advancement. During the year ten have graduated—I would suppose the largest number that ever graduated in its halls in one year. On Sunday, June 15, the commencement sermon was preached by that well-known divine, Dr. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg, and, from reports, he was at his best. The closing exercises of the commencement were held on Monday and Tuesday following. The exercises were very interesting and entertaining. I thought the selection of their essays were unique and beautiful. "In Search of a Vacation," by Miss Katie Drake; "Sorrows Remembered Sweeten Present Joy," by Miss Emma Bradley; "Light, Light, More Light," by Miss Katharine Buck; "The Daughters of Mississippi—Their Obligations to Their State," by Miss Mary Ethel Mounger; "Class Historian and Prophet," by Miss Kate Millsaps; "The Darkest Hour of the Night is Just before the Dawn," by Miss Mallie Kaufman; "The Child is a Woman: The Book May Close Over, for All the Lessons Are Said," by Miss Nora Foote; "Woman's Influence," by Miss Ella Reid; "I Wish and I Wish That the Spring Would Go Faster, Nor Long Summer Bide So Late," by Miss Fannie Person; "The Past a Dream, the Future a Phantom," by Miss Mallie Fulkerson. May these young ladies go forth with their lamps trimmed and burning!

The Rev. E. H. Mounger conferred the degrees with a few appropriate remarks; then Dr. C. K Marshall amused the audience with a short humorous address. The exhibition of art, China painting and embroidery was large and beautiful, creditable to any college. The Board of Trustees elected Miss M. E. Compton president of the college—a lady in every way qualified for the important position; has had a long experience in school work, besides possessing natural endowments. She intends this summer to go to Chicago, and attend the Chautauqua, and study the late method of teaching, and I believe she will leave nothing undone to make the college equal to any female college in the State. Yet this college is not without its needs. Buildings need repairing—say nothing of enlarging them. Repairing is a necessity at the present time.

Meridian, Whitworth and Centenary Colleges have had agents in the field from time to time. Millsaps College has now several agents in the field, and bulletins are in the papers from week to week, calling to duty, which is right and proper. But what have we done for Port Gibson Female College? I don't remember of this college ever having an agent in the field. Has this college no friends? If you wish to inform yourself as to the needs of this college, I refer you to the Board of Trustees, to the Rev. E. H. Mounger, and Dr. C. K. Marshall. And now, who will give five or ten thousand dollars on conditions that an equal amount be raised by the people?

Port Gibson is a delightful town on the L., N. O. and T. R. R. (Valley Route.) The location of the college is healthy. I was informed that a physician had not been in the college during the past session.

We recommend the president, the college to the liberality and prayers of the church, and urge upon the friends of this college to come forward and help.

This school opens on September 16, 1890.

Mansfield Female College.

REPORT OF VISITING COMMITTEE.

The friends of this old and honored institution will be glad to hear that it has just closed a prosperous year. This, the second year of President McVoy's administration, has witnessed an increased attendance of boarders, more pupils, and a larger number of graduates than last year. Twelve bright and promising young ladies received diplomas. Results indicated that in all departments painstaking and thorough work had been done. In deportment, the pupils had received an unusually high mark. It was a general remark that no better class of girls had ever occupied its halls. The scholarship grade through the year, and especially on final examination, was remarkably good. Music, both vocal and instrumental, showed very thorough training under the competent and careful hand of Mrs. Harding, and the art display was captivating to everyone.

It is not the intention of this report to give a full account of the commencement exercises. It is enough to say that the tasteful and elaborate programs were highly interesting to the large and intelligent audiences. The contestants for medals and prizes were a credit to themselves and to the institution. The exercises of the alumnæ anniversary were attended with a spirit both pathetic and inspiring; pathetic as they recalled the scenes of former years, and inspiring as they furnished the proof of the successful labors of the past history of the college. The young ladies' graduating essays, in the main, showed originality of thought and a hopeful freedom from the traditional sentimentalism of such occasions. The Hon. E. E. Kidd, of Ruston, La., the commencement orator, spoke fervently and patriotically of the preparation for life-work. The baccalaureate of President McVoy had in it the ring both of earnestness and eloquence.

It was the pleasure of your committee to meet with the Board of Managers, and to witness their interest and care in all the details of the work and needs of the college. The rents accruing are faithfully applied to insurance and repairs. There has recently been erected and furnished a neat preparatory building. But further repairs on the main building are needed, and a new and modern session hall is in great demand.

Let Methodists of Louisiana more than ever rally to this old institution. It is worthy of their support and patronage. The names of many of the honored daughters of Louisiana are upon its alumnæ rolls, and many more are destined to have a place there, if the Methodists of the State will do their duty. J. W. MEDLOCK,

For Committee.

MINDEN, LA., June 20, 1890.

P. S.—It was not my privilege to hear the commencement sermon by Rev. J. A. Parker; but it was well spoken of; and also his sermon in the evening before the Young Ladies' Christian Association. All hands regretted the non-appearance of Rev. F. S. Parker, who had been assigned to duty on the program. J. W. M.

Grenada Collegiate Institute.

We have just had a delightful reunion of Methodist preachers at the commencement of the Grenada Collegiate Female Institute, of the North Mississippi Conference. Five of our presiding elders were present, and pastors and visitors too numerous to mention.

The commencement sermon was preached on Sunday, June 16, by the Rev. J. B. Stone, presiding elder of the Holly Springs district. The alumnæ met on Monday, and, after the reading of a number of interesting essays, were addressed by the Hon. W. C. McLane.

On Tuesday, after the graduates had read very excellent essays, they were addressed by Dr. R. W. Jones, of our State University, and it was certainly the best of many good things to which we listened on this occasion.

As one of the Visiting Committee, I was received by the Rev. T. J. Newell, A. M., the president, and given free access to all the papers and everything else which it was necessary for me to have to learn all about the work done in this institution, requesting me to investigate carefully, which I did to the best of my ability. I take great pleasure in stating to the friends of our Conference college that I found everything in good condition. The building is superb, and cost forty-seven thousand dollars, and is in good repair; ample room for eighty boarding pupils in good rooms of open grates, good fresh water thrown by an engine to every part of the building, the table furnished with an abundance of just such food as the president, his family and visitors have to eat. All this, including washing and light, for twelve dollars per month. The building is well located on a beautiful lot of four acres of ground which would now sell, without the house, for as much as this property has cost our church. The health of the institution has been remarkably good during the past year; the entire drug bill has been only about nine dollars.

I was invited to attend the meetings held by the Board of Trustees, and I listened to them carefully while they canvassed everything which they thought would be of interest to the institution, giving attention to every floating rumor which might affect the prosperity of the school.

One fact was made prominent, and admitted by all, that work done here is well done. To graduate in the G. C. F. I. means something.

We cordially invite those who have daughters to educate, to come and see for themselves, bring them here on September 9, next, and on the evening of the tenth you can listen to an addresses delivered for the benefit of the institution by Dr. Black and Bishop Galloway, which is to be the first of twenty by distinguished men during lectures the next scholastic year.

The hospitalities of the good people of Grenada so abounded toward us, that our hearts were filled with gratitude and a strong desire to return again. J. W. HONNOLL.

Commencement Exercises of the Wesleyan Female Institute.

The annual commencement exercises of the Wesleyan Female Institute, Staunton, Va., of which Rev. W. A. Harris, D. D., is president, continued through the evening of five successive days.

The first evening the Beethoven Musical Society held its final exercises. The second evening occurred the final celebration of the Lee and Jackson Literary Society; the annual address being delivered by Rev. J. W. Shoaff, of Baltimore. In connection with these exercises there was, under the direction of Prof. J. D. Tood, a delsarte drill in elocution. This is a new feature in the exercises of commencements, and evinced the thorough training of the young ladies in elocution. The third day, Saturday, the public were entertained by an exhibition in art. The specimens indicated the great attention paid to this department in this school.

On Sunday, June 1, at eleven A. M., the commencement sermon was preached by the Rev. W. J. Young, of Alexandria, Va. The same speaker, in the evening, delivered the annual address before the Young Ladies' Christian Association.

On the fourth evening, at eight P. M., occurred the final soiree of vocal and instrumental music. The music on this occasion sustained the high reputation which the school has for so long enjoyed for its superior advantages in this department. On the fifth evening, Tuesday, at eight P. M., the final closing exercises took place. The distinctions, diplomas and medals were awarded by Prof. Leonidas Poyntz. Only three medals were awarded in the entire school; the recipients of these honors being, respectively, Misses Bertha Rodgers, of Baltimore; Anna McMullan, of Virginia, and Maggie Bowen, of Virginia. The degree of Batchelor of Arts was conferred on the following pupils: Misses Annie Cornelson, of South Carolina; Delta McLaurin, of Mississippi; Houston Mitchell, of Mississippi; Bessie Riddell, of Kentucky; Edna Woods, of Mississippi, and Mittie Woods, of Mississippi.

The president conferred the following diplomas or the degree of Master of Arts on the following young ladies: Misses Anna McMullan, of Virginia; Anna Davis, of Texas; Gertie Stewart, of West Virginia; Mabel Bergman, of Kentucky; Emma Cornelson, of North Carolina; Laura Fletcher, of Maryland; Brenda Earheart, of Virginia, and Willie Colbert, of Mississippi.

This closed one of the most interesting and impressive commencements in the history of this time-honored school. Under divine blessings, the last session was one of unusual prosperity, both in numbers and in the progress of its pupils. The school was attended by about 135 boarding pupils from various States in the Union. In the early part of the session every available place was filled, and the outlook of this seat of Christian learning is bright and promising.

Idolatry Introduced, and Some Other Things.

MR. EDITOR: You see from the field I have given myself that I have plenty of room to roam; but I hope to confine myself to a few points.

"Idolatry," says Mr. Webster, is of two kinds: 1. The worship of images, etc., made with hands; and, 2. Of the heavenly bodies. It is of the first kind I wish to write. There is a species of idol worship introduced in these parts that is rather novel, and has produced something of a sensation. A Baptist minister, preaching on the subject of baptism, wishing to demonstrate the mode beyond controversy, pulled from his pocket a naked doll, and jumping it along on the pulpit board to a glass of water, put his fingers into the water, and, dropping a few drops upon its head, exclaimed, "That is not baptism;" then, pouring a little upon it, said, "That is not baptism;" then, picking it up, put it in feet foremost, but the water was not deep enough to put it under; so he doubled it up, and as he did so, he broke its back (poor thing!); he immersed it, and exclaimed, "Now, that is baptism."

Now, Mr. Editor, what think you? Is not that pure idolatry? I do not believe the Baptist denomination will approve of that minister's course; but to whom is he responsible, and what will they do with him about it?

Another point is this: I attended a Methodist college commencement lately. I thought it was customary to invite Methodist ministers to the rostrum. There was no such invitation extended that I heard. Some were upon the rostrum; whether by special invitation or not, I know not; others were not there, I know. I can not complain myself. I have always received more attention than I deserved; but there was a minister present that received but little attention, and there were five or six girls from the town in which he lived attending that school. If it were not for these ministers of Jesus Christ, there is not a Conference school that could exist for a year.

Another point: I heard a Methodist preacher say he was invited by the Alumni Association of a great university to deliver the address. That preacher accepted, paid his own railroad fare and hotel bill, which amounted to $60, and that, too, on a salary of $600; and there was never a word said to him about it. That is worse than a Chinaman, who, when he invites you to partake of his hospitality, thinks it is the height of impoliteness for you to accept. Such heathenism among Christians, so called, ought to be rebuked. P. A. JOHNSTON.

Water Valley, Miss.

The blessed Lord has abundantly blessed us at Wood Street Church, Water Valley. We began services on Tuesday evening, May 27, and closed on the evening of June 9. Bro. George S. Inge was with us nearly all the time, preaching with real power, both in regard to matter and manner. He is (or will be) a great blessing to any community. Bros. J. W. Price, P. E.; H. C. Morehead and O. L. Savage did good work. The meeting resulted in sixty-one accessions on profession of faith to our church; between seventy and eighty professions. Our kind and good people are in harmony, and are admirably working to advance all the interests of Christ, our Savior.

BOOKS.

THE BOOK AND ITS THEME. By Rev. L. L. Pickett. With an introduction by Bishop Key. Southern Methodist Publishing House. Price, $1.

This treatise on the much traversed theme of sanctification, by a young author, evinces both talent and piety. He has evidently given thorough study to his subject, and presents some new views of old doctrine and urges some strenuous proofs in reply to objections to the "second blessing" theory of sanctification. The chapters on Living and Dying Witnesses, and that on Tobacco are particularly good, though in the instance of the latter the tendency to add proof to proof is apparently too marked. The book contains two chapters on entire sanctification, by Rev. Dr. Carradine, which originally appeared in the columns of this paper and were much applauded by the advocates of this theory. They furnish a fitting conclusion to Bro. Pickett's volume and will add to its sale.

THE MEMORIAL VOLUME OF JEFFERSON DAVIS. By J. William Jones, D. D. B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va., publishers.

This book of nearly seven hundred pages of Jeff Davis' memorabilia, edited by Dr. Jones, of Atlanta, is a truly valuable contribution to the literature of the subject. It will be hailed with pleasure by many who are on the qui vive for some authoritative treatise that will finally set at rest much discussion affecting Mr. Davis' name and fame. The question, "Was Davis a Traitor?" is discussed at length and most satisfactorily disposed of. There are several splendid full-page illustrations. The volume has the indorsement of Mrs. Davis, and will, doubtless, have a large sale and become a standard amid the much that has been and will be written on the subject.

AN INTENSE LIFE. A Sketch of the Life and Work of Rev. Andrew T. Pratt, M. D. By George F. Herrick. F. H. Revel, New York and Chicago. Price, fifty cents.

This is an interesting sketch of a man who spent twenty years in Turkey as a missionary of the A. B. C. F. M. It shows what a consecrated man can do. It shows how native ability and acquired resources can all be subordinated to the great work of missions. The work that Dr. Pratt accomplished in that twenty years is simply wonderful, and it is all told in a little book of eighty-three pages.

DOG'S CROSS. By Ruth Argyle. Sunday-school Department, Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Barbee and Smith, agents. Price, sixty cents.

This is a well-written story and ought to please all the boys and girls. It is the story of a boy who saved his mother from a life of drunkenness. We commend it to all our young people.

PERIODICALS.

—CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE, for July, has several serial and several complete stories, and many miscellaneous papers. This is a cheap monthly for $1 50 a year. Cassell Publishing Company, New York.

—ST. NICHOLAS, for July, comes heavily laden with all sorts and sizes of good things in prose and poetry and pictures. This number will afford our young people much entertainment and instruction during the warm month of July. Century Company, Union Square, New York. Price, $3.

—WIDE AWAKE, for July, is full of baseball, Independence celebrations, and patriotic reminiscences. So many of the articles of this number are first-class that we think it invidious to point particularly to any, and, therefore, advise our young friends to get the number and read for themselves. D. Lothrop Company, Boston. Price, $2 40.

—THE CHAUTAUQUAN, for July, has its usual 140 pages of first-class reading matter. H. H. Boyeseu contributes a novelette entitled, The Golden Calf; Dr. Oswald writes on, How to Keep Summer Health; Edward Hale, How to Conduct a Round Table. The Editor's Outlook has: The Advancement of Women, The Trend of Religious Thought, and Common-Sense Benevolence. Dr. Theodore Flood, Meadville, Pa. Price, $2 a year.

—OUR DAY, for June, comes late, but is well laden. New Conspiracies of Ultra-Montanism in Germany, is by Robert Ferguson; Speaker Reed discusses National Remedies for Nullification; Anthony Comstock contributes a ringing article on The Louisiana Lottery Octopus. Besides these, there are Book Notices, Questions to Specialists, Vital Points of Expert Opinion, and Editorial Notes. Our Day Publishing Company, Boston. Price, $2 50.

—THE MISSIONARY REVIEW OF THE WORLD, for July, opens with an interesting article from Dr. Pierson on the McAll Mission, the fruit of a personal visitation and inspection during the month of May. Prof. Hulbert, of Korea, has a well-written paper on the Science of Missions. Dr. Laurie discusses the Law of Advance in Missions in a wise and able manner. Dr. Storrow gives the third paper on Foreign Missions in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries—a concise and valuable historical series, to be finished in the next number. Dr. Pierson discusses the Lack of Information as the main cause of the little interest manifested in foreign missions. The seven departments are replete with intelligence, correspondence, international papers, monthly concert matters, editorial notes, and the latest news from the world-field, of varied interest and great attractiveness, wisely and intelligently edited, making a superb number.

Published by Funk and Wagnalls, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York. Two dollars per year; in clubs of ten, $1 50. Specimen numbers, 20 cents.

Sunday-School Lesson.

(Hurlburt and Simpson's Lesson Commentary, Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

LESSON II.—July 13.

THE GREAT SUPPER.

Luke xiv, 15-24.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God.—Luke xiv, 15.

TIME AND PLACE were the same as those of the last lesson.

15. When one of them that sat with him heard these things, he said, Blessed is he that shall eat bread—The form of the exclamation was obviously determined by the words which our Lord had just spoken. The speaker thought that he was echoing our Lord's teaching, not, perhaps, without some touch of the temper with leads men to look on that teaching as having its fulfillment not in the actual present, but in the far-off future. Shall eat bread in the kingdom of God—Almost the same words occur in Rev. xix, 9. The Jews connected the advent of the Messianic kingdom with banquets of food more delicious than manna, the flesh of Leviathan, and the bird Bar Juchne.

16. In reply Jesus virtually says: Even so; great is that blessedness; but, notwithstanding its richness and glory, mark ye how men trent the offer of it when made to themselves, and pressed never so tenderly and urgently upon their acceptance. A certain man made a great supper. And bade many—The sequel determines the primary application of the word to the Jewish people. But it need hardly be said that it admits of manifold secondary, or even tertiary, applications through the whole history of the many churches of Christendom.

17. Sent his servant at supper-time—This is still a custom in the East. The message of the servant corresponds to the ministry of John the Baptist and of Jesus himself. The servant stands in this parable as the representative of the whole order of prophets and apostles; of all who, like the Baptist and the Twelve, had been sent to invite men to the kingdom. The "time of supper" is, in the primary application, the time of our Lord's coming, when the kingdom of heaven was first proclaimed as nigh at hand. All things—pardon, peace, blessedness—were now ready for those who would accept them. The words implied that the kingdom was not, as the words of the beatitude implied, still in the future, but had indeed come nigh to men. If a sheikh, bey, or emeer invites, he always sends a servant to call you at the proper time. This servant often repeats the very formula mentioned in Luke xiv, 17: Come, for the supper is ready. "Repent ye; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." This richly instructive parable was suggested by a chance remark on the blessedness of eating bread in God's kingdom. Eating bread there implies being at home in that kingdom—being one of its favored subjects, made welcome to its pure felicities.

18. To make excuse—"To beg off" would, perhaps, be too colloquial, but it exactly expresses the force of the Greek verb. I have bought a piece of ground—The Greek noun implies a little more than the English—Better, perhaps, a farm; and the tense in each case is strictly one in which a man naturally speaks of the immediate past—"I bought but now." Have me excused—The original is, "Consider me as having been excused." The very form of expression involves the consciousness that his excuse of necessity was merely as excuse. There is, too, an emphasis on the me—it may be the duty of others to go: I am an exception.

19. Five yoke of oxen—The number was one which came within the reach of any peasant farmer of moderate competence. I go to prove them—The second has not even the decency to plead any necessity. He merely says, "I am going to test my oxen," and implies "My will is sufficent ransom."

20. I have married a wife—It may be noted that the law of Moses allowed men to plead this, and the building of a house, or planting of a vineyard, as a ground for exemption from military service. The sin of the invited guests was that they treated the invitation to the feast as though it were as burdensome as a military conscription. Men are invited to the higest spiritual blessings, and they look askance at the invitation, as though it called them to what was simply a weariness to the flesh, and "beg off" under a hundred miserable pretense. I can not—A newly-married man had special indulgence allowed him. See Deut. xxiv, 5. The man who had the most plausible excuse returned the surliest and most peremptory answer.

21. That servant came and showed his lord these things—We have here a shadow of the complaints and lamentations of our Lord over the stiff-necked obstinacy of the Jews in rejecting him. The master of the house being angry—The element of righteous indignation is more strongly emphasized in the analogous parable of Matt. xxii, 6, 7, where the mere apathy of those who were invited passes into scornful outrage. The streets and lanes—In the application of the parable these represent the by-ways of Jewish life—the suburbs and the wretched courts and alleys, which no scribe deigned to enter, and which lay entirely outside the notice and the functions of the priesthood. "The poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind" are publicans and sinners and harlots and men of violence, who obeyed the summons and pressed eagerly into the kingdom. The repetition of the same four adjectives as had been used in verse 13 is singularly suggestive. Our Lord was following, in the spiritual feast of his kingdom, the very rule which he had given for those who made great feasts on earth—was inviting those whom the recognized religious teachers did not care to invite. This corresponds to the call of the publicans, sinners, and harlots—the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

22. Lord, it is done—Rejected by the guests first invited, the servant has already, of himself, done what the Lord here bids him; so that he can at once reply to this command, "It is done."

23. The highways and hedges—In the framework of the parable this points to a yet lower class of the population of an eastern country—to the tramps and the squatters who had no home, and who were content to sleep under the shelter of a hedge or fence. In the application of the parable the men thus brought in can hardly be any other than the wanderers of the outlying Gentile world, or the pariahs of social life on whom even the publicans looked down with scorn. Compel them to come in—By such moral suasion as that described in II. Tim. iv, 2. The compulsion wanted is that used by Paul the apostle, not by Saul the inquisitor. The compulsion is merciful, not sanguinary; it is a compulsion to inward acceptance, not to outward conformity; it is employed to overcome the humble despair of the penitent, not the proud resistance of the heretic. Otherwise it would have been applied, not to the poor suffering outcast, but to the haughty and privileged persons who had refused the first invitation. That my house may be filled—It is obvious that we can not introduce space-limits into the interpretation of the parable. The gates of the Father's house are open for evermore, and in its "many mansions" (John xiv, 2) there is, and ever will be, room for all who come. "May be filled"—a very strong word; properly of loading a ship.

24. For I say unto you...none of those men which were bidden, shall taste of my supper—It must be remembered that Jesus had now been distinctly and deliberately rejected at Nazareth and Jerusalem; in Judea, Samaria; Galilee, and Perea. I think, with Stier, that our Lord here speaks in his own Person: unto you will it no circumstance in the parable; for the householder and the servant are alone: the guests are not present. He speaks with his usual, "For I say unto you," to the company present: and, half continuing the parable, half expounding it, substitutes himself for the master of the feast, leaving it hardly doubtful who those men which were hidden are.

Missionary.

Our Home Mission.

How often we hear the words, I believe in home missions. While I sincerely hope the sister who uses those words does not mean to imply she does not believe in foreign missions, I must confess I think even a casual survey of the elements of this great country of ours will convince anyone of the necessity for believing in home missions, and I would urge the still greater necessity for actively aiding the home missions in which you believe.

The way is open for you to render this aid in bringing you own land to Christ. A home mission society organized for this purpose has for four years sought your sympathy and cooperation. True it does not bear the name of "missions." Had it been called, "Our Home Mission," instead of Woman's Department of Church Extension, doubtless you would more readily have taken hold of the idea that it is our home mission. Knowing however, that the word "mission" means, in a Christian sense, the sending of the gospel, and that extending the bounds of our church is simply enabling it to send the gospel to the places where it is needed in our own country, we called our home work the "Woman's Department of Church Extension."

Perhaps the word "missions" has such a hold upon your mind and heart, you wish we had held fast to the sacred enthusiasm that centers around that word, and you may be right. But the fact remains, dear sister, that those of you who have been enlisted under this name, through the Woman's Department of Church Extension, have for three years been doing home mission work; and those who have stood aloof because of a name have missed an opportunity to help that in which they believe.

We have aided in sending men to preach the gospel to the heathen, wicked, and ignorant in our home land. We have contributed nearly three thousand to send the gospel to the Indians—the race with a greatest claim upon the Christians of this country, and many of whom are still in such a state of heathenism, that one of our Bishops declared the sight of them "ought to stir the missionary fire of the church everywhere." We have given as largely to send the gospel to others parts of the great West where, though it be in our own country, the heathen from every part of the globe may be found. We have sent the gospel into the waste places in our old Conferences, into the mountains to the depraved and ignorant. How have we done this? By giving what we were assured were the "most immediate and imperative need"—homes.

Dr. John, secretary of the Mission Board, calls the parsonage we built among the wild tribes, "the anchor for our mission work in that new field," and says of our organization: "it is a most important branch of missionary enterprise. No movement inaugurated by our church should command a deeper interest in the hearts of our people."

We have planted many anchors in the West where, but for the home secured by our society, the missionary could not have remained; and in the older Conferences we have lent a helping hand to make permanent the preaching of the gospel to the poor, the ignorant, and the ungodly.

Personally, through our Visiting Committees, as missionaries at home, we have sought out the suffering, the poor, the stranger; and tried as Bible readers to carry the gospel into the homes of those around us. Is not this home mission work in its completest sense? And should not everyone who believes in home missions enter our ranks, and go forward with us in the great struggle to bring our own country to Christ? It has been said, "Christianize America, and all the world will be brought to Christ." I know not if that be true; but we know that within the bounds of the vast expanse of territory we, with pride, call "our great country" may be found many nations that know not God.

How many remember that Alaska is a part of "our country," or have read of the heathen practices among the natives there? Slavery of women, infanticide, the burning of the widow on the funeral pile—or the partial burning, which is worse, and to which she is forced while her shrieks are drowned by the beating of drums—all these are to be found there in their loathsome reality. One sickens in reading the details, and wonders can these creatures have human souls. Yes, degraded souls, buried in sin; but the love of Christ can reach them and bring them forth purified. But how may the knowledge of God's love reach them unless we, their country-women, will take compassion on them. God help us if we do not, for his command is upon us, yet why urge this upon you, you believe in home missions; and is not every part of your country home? But each will find in her own State such sin and degradation as should put to shame an inactive Christianity. Aye, in her own town she will find wickedness that would not be there if each Christian was fully awake to the fact that the indifference that lets the souls of others go down into perdition is criminal in the sight of God, before whose judgement-seat she shall stand side by side with that poor, depraved creature whose soul she did not think worth a thought, or the slightest sacrifice on her part.

But you believe in home missions. You believe you should help to save the heathen at your door. Then I entreat you, come and help us to do that which you believe we and you should do; for the work to be done is so great every hand is needed to help.—Woman's Dep't Ch. Ex., M. E. Church, South.

Temperance.

NOT A LOCAL QUESTION.—The original package decision will have the further important effect of elevating the temperance agitation into a national issue. It now ceases to be a local question. If prohibition be the true temperance policy, it can now be reached only by a law of Congress recognizing the validity of State laws upon the subject. But the extreme difficulty of obtaining such a law is evident. It is also questionable whether the decision does not equally affect State license laws. They are condemned under the decision as regulations of interstate commerce, which are reserved exclusively to Congress.

A congressional measure of relief to cover the whole ground must, therefore, recognize all State regulations of the traffic, whatever they now are, or may be hereafter. The decision thus gives dignity and importance to the "third party," for it is now evident that the remedy for what prohibitionists hold to be the most vital question before the country lies solely in congressional legislation. But such legislation is extremely improbable.—Harper's Weekly.

THE BREWERIES.—It is stated that $45,000,000 in gold has been invested in the purchase of some thirty breweries in America by British capitalists. We wonder whether these foreigners know what they are about. There is some reason why so many American brewers are willing to sell out at this time. We believe the latter, who are in the best position to know, are the wisest of the two. If English capitalists are not afraid of prohibition sentiment in this country, our own brewers certainly are. These breweries will not always be worth so much money, nor prove so good an investment. The time is not distant when they shall be worthless as breweries. Why are there no breweries in Kansas? Because the business does not pay where prohibitory law, like the sword of Damocles, menaces every keg of beer. What will it be when we have national prohibition? We expect to see it, and not grow so old as even a modern Methuselah, either.—Mid-Continent.

The Congressional Temperance Society at Washington is fifty-seven years old, having been organized February 26, 1833, three months before the first National Temperance Convention ever held in this country. In 1842 it adopted a new constitution on the basis of total abstinence. Its president this year is Representative Dingley, of Maine, and its vice-presidents are Senators Colquitt of Georgia, Wilson of Iowa, and Daws of Massachusetts; and Representatives Stewart of Georgia, Owen of Indiana, Taylor of Ohio, O'Donnell of Michigan, and Vance of Connecticut.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is a peculiar medicine. It is carefully prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Pipsissewa, Juniper Berries, and other well-known and valuable vegetable remedies, by a peculiar combination, proportion and process, giving to Hood's Sarsaparilla curative power not possessed by other medicines. It effects remarkable cures where other preparations fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best blood purifier before the public. It eradicates every impurity, and cures Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Boils, Pimples, all Humors, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, General Debility, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Kidney and Liver Complaints, overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, and builds up the system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Has met peculiar and unparalleled success at home. Such has become its popularity in Lowell, Mass., where it is made, that whole neighborhoods are taking it at the same time. Lowell druggists sell more of Hood's Sarsaparilla than of all other sarsaparillas or blood purifiers. Sold by druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. PUBLIC SAFETY
DEMANDS

That only honest and reliable medicines should be placed upon the market. It cannot, therefore, be stated too emphatically, nor repeated too often, that all who are in need of a genuine Blood-purifier should be sure and ask for

Ayer's

Sarsaparilla. Your life, or that of some one near and dear to you, may depend on the use of this well-approved remedy in preference to any other preparation of similar name. It is compounded of Honduras sarsaparilla (the variety most rich in curative properties), stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, and the iodides. The process of manufacture is original, skilful, scrupulously clean, and such as to secure the very best medicinal qualities of each ingredient. This medicine is not boiled nor heated, and is, therefore, not a decoction; but it is a compound extract, obtained by a method exclusively our own, of the best and most powerful alteratives, tonics, and diuretics known to pharmacy. For the last forty years, Ayer's has been the standard blood-purifier of the world—no other approaching it in popular confidence or universal demand. Its formula is approved by the leading physicians and druggists. Being pure and highly concentrated, it is the most economical of any possible blood medicine. Every purchaser of Sarsaparilla should insist upon having this preparation and see that each bottle bears the well-known name of

Sarsaparilla

J. C. Ayer & Co.,
Lowell, Mass.

In every quarter of the globe Ayer's Sarsaparilla is proved to be the best remedy for all diseases of the blood. Lowell druggists unite in testifying to the superior excellence of this medicine and to its great popularity in the city of its manufacture.

"An Extra-Cent-a-Day Band."

The Missionary Review, for July, contains a short letter, giving an account of a new enterprise for raising extra missionary money. The editor of the Review says: "The plan is simple, feasible, easily worked and affords the possibility of grand results." We are in favor of just that sort of a plan. What we want, what we work and pray for, is "grand results" in missionary endeavor and enterprise. Christ has been waiting nearly nineteen hundred years for the church to put him in possession of his lawful inheritance, the earth.

If this "simple, feasible and easily worked plan" will help to that "grand result," then every Christian should adopt the plan, every church should adopt it and everybody should work it for all it is worth. Here is the plan as given in the July Missionary Review:

To the Editor of the Missionary Review of the World.

In view of the many present splendid opportunities and pressing needs for mission work, and in remembrance of the Lord's command to preach the gospel to every creature, an Extra-Cent-a-Day Band was formed at the church of which the writer is connected—the Congregational, Newton Centre, Mass.—at the missionary concert in November last. Our members give one extra cent a day for missionary purposes. We started with about 40 members, and have now 111. We shall give in a year, with our present membership, $405 15, which will practically all be extra. We did not wish to interfere with other ways of giving, and, therefore, we give but an extra cent, and simple ways were suggested for saving that small amount. Our band has but one officer, a treasurer (though the addition of a president would give the organization more form) who reminds the members monthly of their dues by means of small envelopes printed:

WILL M .....

PLEASE HAND.....TO M.....

In this Envelope.

EXTRA-CENT-A-DAY BAND.

TO .....

A few members, however, pay without any reminders. A small book is kept by the treasurer, containing the members' names with space after each for entry of payments. We give one-half of our contributions to the foreign work, through our American Board, and one-half to the work in our own land, through the several home missionary societies.

With Extra-Cent-a-Day Bands everywhere doing their fullest work, supplementing the present ordinary missionary contributions, the ways and means would be amply provided, and we may be sure that the Lord of the harvest would raise up laborers in abundance.

I have pondered the Extra-Cent-a-Day Band idea for many months, and have come to believe in it enthusiastically. It is simple and practicable, within the means of almost everyone, greatly needed, and fraught with prodigious possibilities!

Let Christ's followers of every name form such bands everywhere. I hope to hear of very many, and will gladly render such help as I can to all who will address me.

S. F. WILKINS.

NEWTON CENTRE, Mass.

One cent a day extra looks like a small amount, and so it is; but, as the above writer says, it is "fraught with prodigious possibilities." For instance: if one hundred thousand of our members would give just that much extra, it would run our collections up to, at least, six hundred thousand dollars for the next fiscal year. If one-half our members would give one cent a day, next May we would have raised two millions of dollars for missions! If all our members would pay into the treasury one cent a day, then we should have four millions of dollars for missions! These are, indeed, "prodigious possibilities."

Some one will say that the one-cent-a-day business is too picayunish. That is exactly what is the matter with our church. We don't save the picayunes for the Lord. We have no system of giving. We don't give, not because we are not able to give, but because we have not adopted a system which requires us to "lay up" the Lord's money before we spend any on ourselves. Such a system, rigidly adhered to, would soon fill up our depleted treasury and gladden the hearts and lives of millions of our fellow-creatures.

Who is the reader of this paper that can not give one cent a day for missions? The publisher says there are six thousand and five hundred subscribers to this paper. According to the lowest calculation, that means sixteen thousand readers. If these sixteen thousand should give one cent a day extra until our first Conference meets, December 3, we would turn into the treasury an extra twenty-four thousand dollars! And who would feel it? The mission work would feel it. It would be like throwing the throttle-valve wide open. The work would bound forward with a movement that would jerk us all off our seats! And why not do it? This is the day of grand things. The readers of the ADVOCATE can do as grand things as any other people in the world. They have in the last three years sent two extra missionaries to the foreign fields. The readers of no other ADVOCATE ever did as much as that. Now let us do this other grand thing.

Chapter Second in Experience and Observation.

Before doing aught else, I want to beg the pardon of every presiding elder who ever had the oversight of me for my not having manifested more interest in his welfare, and for my not having done more to lighten his labors. I thank God for the preachers in this district who have given me a place in their hearts and in their prayers.

Church and parsonage building, repairing and improving is the order of the day in the Meridian district. Rev. W. B. Hines, Vossburg circuit, has a neat frame church at Pachuta, nearly completed, and another new one at Goodwater is being provided for. Bro. Hines is outstripping the boys. He is doing a grand work.

Bro. Backus, on DeKalb circuit, would not have been so far behind with his two proposed church-buildings had not the saw-mills disappointed him. He expects to make the parsonage comfortable before vacating it this year. He will leave DeKalb circuit in fine condition after four years' faithful efforts.

Bro. Chambers will have that elegant building at Stonewall ready for dedication in the early fall. The Enterprise parsonage has had two rooms added to it, and this, with the preacher's skillful paint brush, has made it the nicest parsonage in the district. Some elegant pulpit furniture has been put into the Enterprise Church, and the building otherwise improved for the reception of the District Conference. Hopewell Church, on this circuit, will soon be ceiled and probably painted. It ought to be called Smyrna, for the members are poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith and grace. God bless them!

Clarke on Lauderdale, and Ware on Marion are planning wisely, and will, no doubt, soon put their plans into execution. They are too many preaching-places on each of these circuits. Some consolidation is needed. Personal convenience must be sacrificed to the general good.

Bro. Witt had me to dedicate the church at Rose Hill, begun under N. B. Harmon four years ago and just finished. It was "set apart from all unhallowed or common uses," especially tobacco spit. I never cared to worship in a spittoon. Do not think the floor was worse stained than the floors of other churches at some other points. There were no tobacco stains in that pulpit. Bro. Witt has charge of the wealthiest circuit in the Mississippi Conference. The parsonage is to be further improved.

At Saundersville, in the bounds of Bro. Downer's charge, the church has been neatly ceiled, furnished with an organ and some hymn books (not enough), and will soon be painted. The parsonage at Ellisville is being enlarged, repaired and otherwise improved and made comfortable for the godly man and his family who now sojourn there.

On the Winchester circuit, Bro. Breland, will, no doubt, soon lead our people out of a union shanty, called Spring Hill Church, in which the Baptists have a three-fourths' interest and the Methodists one-fourth, while the government owns the very ground on which the "incarnate nightmare" stands. The thing is only valued at $100; and land can be bought close by for fifty cents an acre. I am trying to get our people out of all such entangling alliances, whether with other denominations or with Masons, grangers, etc.

On the Marion circuit we have not a clear title to a single preaching-place, and there are nine of them, with not quite four hundred members. At Lauderdale we use the upper story of a building, the lower story of which is used for a school-room, or by strolling negro minstrels, theatrical troupes or any other sort of show. It is time we had quit such folly—shame that it was ever begun!

Bro. Edgar proposes to commemorate his fourth year on Waynesboro and State Line by building a comfortable and respectable parsonage. Now, if Marion and Clarke and Union circuits will only follow these good examples! But they have at last got a bureau in the Clarke parsonage, and one room has been made comfortable in that astronomical observatory.

On the Union circuit, Bro. Tinnin has found shelter for his little family in a log-cabin, with facilities for studying meteorology, and under whose roof an umbrella is sometimes needed.

In Meridian, the brethren are astir. Our city is growing, and Methodism must keep step or drop out of line. Not only is the building of East Mississippi Female College being enlarged by adding a wing, 40 by 107 feet, two stories high, and plans being laid for further improvements; but at the last Quarterly Conference, the Rev. Dr. C. G. Andrews and Messrs. A. B. Wagner and L. P. Brown were empowered to sell the old parsonage property and procure property more eligibly located. The same committee were authorized to purchase lots in East End for a third church and parsonage. A very practical interest is being shown in the matter of a district parsonage.

The outlook is encouraging. Accessions are being reported in every charge. Our Quarterly Conference love-feasts are seasons of grace. Bro. W. W. Hopper has labored successfully at Ellisville and West End. God is with him. Three of our local preachers are working well and in co-operation with the preachers: Bro. Trotter on Clarke, Bro. Gunn on Union, and Bro. Zacharie on Ellisville circuit.

This is, indeed, "the mighty east" of Mississippi, not only in politics, but also in commerce, education and religion. Methodism is strong, numerically and financially. Our people number 6,000, and count their wealth by millions. Industries are diversified and the possibilities are glorious. If the hundreds of Methodists in this district, with from $5,000 to $50,000 (and a few worth even more), would consecrate their wealth to God and use it to his glory and the good of East Mississippi Female College, their spiritual condition would be far better than it is. May they be faithful in all things and "faithful unto death!"

T. L. MELLEN, P. E.

Letter from Aransas Pass.

In the transmission of my annual subscription for the ADVOCATE, my old Conference paper and favorite of the family, I will respond to inquiries and requests of dear friends of my own, my dear native land of Mississippi. I have found in my seventy-fifth year the Eldorado of my life's aspirations in Southwest Texas, at the now famous Aransas Pass, the assured deep-water port of the Gulf of Mexico.

I suppose there is no question as to the certainty of this realization by any unbiased mind that is in possession of all the facts of the case. I would say to all my old friends, that their true friend has found in this delightful climate all that could be desired in salubrity, in soil and productions. In an experience of over fifty years as an agriculturist and horticulturist in Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas, I have not found so genial a climate, so prolific a soil in rapid germination and development of horticultural products. In midwinter, from actual experiment, I have planted the Irish potato, and in one week it was up, and in one month it was bearing fruit for the table; the time in other latitudes that it required for germination. Cabbage, of the finest heads, weighing from ten to fifteen pounds, before Christmas. Tomatoes, melons, beans and all the most tender vegetables mature early and produce abundantly, so rapidly as to keep me astonished all the time. This is delightful to an old itinerant who luxuriates in horticultural pursuits, especially in his declining years, turned out to graze, but in the most luxuriant pasturage without being dependent upon the meagre and precarious support eked out to the worn-out itinerant. I would say for the comfort of many friends in Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas their old friend enjoys his sea-coast home with unalloyed delight, with rapturous joy in being fanned by the invigorating sea breezes and bathing in salt water flashing with phosphorescent light. It is simply delightfully refreshing day and night. No lassitude and sense of suffocation from a stagnant atmosphere producing an oppression almost intolerable. This rising young city in juxtaposition to the famous Pass is developing marvelously by the influx of capitalists from the whole country, causing the vast increase in the value of real estate that is changing hands daily at greatly advanced prices, several hundred per cent. being realized by the investors.

My family is sharing largely in these investments. I say, for the gratification of my friends everywhere, thank God for his blessing upon my household! I have endeavored to live a life of sacrifice for the cause of Christ; and in leaving all and losing all I have gained all the life that now is and the blessed hope of the life to come.

I am happy to-day in contemplation of the immortal hopes of the gospel, and hope to meet the loved ones that have preceded me to the bright and shining shore and that are on the way to the heaven of the blessed!

H. M. BOOTH.

The Incorruptibles.

As far as we know, history affords no brighter example of patriotic integrity and determined opposition to political corruption than has been recorded on its pages by the acts of our present Legislature. There is a Spartan band there, each one of whom has proved himself proof against flattery, bribery and threats. They have been beleaguered on all sides by day and by night. They have been cajoled by flattery, tempted by thousands of money and threatened with political proscription and death. Yet they stood firm. They preferred to die with the honor of Louisiana, rather than help her down to such shame and ignominy. They have won immortal honor. Their names are imperishable. When the last roll of honor shall be made up, there will be no names on it brighter and more conspicuous than the names of the little band of twenty-nine, who for six weeks stood up in the House of Representatives and resisted the encroachments of an institution which stands only as the symbol of the most unmitigated rascality the world ever saw. Here are the names:

S. P. HENRY, of Cameron, Speaker.
J. J. ALFORD, of Washington.
A. A. BATCHELOR, of Pointe Coupee.
G. W. BOLTON, of Rapides.
EUCLID BORLAND, of Orleans.
G. A. BRUTON, of Union.
OVERTON CADE, of Lafayette.
R. H. CURRY, of Bossier.
W. L. DOSS, of Morehouse.
F. J. DREYFOUS, of Orleans.
JOHN FRANKLIN, of Vernon.
J. C. GILMORE, of Orleans.
B. F. JENKINS, of DeSoto.
J. M. KENNEDY, of East Carroll.
CHAS. KILBOURNE, of East Feliciana.
J. R. LAND, of Caddo.
S. G. LAYCOCK, of East Baton Rouge.
J. A. LORET, of St. Mary.
J. M. MCCAIN, of Winn.
FRANK MARQUEZ, of Orleans.
S. F. MEEKER, of Rapides.
A. T. NELSON, of Claiborne.
H. C. NEWSOM, of St. Helena.
D. W. PIPES, of East Feliciana.
J. A. PROVOST, of Iberia.
C. W. SEALS, of Claiborne.
A. E. SOMPAYRAC, of Natchitoches.
H. P. WELLS, of Richland.
G. L. P. WREN, of Webster.

There are other names we expected to put on this "roll of honorable mention," but they "died in the last ditch." They missed immortality of honor by choosing "boodle" and immortality of shame!

The Opelousas District Conference.

This body of ministers and laymen convened in Patterson, La., June 26. Presiding Elder Miller occupied the chair, and Rev. R. S. Isbell acted as secretary. The attendance of laymen was very small, and several of the preachers were absent. Reports from all the works on the various interests of the church were made and revealed a gratifying progress. The Lord's work in the district is going forward. The preachers are in earnest, and the laity are holding up the hands of the ministers, and God is blessing their labors with good results. The congregations were large and listened attentively to the Word. Patterson surpassed itself in hospitality, entertaining the members handsomely and regretting there were so few to entertain. The editor "fared sumptuously every day," and has enjoyable memories of the occasion.

The First Battle.

The Lotteryites succeeded in passing the Lottery bill through the House by a two-thirds' majority. With all their lavish expenditure of money, they only succeeded in capturing the necessary vote by promising to amend the bill in the Senate. We have been defeated in the first battle, but we have not been driven from the field. The gallant fight our little band made places them alongside the world's great heroes. Defeat is not ruin and disaster. Let our friends close up and fling their colors to the breeze. The Colonists had their Lexington—but they also had their Yorktown. The Federals had their Bull Run—but they also had their Appomattox.

Notes.

The walls of Babylon will fall down by a ram's-horn blast before the end of the twentieth century.

Hugh Price Hughes says: "No one can really sing like the man in whose mouth Christ has put a new song."

Vanderbilt University sends out four missionaries this year: O. E. Brown and T. A. Hearn to China, and J. L. Bruce and R. C. Dixon to Brazil.—Nashville Advocate.

Dr. Holmes makes a remark that is very comforting to many of us: "The fractional value of the wisest shows a small numerator divided by an indefinite denominator of knowledge."

The Wesleyan London Mission held a successful meeting at the Epsom races this year. The missioners were treated with great courtesy, and preached and sang and distributed tracts during every day and evening of the races. At one meeting they had over 300 hearers in the gospel tent while a race was on hand. That is hearding the devil on his own field!

The American Bible Society proposes that every child in the country shall have a Bible. Bibles will be supplied to all who can read. Parents and Sunday-school superintendents and teachers can procure these Bibles from the nearest auxiliary society, or direct from the Bible House in New York. They range in price from 20 to 90 cents apiece, with 16 cents added for postage when ordered by mail. Why not supply your children and scholars with a Bible?

New York Sun:

Ninety-four of our colleges received in gifts during the past year the great sum of $3,624,579, and the total of their present endowments is $51,765,449.

The most richly endowed of these institutions is Columbia College of New York. It received landed property from the Trinity Church Corporation in 1754, and from the State in 1814, which has grown in value with the growth of the town, until now it yields a yearly income of $342,000, and, therefore, is worth $7,000,000. The other property of the college, consisting of lands, buildings, and apparatus not productive of income, is of an estimated value of about $2,000,000 more, making the total capital $9,000,000.

The Nashville Advocate says:

Does the church, then, propose to go into politics, to ally herself to any existing political organization, or to create a new one, for the purpose of fighting the saloons? No: a thousand times, No. We are a prohibition church, but we are not a Prohibition-party church. We dare not commit ourselves to any entangling political alliances, be they of a lower or a higher character. Our weapons and instrumentalities are moral and spiritual. We have none other at our disposal. To renounce these in the vain hope of getting something better in their place is to be guilty of religious cowardice and unfaith. The Methodist Church in her organic capacity will do what she can by purely and exclusively spiritual forces and agencies to secure the extermination of the traffic in strong drink, but she will not organize a political machine, nor lay down a party platform, nor nominate candidates for office.

Lake Charles American:

It is a curious fact that men who howl against monopoly as lustily as anyone else, when the monopoly is one in which they have no interest, will make a complete somersault when the interest of a monopoly in which they are concerned is considered, and argue in favor of it so earnestly that we are almost convinced that they are really in earnest in their assertions that their pet scheme is in the interest of the people. As an example in point, we refer the reader to those statesmen (?) and newspapers that protested so loudly against land monopolies, oil trusts, sugar trusts and other monopolistic schemes, and are now laboring with all their might to convince the people of Louisiana that the well-being, if not the very existence, of the State depends upon the continuing of the biggest monopoly of modern times by the Constitution of the State.

The monopoly's money explains that curiosity!

The following is from the Caucasian:

It has been repeatedly asserted, and the assertions have been uncontradicted, that corruption stalks rampant in the capital city of the State and that a well-organized body of unscrupulous boodlers infest the legislative halls and have pursued and harassed the representatives of the people to influence their votes in favor of the Morris Lottery. Such allegations should be sifted to the bottom regardless of consequences. To permit such high-handed proceedings to go unpunished is a shame, a disgrace and everlasting blot on the good name of Louisiana. The Lotteryites, if innocent, should court an inquiry and insist on an investigation that would relieve them of this odium. If the Lottery's skirts are clean and free from these serious allegations, there is no danger in an investigation. But the Lottery has declined to be investigated, a fact recorded in the Senate by a vote of twelve for and twenty-two against. Under the circumstances the people are free to reach their own conclusion. Has bribery become a recognized factor in the Lottery contest?

Personal and Otherwise.

Dr. Carradine sailed from New York last Wednesday morning.

We understand that our report of the death of Rev. S. H. Whatley was a mistake. We beg the brother's pardon. We have no idea of sending him to heaven before the Lord calls him. He is too useful here to be dismissed by an editor.

We regret to see by the last Alabama Advocate that its editor, Dr. McCoy, has been confined to his bed for more than a week. We trust that rest and the physician will soon set up the good editor again.

Bro. T. W. Adams writes: "The influence of our district meeting still abides in great power."

Dr. Carradine left last week for Europe and the Holy Land. He expects to be gone about four months. Our readers may look out for some spicy "letters of travel."

Dr. J. W. Boswell, late assistant editor of the Nashville Advocate, has been appointed to First Church, St. Louis.

The degree of Doctor of Civil Law has been conferred upon Henry M. Stanley by Oxford University, England.

A successful telephone line has been established between Paris and Calais.

Rev. T. L. Mellen writes: "The new president of East Mississippi Female College, Meridian, Miss., is a layman, and the son of a Methodist preacher. C. W. Anderson, of Fort Smith, Ark., but formerly of Brownsville, Tenn., is the man. He graduated at Washington and Lee University in 1875, and is highly indorsed by Gen. G. W. C. Lee, of that institution, and by Judge A. D. Bright, of Brownsville, Tenn. He has been a successful teacher, and will bring experience, tact, talent, business sense and religion into his work. A brilliant success is assured him and East Mississippi Female College."

The New Mississippian made an egregious mistake when it referred to Dr. T. C. Carter as the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. That Dr. Carter is editor of an Advocate published at Chattanooga, and an organ of the Northern Methodist Church.

Bro. Mitchel, just in from Aberdeen, Miss., reports Bro. Bowen, our pastor at that place, as down sick with typhoid fever. We pray that he may speedily recover.

A Great Undertaking.

The Board of Managers, in their report to the American Bible Society, called attention to the "Work for the Future," and emphasized the importance of supplying every child who can read with a Bible of its own, especially for Sunday-school use. This was cordially indorsed by the society at its annual meeting, May 8, 1890.

It is estimated that there are over 8,000,000 children in the Sunday-schools throughout the United States. Many of these are, doubtless, already supplied with Bibles; but it is safe to say that there are several millions who do not possess the sacred book. This enterprise calls for the earnest and active co-operation of Christian parents, Sunday-school superintendents and teachers.

No doubt, in response to this appeal, many parents who have neglected this duty will supply their own children, and the Sunday-schools which have the means will see that every scholar has the gift of a Bible. But this will still leave a great many who can only be supplied by the beneficence of this great society and its numerous auxiliaries. To enable them to accomplish a work of such magnitude will require increased gifts to the parent society and its auxiliaries.

Mississippi Conference Brotherhood.

Our venerable brother, Rev. Jas. A. Godfrey, one of the oldest and best members of our Conference and Brotherhood, has gone from our midst. It should now be a pleasure for each surviving member of our Brotherhood to pay promptly assessment No. 12 for the benefit of his bereaved family. And can not each member send an additional contribution of one dollar from a new honorary member? Remit to Rev. I. W. Cooper, treasurer, Hattiesburg, Miss., and send names of new members to Rev. B. F. Jones, assistant secretary, Hazlehurst, Miss.

W. B. LEWIS, Pres.

Notice.

The annual camp meeting at Providence Camp Ground will begin on July 24, and continue one week. All are cordially invited to attend. Ministers will find free conveyance from Hazlehurst to the camp ground.

No Fire, No Storms; But Help Needed.

I frequently read of the destruction of churches and parsonages by fire and storms. The Seashore district has not been visited by these two destructive elements so far as churches and parsonages are concerned; but we are struggling to build a neat, comfortable church at the pleasant little village of Nicholson, situated on the Northeastern railroad, about forty-three miles from New Orleans. The people of the town are willing, and doing all that they are able to do, but need help from abroad; and as there is not a church of any denomination in the place, we think it the most opportune time to strike a heavy lick for Methodism in this place. So I feel no hesitancy in earnestly calling on everyone who is friendly to the cause of Christ to aid in this laudable and important enterprise by contributing their nickles and dollars according to their ability.

Now, brethren, don't wait, but send along your contributions to me at Covington, La. (let it be ever so little), and God will bless you for it. Every contribution will be duly acknowledged. Yours in the Lord.

G. R. ELLIS.

Monteagle Assembly and Summer Schools.

EIGHTH ANNUAL SESSION, JULY 1 to AUGUST 25, 1890.

Assembly Park open to Summer Residents from June 1.

MONTEAGLE, TENN., widely known as the "Southern Chautauqua," is on a mountain plateau or spur of the lower Cumberlands, reached by mountain railway, one hour from Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis R. R. at Cowan, Tenn.

Rising 2,000 feet above the sea level, dry, pure air, no malaria, no mosquitos, magnificent scenery and abundance of pure spring water, it is the great natural sanitarium of the Southwest.

With 100 acres of picturesque, wooded heights enclosed; with improved water-works, sewerage, daily mails, telegraph, public buildings, and near 100 cottages; with the annual Assembly Platform and Summer Schools, affording a continual feast, it is a quiet "lodge in the wilderness," having all the world within call.

Parties desiring cottages for the summer should make early application.

For full particulars as to rates, advantages, etc., or any information desired, address,

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policyholders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

An Important Change.

W. H. Stuart, who for twenty years has conducted a highly successful school at Shelbyville, Ky., will, September 15, open the Owensboro Female College at Owensboro, Ky. The buildings are new—will be furnished throughout with the latest modern conveniences; the teachers have been carefully selected, making the Institution second to none in the South. Mr. Stuart is specially adapted to his calling, as he adds to a thorough education a finish and elegance of manner which is strikingly noticeable in all his pupils.

The only reliable vegetable substitute for calomel, which acts on the liver, blood, kidneys and stomach, and best anti-bilious purgative is Maguire's Cundurango. Endorsed by Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia; Rev. McNally, of St. Louis, and a host of prominent people.

BIRDS-EYE VIEW OF THE SEA SHORE CAMP GROUNDS, NEAR BILOXI MISS.

CAMP MEETING.

The Nineteenth Annual Camp Meeting on the SEASHORE CAMP GROUND will open JULY 11TH, next, and continue for ten days.

Eminent preachers will assist in conducting the religious services, as heretofore.

Ample accommodations will be provided for all visitors.

Two commodious bath-houses render the finest salt-water bathing on the coast accessible to all.

The Grounds are 78 miles from New Orleans, immediately fronting the beach, and on the line of the L. and N. railroad. All trains stop at the station during the meeting, landing visitors within 100 yards of the enclosure.

Reduced fares will be in force over all connecting roads for the meeting.

The gate fee for entrance into the Grounds is 50 cents for the season, or 25 cents for the day. The revenue thus obtained is used for improving the Grounds.

Preachers will be furnished sleeping accommodation free of charge, and tickets for meals at the restaurant at half rates, as heretofore.

Railroad tickets—Louisville and Nashville—on sale from July 6 to 22; good until 31st. Excursion tickets also on sale to Camp Ground; good to return on to September 30. All trains will stop at Grounds during Camp Meeting, July 11 to 22, inclusive.

MORSE—Mrs. ELIZA M. MORSE was born in North Carolina in 1801, and died in New Orleans, La., March 31, 1890. She leaves two daughters: Mrs. Lucinda Ponder, of Camden, Ark., and Mrs. Emily Vick Glover, of New Orleans, at whose house she died. She, herself, was the daughter of Rev. Newitt Vick, of Vicksburg.

She came of a deeply religious family. All the branches of the family of which she was a member were prominent Methodists and devoted church people. It was a family that contributed noble men to the pulpit and faithful men and women to the pew. Coming from such a stock, there should be no surprise at her loyalty to Methodism and her devotion to Christ. The writer has met many lovely and saintly characters, but never one that surpassed her in those things that make up the Christ-like life.

She became religious early, joined the church early—indeed, so soon did she give her young heart to the Savior that she could not recall the day when she did not love him. Her life thereafter was a constant unfolding, enriching and maturing. Grace was added to grace while she went from glory to glory. Truly her path grew brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. She had one of the most uncomplaining of spirits. None of the bitter trials aroused bitterness in her. She kept the sweetness as well as whiteness of her soul. In a most remarkable degree did the law of kindness dwell in her tongue. No one ever heard her speak unkindly of any creature that lived, and nothing distressed her more than to hear such conversation around her. In every instance she would divert the remarks into other channels, or speak some word of apology in defense for the absent. Her beautiful unselfishness was equally remarkable. Calling upon her frequently when she was ill, she would forget to speak of her complaint in her solicitude for the comfort of her visitor.

Her death was in keeping with her life—sweet and tranquil. Her sun went down in unclouded glory. She met the last messenger, full of faith and the Holy Ghost. All her preparation had been made long before. She had only to say good-by and step in the chariot and go up to the city of many mansions. For days before she died the room had been filled with heavenly visitants to her dawning celestial vision. They communed with her, and, absorbed in that delightful converse and drawn by their holy presence, she went away with them. While the angels of God talked to her, and while the man of God was praying by her side, she closed her eyes to earth and opened them in heaven. B. CARRADINE.

McLEOD—DAN MCLEOD was born March 15, and died February 6, 1890. He joined the Methodist Church in 1878. During his sickness his suffering was intense, and the skill of good physicians and the most constant and tender care of loved ones could not prevail against the disease, although he was remarkable for his temperate habits and in the full strength of his manhood.

His death breaks a family circle much beloved for their high standard of citizenship, devotion to each other, to their friends, and to the best interests of the community. His devotion to his father and family was as constant as the breath that he drew. It is not known whether he was converted in childhood or not, but it is comforting to his loved ones to know that he stated to me several times that he felt secure. I have no doubt in my mind but that he is now with his mother that he loved so much, and in heaven they wait for the father, brothers and sisters, who pledged themselves to meet him where parting will be no more. G. D. ANDERS, P. C.

BOLTON—Mrs. D. L. BOLTON, wife of Mr. E. C. Bolton, died Saturday morning, May 31. A short while before death released her from suffering she said, "I'm washed in the blood of the Lamb." May the "God of all grace" comfort the stilicted family in this bereavement! HER PASTOR.

JONES—KATIE J. JONES was born March 19, 1873, and died, of measles, at her father's residence, April 28, 1890.

Katie was an obedient daughter, a kind and unselfish sister, an affectionate friend, a faithful Sabbath-school scholar. At home she was constantly ministering to the comfort and happiness of her parents, brothers and sisters. A member of her family said of her—"She was the first to awake each morning, and each night she was the last to retire to rest." Her bright face was seldom missing from the prayer meeting. Her seat at Sabbath-school and church service was seldom vacant.

A grief-stricken family, many relatives and numerous friends sorrow for her here, but not without hope.

A FRIEND.

Resolutions on the death of Katie J. Jones, adopted by Class No. 2 of McNair Sabbath-school.

Whereas, God has removed from us our beloved friend and class-mate, Katie J. Jones; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, her Sabbath-school class and true friends, pay to her memory this last tribute of respect and love.

Resolved, That, as a Sabbath-school scholar, Katie J. Jones was over an example to her class-mates in faithful attendance, perfect lessons, and deep interest in Bible study, and that, as a friend, she was ever affectionate and true.

Resolved, That we do deeply deplore her death, and shall long continue to miss her from our Sabbath reunions; but that while we grieve, we do how submissively to the will of God, knowing that "he doeth all things well."

Resolved, That we do heartily sympathize with her family in their great affliction, and that we do commend them, by prayer, to him "who hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows." CLASS-MATES.

HARVEY—HARRIETT VANISON STRANGE HARVEY was born in Fluvanna county, Va., in the year 1806, and died in Sharon, Madison county, Miss., on March 9, 1890. She had reached the good old age of eighty-three years two months and fifteen days.

Grandma Harvey was a Christian and a Methodist of the olden type. Her long life was placed as an entirety upon the altar of God. Her church membership was always regarded as a sacred relation, and she loved to discharge the duties and meet the sacred obligations growing out of this relation. She joined the church in early life, before she left her native State, and gladly continued therein to the day of her death.

She was married to Jesse Harvey, in Limestone county, Ala., in 1826; moved to Washington, Adams county, Miss., in 1835, and to Sharon, Madison county, Miss., in 1837, where she lived joyfully with the husband of her beautiful and attractive youth for more than fifty years. Four cultured Christian daughters, a godly son and a number of grandchildren lament her, with hearts filled with chastened bereavement; but with special emphasis does the inspiring doctrine of the resurrection greet their ears and cheer their drooping spirits.

This writer will never forget the many pleasant pastoral visits to that cheery home. The memory of that sweetly placid life and gentle, loving nature will be shared by many of the brethren of the Mississippi Conference.

Loved ones, let us meet her "where the surges cease to roll."

C. A. POWELL.

CONERLY—Died, at his home in Tylertown, Pike county, Miss., February 25, 1890, Bro. M. R. CONERLY, in the fifty-first year of his age.

The subject of this notice was born near China Grove, and since childhood has been one of its most active citizens both in church and business life. He identified himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1855, and from that time to the termination of his earthly career he never swerved from his post of duty. For many years he was a prominent officer of the church at this place, a watcher and worker for its interests, and for three years the worthy superintendent of the largest Sunday-school our church has fostered.

Some days previous to his last he realized that his stay with family and friends was of short duration, and to them more than once expressed his willingness to go, assured them of his preparation to meet his Savior, and exhorted them to be in readiness for the change that must eventually take place. He left a most promising family of three sons and six daughters, one brother and one sister to mourn his loss.

Thus has passed away one who was a fond brother, dutiful son, devoted father, faithful and affectionate husband; and many mourn his departure. "The righteous hath hope in death."

A FRIEND.

ROBINSON—JOHN B. ROBINSON was born September 12, 1812, in Fairfield, S. C. He enjoyed the advantages of a liberal education. In 1851 he moved to Brownsville, Miss., and there by his personal energy and merit built up a high school which for nearly a quarter of a century was the educational center of a large section of country. He was twice married, and leaves a widow and seven children to mourn his death. In his youth he joined the Methodist Church, and within its folds he developed a well-rounded Christian character. During his last illness he spoke hopefully of his future as a Christian, and said that he was ready for the final summons, which came about eight o'clock, May 20, 1890.

On the morning of May 21, after the usual church service, his mortal remains were placed in their final resting-place in the family burying-ground at Brownsville by the Masonic fraternity, of which he was an honored member. J. T. NICHOLSON.

COLLIER—Sister MARY EVANS COLLIER (nee Traxler) was born in South Carolina, January 18, 1811, and was married to John Collier, and moved to Mississippi about 1830 or '31, and died near Shiloh, Rankin county, Miss., May 4, 1890.

Sister Collier was truly a mother in Israel, and will be greatly missed by her children and the church. May God abundantly sustain her children and relatives in this sad bereavement! is the prayer of their pastor,

A. D. MILLER.

BLACK—The following is a tribute of love and respect from the Woman's Missionary Society of Bethesda, Copiah county, Miss.:

Once more the hand of death has cast its dark shadow over our society, and taken from our midst our beloved sister, ELIZA BLACK. On January 4, 1890, she was taken from her labors here to the rest prepared for the children of God. She has been an efficient member of the W. M. S. of Bethesda since 1880, the year it was organized. While we know death is the lot of all, and that she had lived her fourscore years, yet it is hard to give her up, for her presence was sweet, and we could always rely on her advice. She was ever ready to do all in her power for her Master's cause, and endeavored to live according to his revealed will. Her example was better than profession, and her precepts always impressive. Her consistent, holy life was more eloquent than words. Few have lived so well. While we deeply mourn our loss we are not without hope. We have every assurance she has gone to receive her crown of life and dwell forever with him who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That, as God saw best to call our sister to a higher service, and while we deeply feel the affliction, we bow submissively to his will.

Resolved, That we, the remaining members of our society, emulate Sister Black's example, and strive to greater efforts in helping move on the mission work.

Resolved, That we extend our sympathies to the bereaved children, and pray they may be a reunited family around the great white throne, and with her partake of the unending joys that are prepared for the redeemed in the beautiful home of God.

K. T. CARR, for Com.

HAVENS—VALENTINE HAVENS, the son of Rev. J. H. Havens and M. J. Havens, was born February 14, 1876; died at the home of his parents, at Vancleave, Miss., April 22, 1890, aged fourteen years, two months and eight days. He joined the church at Red Hill, August 1, 1889.

Val. suffered much and long from rheumatism; the pains were so severe that it often caused him to burst into tears. He was so anxious to live. When his mother approached him, and said, "Val., after all our labor, prayers and tears we have to give you up," he said: "I am much obliged to you all for what you have done. I have not been as patient, I reckon, as I ought to have been. My pains have been so severe, I know God has not charged me with impatience." There was consolation to him that in heaven he would be free from pain. The loved ones have the assurance that he is at rest, and they will see their precious boy again.

Val. had a little over fourteen years of life on earth, yet in this brief period he gained a strong hold on many hearts. Val. was very industrious and energetic. His presence will not only be missed at home by parents, brother and sisters, but by a large circle of young friends who knew and loved him, and who did him so much honor in his burial. God bless the parents, brother, sisters and relatives! May their realize that their loss is his gain!

M. L. WHITE, P. C.

BROOM—CALEB JAMES BROOM was born in Fairfield district, S. C., September 14, 1808; was married to Miss Sara Jane Robinson in Richland district, S. C., September 13, 1832, and died in Crystal Springs, Miss., May 12, 1890. He left no children, and his wife in old age and loneliness and sorrow awaits the call to join him on the other shore. Bro. Broom was a quiet, unpretentious man, but true to his convictions, and lived as a man who realized the obligations growing out of the relations he sustained in life; a kind husband, prudent and careful in the affairs of life. He suffered with cancer of the face long and greatly, but patiently, and was resigned. On being interrogated by the writer as to his trust in the Redeemer, his reply was prompt and satisfactory. His remains were interred in Utica, Miss., his former home, with religious and Masonic ceremonies. May the grace of God comfort and sustain the aged and afflicted widow! Our brother rests from his labors and sufferings.

R. D. NORSWORTHY.

TERRELL—GRIFFIN F. TERRELL was born March 29, 1830, three miles from the home where he died, February 3, 1890, after long suffering and confinement.

Bro. Terrell applied for membership in the Methodist Church at the age of sixteen, and, not being received then, renewed his application when twenty-one years old. From some oversight he was never formally received into full connection, but his name was entered on the register and he served in prominent church offices of trust satisfactorily to all, and proved his desire and merit of membership by his life. He married June 5, 1860.

His hospitality and friendly manner are proverbial, and other hearts than those of his family shall suffer loss and sorrow. He leaves a devoted wife and a large family of children to mourn their loss and emulate his example. His end was the triumph of the Christian, and he rejoiced in the anticipation of the rest and greeting at home. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord!" H. M. ELLIS.

FATHERREE—M. G. FATHERREE was born in Hinds county, Miss., on May 1, 1856; moved to Louisiana while young, and when twenty-seven years old married Miss Susie Maben, who was an affectionate wife. He had lingered for two years with dropsy. He moved to Hinds, where he was put under the treatment of a physician at Cooper's Wells. But, alas! nothing would relieve him but death; so God called him home to dwell with him in the mansion of eternal glory. He was willing to be taken from this sinful world. He has left one sister, one brother, a wife and many friends to mourn his loss. He joined the Methodist Church soon after marriage, and remained a consistent member until death. He was a devoted husband, an obedient and affectionate son, and was loved by all who knew him.

D. MABEN.

CATCHINGS—JAMES MEREDITH, infant son and only child of Dr. J. M. and Mrs. Archie Catchings, died of congestion, April 26, 1890, after a brief illness of thirty-six hours.

H. R. CALDWELL.

BLACKWELL—Maj. JOHN J. BLACKWELL was born in Wayne county, Miss., January 29, 1819, and died in Forest, Scott county, Miss., May 1, 1890. When quite young he removed from Wayne to Covington county. Here he was married, October 12, 1837, to Miss Mary Thornton, who still survives him, and by whom there was given eleven children—seven of the children died before the father. Soon after his marriage he moved to Smith county, where he lived about forty years, and where he raised all his children. In 1879 he moved to Forest, Miss., where he remained to the close of his life. In 1843 he was converted and joined the Methodist Church under the ministry of Bro. Taylor. In the year 1876(?), at the Trenton Camp Ground, he became wonderfully aroused on religion, and from thence forward served the Lord with energy and zeal.

It was the writer's privilege to be somewhat intimately acquainted with the deceased for nearly thirty years; was at different times his pastor; always esteemed a good friend; frequently a visitor at his hospitable home, and can say that he was a bright and zealous Free Mason, faithful county official, kind father and affectionate husband. He loved the church and his pastors. His end was in peace. C. MCDONALD.

ROUSE—Mrs. LEEANNA R. ROUSE, daughter of T. L. and Nancy Armstrong, was born in Jackson county, Miss., March 3, 1851; was married to John A. Quitman Rouse, September 26, 1878. When married she was a member of the Baptist Church, but soon after joined the church of her husband, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, November 28, 1878. She died May 17, 1890. She leaves a dear husband and five little children, a little babe two weeks old, an aged mother, three brothers, one sister, a host of relatives and friends to mourn her loss.

She was not afraid of death. She said she longed for the last breath. She said she was going to heaven. She told her husband and friends not to grieve after her, but to meet her in heaven, where parting would be no more. She called her children to her and told them they would soon be without a mama. She requested her children to be raised to love and fear Jesus. She was a loving wife, a kind mother, a gentle sister and a sympathetic friend. Our loss is her eternal gain. May God comfort the bereaved ones; help them to live in this life that they will meet her in heaven!

A FRIEND.

SHEHEE—Mrs. MARY F. SHEHEE, daughter of Daniel and Jane Rambo, was born in Edgefield district, S. C., September 4, 1822; died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Lelia Butler, Arcadia, La., May 20, 1890.

We have known the departed from our earliest girlhood and up to the present time. Sweet remembrances and early impressions come at intervals all along the life-journey, whispering, "Yes, in heaven." More infallible faith in Jesus and his promises I never heard expressed by anyone at all times. She had trusted Jesus so long. How sweet the thought, now that she has gone to abide with him!

How heart-rending and yet how delightful to witness the close of her life; such patient serenity, and yet such a desire to depart and be with Jesus! She requested the church to pray to that end.

May God comfort the bereaved as he alone can, and cause them to be cheerful, knowing that one more jewel is added to heaven! What a benediction she is to her children! and may her departure from among them enhance heaven as never before!

A BEREAVED FRIEND.

BALLARD—JOSEPH TAYLOR BALLARD was born June 23, 1881, and died, after a lingering illness, May 4, 1890. He suffered intensely, but bore his pain with great patience. The day before he died he told those who stood beside him that he had to die, and bade them good-by; but he said, "I will live until to-morrow, and then I will say, 'Lord, have mercy on my soul, and take me out of my suffering.'" His father asked him if he had rather die than stay here with him. He replied: "Yes, sir; I want to go and be with the angels; then I will be so happy, happy, happy!" Then he said, "Papa, come and go with me," and then he fell sweetly asleep.

He was an affectionate child and was loved by all who knew him. As the shepherd sometimes bears the lambs in his arms to entice the mother and the flock, so God sometimes takes the lambs home to cause mothers and fathers and families to fix their affections on things above. K.

JONES—Little AMHER MAY, only child of B. J. and Rosa Jones, was born September 22, 1888, and died April 23, 1890. Sweet little May was only given to us for a short time, and then God took her; but he has carried her to a better world. I hope that we, who loved her so tenderly here, may meet her in heaven.

MINDA B. JONES.

GREED OF GAIN

and thirst for pleasure. The ruling passion of the human family. In grasping after riches the brain is taxed, the nervous system strained. In the pursuit of pleasure the body is tortured by fashion's despotic sway; the hours designed for repose are devoted to exhausting revelry; the stomach is ruthlessly imposed upon; pure water, the natural drink for all created beings, is ignored, and liquid fire is substituted until, ere we are aware of it, disease has fixed its iron grasp upon us. Then we look for the "remedy." To the victim of these follies, we commend Dr. Tutt's Liver pills. They stimulate the liver, strengthen the nerves, restore the appetite and build up the debilitated body.

DAILY—Sister HANNAH DAILY (nee Harlock) was born in the county of Kent, England, February 6, 1825. She was twice married: first, to Jesse Landridge, of England, and, later, to John Daily, of Mobile, Ala. She was the mother of six children—four of whom survive her. About the year 1852 she, with her husband, left England for the United States and landed at Philadelphia, Pa., where she lived for a number of years. While there she united with the Baptist Church, and on removing to Mobile, Ala., had her membership transferred to the latter place and became a member of the St. Francis St. Baptist Church. After her marriage with John Daily she joined the Methodist Church—the church of her husband.

For a long time Sister Daily has suffered from a lingering disorder, but she bore her suffering with Christian fortitude. She had no fear of death, but was not tired of life. She often remarked that death would come to her as the stopping of a clock; and so it did. She received her summons to come up higher at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Grant, at Pascagoula, Miss., May 11, 1890. She, being dead, yet speaketh.

GEO. H. THOMPSON.

CAGLE—Little GORDIE was ten years old, lacking a few months. First on Sunday before she died, on Wednesday, she requested me to get a preacher to come and baptize her. I was then living in Greenville, and I went to church on Sunday night. Bro. Spraggins, being our circuit rider in charge, went with me and baptized her, and on Wednesday night following she began begging me and her mama, holding us by the hand, and pointing to heaven, to go home with her. She said: "Paps, will you come and go; the door is open; they are holding it open; let's go home. Now, come and go, and get everybody to come." It seemed as if she was looking the angels right in the face, and at 11:30 P. M. she passed away as if only asleep, holding my hand to the last. I promised her to meet her again, and, by the help of God and humble prayers, and the faithful prayers of all of you good brothers, I will meet my little Gordie again, where pain and death and parting is felt no more.

S. S. CAGLE.

WALLACE—Bro. W. A. WALLACE was born in Benton, Ala., March 18, 1840; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, while young; moved to Mississippi in 1859, and was married to Miss M. E. Burnham, January 5, 1886, and died of pneumonia, after very severe suffering, April 12, 1890; having lived near Cato, Rankin county, Miss., for several years.

Bro. Wallace was one of our very best men, and the church has sustained a great loss in his death. He was class leader, Sunday-school superintendent, and one of the strongest pillars in our Clear Creek Church. He was a loving, devoted husband, a kind and affectionate father, a good Christian and citizen. He will be greatly missed. May the Lord abundantly bless and sustain his loving companion and children in their great loss! is the prayer of their pastor,

A. D. MILLER.

TYNES—T. F. TYNES was born in Marion county, Miss., May 10, 1822, and died February 1, 1890. Bro. Tynes joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and lived a consistent member until death. He died of that most distressing disease—dropsy; and though he suffered greatly, he bore it with Christian fortitude.

It was the writer's privilege to visit him several times during his sickness, and he always seemed perfectly resigned to the will of God, and said he had no fear of death; that all that troubled him was leaving his family. He leaves a wife and several children to mourn their loss. He was a devoted husband, a kind father. May the Lord bless them and help them so to live in this world that they may meet at last around the great white throne!

B. A. B.

HOLMES—Sister MOLLY HOLMES, daughter of Bro. J. D. and Sister Laura Chapman, was born in Rankin county, Miss., October 21, 1867; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in her girlhood in 1879; was married to Bro. D. J. Holmes in 1885, and died of flux, after very severe suffering, May 9, 1890.

Sister Holmes was a devoted child to her parents, a loving and affectionate wife, a tender mother, a good church member, and a true Christian. We will miss her, but the Lord knows best. She has gone to join her four sweet little children that have gone to the better world. May God abundantly sustain her parents, husband and relatives by his grace!

A. D. MILLER.

DAVIS—BAXTEN DAVIS, youngest son of W. E. and S. J. Davis, was born December 10, 1888, and died at Areola, Miss., May 7, 1890. He was like the flower that blooms in the morning and withers in the evening. He came to make glad the hearts of the parents and other loved ones, and to lend sweetness to the home but for a little while, and then he went unto him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me." He went away, leaving the hearts of parents and little brothers sad, and the home desolate. Since he can not come back to them, I hope they are striving to go to him. Heaven is made more attractive since little Baxten is gone thither.

His grandmother,

M. H. MCCAULEY.

SIMMONS—Sister REBECCA SIMMONS was born in Southampton county, Va., January 14, 1800, and died in Wesson, Miss., May 20, 1890. She was converted and joined the Methodist Church fifty-five years ago. She lived all these years a consistent Christian, and died in the faith. She was the mother of nine children; four of them survive her. Mrs. Beal, the mother of "Invalid," that accomplished writer for your paper for many years, was a daughter of Sister Simmons. At ninety years old Sister Simmons was a genial, pleasant conversationalist. She lived close to the Lord and died in great peace.

T. S. WEST.

HOLMES—Miss SALLIE HOLMES died at her home, in Kemper county, Miss., March 21, 1890. She had been a member of the Methodist Church for a number of years, and lived from the time of her espousal to Christ a consistent, useful life. She loved the church of her choice, and was punctual upon the services of the sanctuary. She delighted to minister to the comfort of her pastor, and was true to the vows which were upon her. For weeks prior to her death she was a great sufferer, but bore all her sufferings with patience and submission to him whose will is always best. She will be missed in the church of which she was a faithful member; missed in her large circle of friends, but especially will she be missed in the home where her sunny, cheerful nature contributed so much to the happiness of those whom she loved. Just before her death she exclaimed, "Peace; be still."

She leaves a mother and several brothers to mourn her loss. May they emulate her example and follow her as she followed Christ, and all meet by and by on the banks of eternal deliverance! is the prayer of her pastor,

W. G. B.

SPRAGGINS—Little SAMUEL AUGUSTUS SPRAGGINS came to the home of Bro. E. L. Spraggins, at Aberdeen, Miss., July 31, 1889, and died January 22, in Booneville, Miss.

God pity these saddened hearts in their irremediable sorrow! But how idle and empty seem words in the presence of such bereavements. We press the hand in silent sympathy; we can do nothing more, hoping that, as grief is "mellowed by the stealing hours of time," the trusting heart may realize that "Ever near us, though unseen,

The dear immortal spirits tread;
For all the boundless universe
Is life—there are no dead."

N. G. AUGUSTUS.

HUTCHINSON—WILLIAM B. HUTCHINSON was born in St. Helena parish, February 19, 1829; married Miss Nancy D. Pearson, January 25, 1855. God blessed this happy union with eleven children; eight of whom, with their mother, still survive, and three preceded their father to the better land. He joined the Methodist Church when quite young. He was a veteran of the late war; was in the battle of Baton Rouge, under Breckinridge, and stood the siege of Port Hudson. He died very suddenly, May 15, 1890.

He has gone, we trust, to be mustered into service in the army celestial of the living God, where not a drum is heard, nor a funeral note. May the consolations of the Lord abound to the bereaved!

K.

BOYD—Mrs. LULA F. BOYD, wife of Dr. W. W. Boyd, was born June 9, 1862, and died at Osborn, Miss., January 1, 1890. She was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Starkville circuit, Columbus district, North Mississippi Conference. She was a true Christian, a devoted wife and loving mother. She leaves a husband, children and many friends, besides relations, to mourn her loss.

Those who stood by and saw her breathe her last could only say, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord," etc. May loved ones to whom she bade farewell prepare to die as she—"in the faith." "To die, with her, was gain."

J. W. TREADWELL.

RHODES—LAURA JOSEPHINE, daughter of Willie and Laura Rhodes, died March 19, 1890. Only four months and seven days was this happy household brightened by the presence of little Laura, and then God called her home to dwell with him. This little flower faded in the bud; but, by the light of the heavenly throne and the care of its Creator, it will put forth again in all its beauty and bloom in the world above.

Father, mother, grieve not for your little one, but so live that you will meet her beyond the grave where death enters not, and life is eternal.

MRS. G. H. THOMPSON.

COURSEY—Sister MARY ELIZABETH COURSEY, wife of James Coursey, died Saturday, April 26, in the eighty-second year of her age, in this city, in peace.

The writer has known Sister Coursey for about forty years. She was an humble, consecrated member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; her life was hid with Christ in God. As she lived so she died.

Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord! May her sorrowing family meet her in heaven! is the prayer of the writer,

J. D. PARKER.

MCINTYRE—Sister CATHERINE MCINTYRE was born in Hancock county, Miss., about 1820, and died of flux, May 29, 1890. Sister McIntyre joined the church last year and was a devoted, consecrated member till the day of her death. I visited her in the time of her sickness and found her ready and willing to go. May God bless her children and loved ones! is the prayer of their true friend,

A. D. MILLER.

ELKIN—The following resolutions were adopted by the second Quarterly Conference of Okolona circuit, North Mississippi Conference:

Whereas, God, in his infinite wisdom, has removed our valued and beloved brother, Dr. T. B. ELKIN; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Elkin this Conference has lost a wise counselor and useful member; the church on earth a consistent, active and zealous worker; his family, a kind, devoted husband and loving father, and the community, a skillful and beloved physician, an upright Christian gentleman and useful citizen.

Resolved, That the tender sympathy of this Conference be tendered his family in their sore bereavement,

T. J. MCDONNELL,
For Committee.

I, A. C. Hafflefinger, do say consumption can be cured by Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. My mother, years ago, contracting a terrible cough soon became unable to attend to her household duties. Prominent physicians pronounced it incurable consumption. We knew of Dr. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and commenced giving it to her. Before two bottles had been taken an improvement was noticed, and by the time one dozen bottles had been consumed she was well, and has never been troubled since. We have recommended it to many and always have it in the house. For coughs, colds, croup, whooping-cough [illegible]s, bronchitis, it is without a rival. One [illegible] hold two and a half times as much [illegible]se.

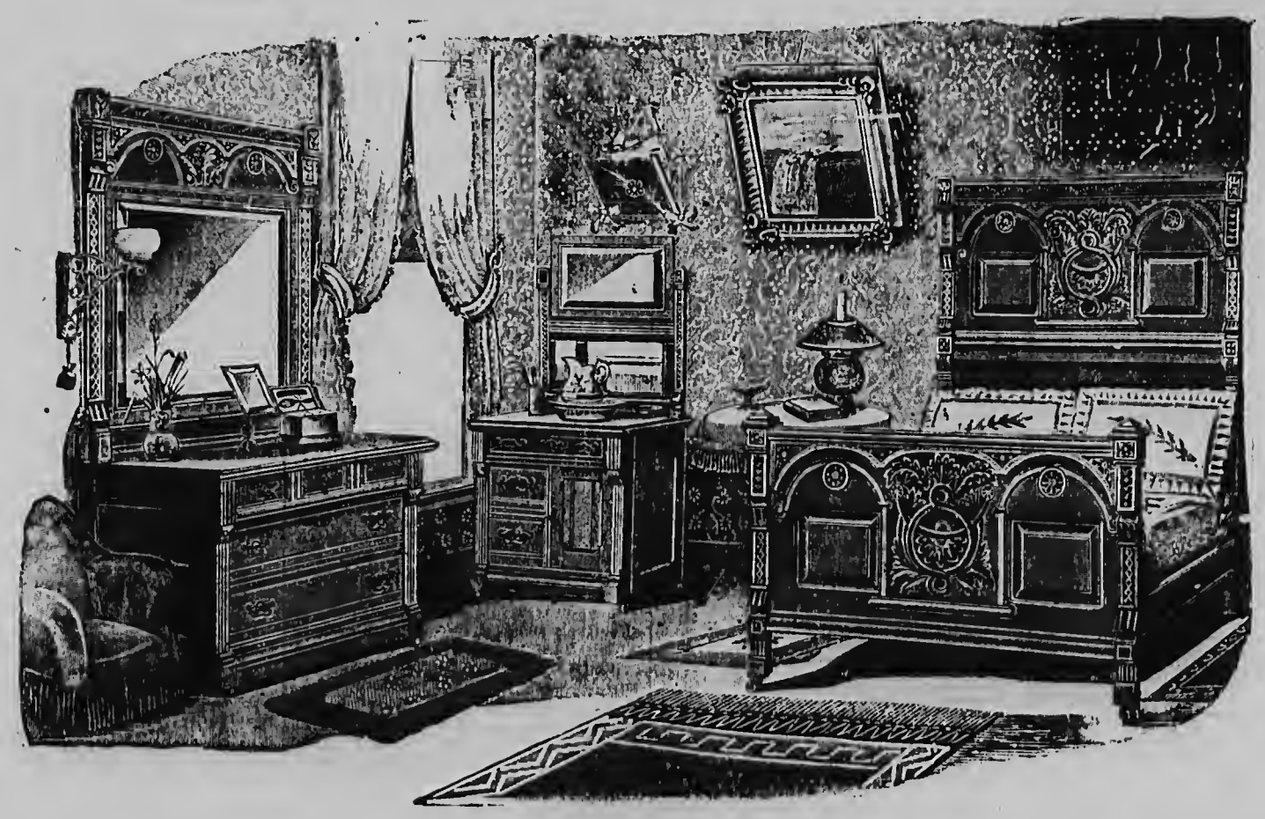
GRANT'S FURNITURE STORE

NEW STORE, AT 114 Camp St. NEW ORLEANS. NEXT DOOR TO ADVOCATE OFFICE.

BEAUTIFUL PARLOR GOODS.
I have one entire floor devoted to the display of these goods alone, and have over sixty different varieties to select from. Complete Suits anywhere from $35 to $650, and odd pieces—such as Sofas, Divans, Easy Chairs, Patent Rockers, Window and Reception Chairs—at as low prices in proportion as the Complete Suits. I have these goods in Cherry, Mahogany and Walnut, and can give you your choice of any of the following coverings: Crushed, Embossed, Plain and Silk Plushes, Hair Cloth, Mohair, Raw and Spun Silks, Satins, English Tapestries, French Velours, Petit Point, Broeatelle or Damasks. I make a specialty of these goods, have many of the patterns made specially for my own trade, and can offer a greater variety at lower prices than any other house in the South.

NEW STOCK
In all departments, and every grade of goods, from the cheapest to the most expensive, in endless variety. I have all the latest and most fashionable designs, and, as I have only purchased from factories whose goods I have been selling for the past six years, can and do guarantee every piece of Furniture that leaves my establishment.



LOW PRICES
are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.
A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and whether you wish to pay $40 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs.
I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.
I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

"Had your vacation?" No. "Well, don't forget to take along Johnson's Anodyne Liniment."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The Lottery bill, having passed the House of Representatives, has been acted on by the Senate Committee. Two important amendments have been made. One is to increase the amount to be paid for the franchise from $25,000,000 to $31,250,000. It will now go back to the House.

A House bill, known as the Sunday Law amendment, has been reported on favorably by the committee in charge in the General Assembly of Louisiana. The bill exempts all cities of a size larger than 25,000 inhabitants, and New Orleans is the only city that will be affected by its passage. The Sabbath Rest League of this city has entered a protest against the discriminative feature, declaring it unconstitutional.

The bill authorizing the New Orleans Terminal Company to build a bridge at New Orleans has been revised to meet the objections stated in the recent report of the commission of engineers, and has been reintroduced in the House and referred to the War Department for a report. It leavos the location of the bridge to the diseretion of the War Department.

A bill for the admission of Wyoming as a State was passed by the Senate on June 27.

The case of the State vs. Joseph St. Amant, a member of the House of Representatives from the parish of Ascension, on trial in Baton Rouge on the charge of having received bribes aggregating $16,000 from the Louisiana State Lottery Company, was brought to a sudden end. The district attorney, prevented from delaying the trial of the case, entered a nolle prosequl, and the defendant was discharged.

All the Western States are suffering intensely from high temperature. At Burlington, Ia., the mercury has gone as high as 106 in the shade. There are prostrations by the hundreds and many deaths.

Superintendent of Census Porter has said that from present indications the returns of the enumerators would show a total population of the United States of 64,500,000 against 50,155,783 in 1880.

The announcement by the supervising architect that he would in three weeks advertise for bids to construct the public building at Monroe, La., was brought out by a sharp letter from Representative Boatner to the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he stated he would make the matter a subject for congressional inquiry unless steps were taken to erect the building, for which an appropriation was made two years ago.

A disastrous fire occurred at Troy, Ala., on June 30, which destroyed half the town. Loss, $100,000.

It is estimated at the Treasury Department that there has been a decrease of about $20,000,000 in the public debt since June 1. This will make the total decrease for the fiscal year ended June 30, $87,800,000, as against $114,000,000 for the previous fiscal year.

FOREIGN.

The committee which was sent from France to Panama to investigate the condition of the canal has made a further report on the prospects of the enterprise. The committee says that the construction of the canal at the calculated level would occupy twenty years and would cost 1,737,000,000 francs.

Emperor Francis Joseph has sanctioned the first compromise bill passed by the Bohemian diet in May last. The bill divides the provincial educational council into two sections—German and Czech.

The cholera has appeared at Auray, Brittany, and other places in western France.

In the House of Commons, on June 27, Sir James Fergusson, Under Foreign Secretary, referring to a report that the agreement with Germany included a secret clause providing for an alliance with that country in the event of war, denied that the government had undertaken any new obligations toward European powers.

Emperor William arrived at Elsinor on June 28. He was met at the landing by King Christian, Crown Prince Frederick and other Danish royalties, and civil and military authorities, and was given a cordial greeting by the local dignitaries. The royal party proceeded by train to Fredensberg, where a banquet was given at the castle.

The renewal of the Triple Alliance until 1895 has been the subject of negotiations between Signor Crispi, the Italian premier, and Count Kalnoky, the Austro-Hungarian prime minister. The new treaty, though unsigned, is effectively secured, the communications which have already been exchanged committing the governments to the extension of the period of the compact.

The chief of the Czar's private police has been dismissed for failing to detect a recent nihilist plot. A barrel half full of dynamite was found in the wine cellar of the Gatschina Palace, but no clue as to how it came there had been discovered.

A statue of Joan of Arc was unveiled at Nancy, France, on June 28. The ceremonies were of an impressive character.

Some Russian papers urge the formation of a treaty of alliance with France as a counterpoise to the alleged defensive alliance between England and Germany. Others papers prefer the present tacit alliance between Russia and France. The latter sentiment prevails in official circles.

Two French inhabitants of Coburg, near the frontier, were fired upon by a German sentry. They were gathering fire wood in a forest on the frontier and crossed into German territory. The sentry challenged them and ordered them to withdraw. As they made no reply he fired, wounding one of them.

Boils and Pimples and other affections arising from impure blood may appear at this season, when the blood is heated. Hood's Sarsaparilla removes the cause of these troubles by purifying, vitalizing and enriching the blood, and at the same time it gives strength to the whole system.

THE DEPARTURE—THE PULLMAN PALACE CAR—STREET CARS—SOUTHERN RIVERS AND SLAVERY SONGS—CENTRAL DEPOT—OHIO—CITY OF CLEVELAND—MT. VERNON—THE HUDSON RIVER.

For many years I have desired to visit the Holy Land. While I realized the omnipresence of the Savior, and that he was not to be confined to Jerusalem or Mt. Gerizim, and that his gracious presence made all places sacred, yet still the desire remained in the heart to see the earthly city of our God, and to tread the paths, ascend the slopes, and stand in the places forever made peculiarly and tenderly sacred by the footsteps and voice and presence of Jesus, the Son of God. By a combination of providential circumstances the trip was made possible, and so, on Monday evening, June 23, I found myself bidding farewell to a band of friends who accompanied me to the cars to say God-speed at the beginning of a journey to last four months.

When Paul was "accompanied to the ship" by his friends, he was consigned to wind and wave and many perils; but the writer was left in the midst of all the conveniences and luxuries of a Pullman palace car. Cushioned seats, and mirrors reflecting at every angle, a snowy-aproned attendant awaiting your orders, and an electric bell to summon him, were some of the contrasting features that served to humble the writer as he recalled the much-suffering apostle. After a little, an inviting supper-table, with spotless cloth and shining silverware, is placed before the traveler, who, in spite of hunger, gives most of his observation to the flying scene outside the car window. Later on a pleasant bed takes the place of the table, and the utter dissimilarity to the Pauline experience is established. Surely, we say, the centuries are different, and the treatment of preachers is different, and the life of a bloated bondholder is to-day fairly thrust upon the traveler. But, softly; let us not go so fast. "Things," said the poet, "are not always what they seem." The bill of fare is anything but a fair bill when the time of settlement comes. As for the bed, curtained, as it was, in darkness, it proved a stronghold for the mosquitoes, who arose at once and claimed the occupant for their own. Rendered desperate by their attacks, the writer raised the car window, when, in ten minutes, he was reduced to the condition of Pompeii, being covered with ashes and cinders from the Vesuvian locomotive. Let us now touch the electric bell, and bring the aproned servant to our relief. But he heeds not the touch. We ring again and again; but, according to Tennyson's "Mariana," "'He cometh not,' she said." He never did come. We saw and heard others ring for him; but he never responded. If there is anything in the world a negro hates, it is a bell. Let the ladies speak awhile to this point. The electric bell in the Pullman is an innocent affair, a child amuser, and a pretty toy; but for the purpose for which it was constructed, it is an utter failure and a useless appendage. Just a word more about this flying palace, and we leave it. The eggs gave out in Southern Alabama, the tomatoes in North Alabama, the ice was exhausted in Tennessee, and the lemons all departed in Kentucky. "Things are not what they seem," said Longfellow, prophetically, of the palace car.

In passing through several of our larger cities, as I traveled northward, I was struck very favorably with two street cars. One was run by electricity, and lighted by it as well. It was of a much lighter and more attractive pattern than the one now being run as an advertising sample in New Orleans. As I saw the car coming up the street, I was first struck with its noiselessness, and, second, by its brilliant appearance. The first thought was that it had been fitted up for some festive occasion. A few moments after, on another line, I saw the car with which we are all familiar—the car with its feeble, glimmering light, with its jingling traces, tinkling bell, rattling hoofs, and loud cries and whip-lashings of the driver. Another street car that is quite popular I find in our large cities; has six or seven seats, each seat accommodating four or five individuals. These seats are placed transversely on the car. The people thus seated with all faces to the front are saved from the discomfort of being stared out of countenance by rude people immediately opposite. A step runs on either side of the car for its whole length. In case of danger, or a panic, the car could be emptied in three seconds. By a curious coincidence I saw in a Northern city these two cars that I had admired separately, coupled together, the electric car drawing the other.

The names of our Southern rivers, as I have crossed the streams one by one, have brought back to memory a number of what was called "slavery songs." The Tombigby, the Tennessee, the Kentucky and the Ohio each brought back one or more of those peculiarly pathetic melodies. A frequently recurring expression was "'Way down." Way down upon such a river; way down in such a State. Then came the words, "Toiling in the cotton and the cane." There were heart-breaking pictures of separated husbands and wives, and parted parents and children. A child is stolen from its Virginia home, a wife is carried "to Georgia to wear her life away." A husband languishes in bondage "from the old Kentucky home, far away." The Tennessee, the Ohio, the Suwanee and other rivers, through the power of song were made in their meandering to become frames to pictures of unutterable pathos and beauty. The balls and bayonets of 1861-5 tore away the living pictures, but the frames are still left; and I can never look at their pebbly edges and willow margins without thinking of the pictures which they once encased. As a child, although my father was a slave-owner, my eyes were often moistened under the influence of these songs of slavery. But my eyes were not the only ones that were wet. Tears dripped in many States and lands. And these tears meant revolution and deliverance; for when you see thousands of people grieving over a state of things, that means a coming social or moral upheaval. And when a nation gets to singing about its troubles—the day of redemption is nigh! When the Marseilles hymn leaped from lip to lip and, we might say, flowed from eye to eye, a nation awoke from its long slumber and sprang into freedom. I am convinced that song is one of God's mightiest agencies for the effecting of his purposes, and I feel assured as well that the songs of slavery, or the negro melodies, did as much, if not more, than speech or book, for the preparing of the people for emancipation.

As I have studied the grand central depots that constitute one of the remarkable features of our large cities, I am more than ever impressed that here is one of the great needs of New Orleans. I know nothing that more impresses a traveler than the focalized travel and business seen at a great central depot. The constant arrival of trains from different quarters of the country, the roar of vehicles, the rush of constantly changing crowds of people, will advertise the city in the most forcible of ways. The Niagara distributed into twenty different channels would hardly be worth visiting; but the Niagara thundering away at one place attracts the nations. Let New Orleans gather up her railroad streamlets and pour them into her corporate lines, in the form of one great Niagara of a central depot. She will never regret it.

Crossing the State of Ohio, diagonally, to Cleveland, on its northern edge, we were struck with the fact that we were never a single minute out of the limits of a field of wheat. The forms of Beauty and Prosperity were never out of sight in that wonderful State. That is a nation in itself. The country approximates my conception of English scenery. There are vast expanses of gently undulating tableland. The crops are diversified, and, by their different colors, giving a new charm to the landscape. The well-kept fences, the neatly trimmed hedges, the cosy country homes buried in orchards, or fronting spacious grassy lawns, and here and there spires or a belfry peeping above a distant line of trees, declaring the presence of town or village—all combined to bring England constantly to mind.

The city of Cleveland, situated beautifully, imposingly and advantageously by that inland sea, Lake Erie, is destined to municipal greatness of the first order. Ten miles away, as we approached it over the level fields, we saw a vast cloud hovering over it. It proved to be the smoke of her multitudinous factories.

I am reminded here that at a point south of Cleveland, several years ago, I deflected from my course on a Northern trip and looked in on Washington City and Mt. Vernon. The day before I started the dentist extracted an aching tooth. In some way I contracted cold in the lacerated spot, and went North with the cup of physical woe full to overflowing. In company with seventy or eighty others, I took the steamer that drops down the Potomac every morning from Washington to Mt. Vernon, twenty miles away. Of all the people that ever visited the place, I think that I bore the most appropriate countenance. A pain that looked like the deepest sorrow was written on every lineament of the face. At the landing we filed up the steep hill to the well-known tomb of Washington. One corpulent lady, just ahead of me, said in a loud voice, in the midst of her labored breathing, "Well, here is George at last!" I have smiled often since at this occurrence; but did not then. I knew but one thing, remembered but one word, and that thing and word was, Pain! And so I looked at the tomb of the Father of his Country with an agonized expression of countenance that was altogether misunderstood by the people around me, and, doubtless, obtained great credit for me in their minds. They thought I was taking the death of Washington very much to heart, or, perhaps, they supposed I might just have heard that he was dead!

"But I never told my grief;
But let concealment, like a worm in the bud,
Prey on my damaged cheek."

I had the pleasure of coming down from Albany to New York last Thursday on the eastern bank of the Hudson river. What a panorama of beauty it presents to the fascinated eye! How History and Fiction and Legend and Poetry and great characters and lovely scenery all come down together to its banks and wave their hands in greeting to the passing traveler!

Westward, some ten or fifteen miles away, tower, like a dark blue thundercloud in the heavens, the Catskill Mountains. On the very top gleams the palace-like front of a great summer hotel that can be seen twenty miles away.

Still farther away to the south is a distant range of mountains, the wavy outline of whose summit makes a perfect representation of a recumbent man. Think of a human figure outlined on the sky for fifteen miles. It looks corpse-like, while the mountains serve as the bier. The face, cold gray, upturned to the sky, is to me like that of Washington.

Beautiful and palatial homes are sprinkled on both shores; while the towns and cities, descending from heights to water's edge, present, both day and night, a most striking appearance. The river itself is dotted all along its length with shipping and pleasure boats. The question arises in me, Can the Rhine be any lovelier?

Yonder, on the right, at Newbergh, where you see the United States flag floating over an ancient-looking building, was Washington's headquarters. Lower down the river, on the western side, nestles West Point, the cradle of our military greatness. Washington himself selected the spot. It is certainly lovely and commanding. The buildings and grounds are on a plateau half-way up the tall bluff that faces the river. Further down still is Stony Point, which, if my historical memory is not at fault, was taken from the British by Gen. Wayne in a night assault. Up those rocky sides our men climbed and swept all before them. Strangely, there comes to my mind this verse, suggested by this incident of war. Let the young man who reads this memorize this stanza of a famous poet:

"The heights by great men reached and kept,
Were not attained by sudden flight;
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night."

Near this point Washington flung an iron chain across the river to stop the English fleet. They broke it easily, and called it "the American pumpkin vine." A little further down, on the eastern bank, we pass in a few yards of the place where Arnold and Major Andre had their midnight interview in regard to the surrender of West Point. How they whispered here in these dark woods together! No one heard them; and yet all the world knows to-day of that guilty midnight conference of wickedness. The leaves overhead sighed over the treachery, the boughs of the trees wrung and tossed their hands in horror, and flung the dark secret to the waves at their feet, and they, the waves, sped away with the history of the act to an astounded nation. So, truly did the night whisper of Judas, and the priests became a mighty voice that has filled the world. They thought no one would ever know of a thing whispered in the night! Here was a double guard or wall—a whisper and the night! They forgot that Jesus said, "There is nothing hid but shall be known."

I have reached the limit defined by the hand of the editor, and so suddenly conclude.

In my next letter, either to the NEW ORLEANS or the Nashville Advocate, I desire to briefly describe my visit, on yesterday, to "Sleepy Hollow," and the grave and home of Washington Irving.

I sail on Wednesday morning, at five o'clock A. M., for England.

B. CARRADINE.

The Case of Col. W. L. Hemingway.

This great State case, which has kept the public mind in a caldron of excitement for the past three months, came to a close on last Thursday morning, the particulars of which are given below. When the end came, about nine o'clock, and the awful reality of the situation dawned upon our people, a funeral pall seemed, like a dark cloud, to settle over the entire city. Business almost suspended. Men spoke with bated breath; and where but a moment before all went "happy as a marriage bell," briny tears trickled down the cheeks of many heretofore unused to weep. Indeed, I never saw a sadder day in Jackson for a large majority of her best people. Our most distinguished lawyers think there is no doubt about a reversal by the Supreme Court; but whether this will be the case or not, no one who knows Col. Hemingway will ever believe, for a moment, that he has appropriated a single dollar of this money to his own use. He is an honest man.

AITCH. AITCH. AITCH.

THE LAST DAY'S PROCEEDINGS OF THE HEMINGWAY TRIAL.

Court was called to order this morning at 9 o'clock, and in a few minutes the jury in the Hemingway case who had been confined in an ante-room since 8 o'clock last night, filed in and took their seats. Judge Chrisman asked if they had made a verdict, when O. W. Cox, foreman of the jury, replied they had, and handed it to the clerk. Although a large number of people, curious to know the finding of the jury, had crowded into the court-room, the dropping of a pin could have been heard from the furthermost corner. Judge Chrisman had ordered the sheriff and his deputies to arrest every man who made any demonstration, whatever the verdict might be. The report had leaked out that the jury would return a verdict favorable to the defendant, who with many staunch friends had found seats within the bar. They all expected something very different from what they were doomed to hear. Their hopes were high; chances of a favorable verdict had been discussed by the defendant and his counsel and friends before the assembling of the court, and they all expressed the conviction that the verdict would be such as was wanted. Col. Hemingway sat immediately in front of the judge, and, with bated breath and heart in his mouth, awaited the reading of the verdict by the clerk, who read as follows: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment, and recommend him to the mercy of the court." The defendant was utterly stunned by the force of the blow, but made no demonstration to indicate its force, except that his countenance assumed an ashen hue, and he seemed at last to realize the full extent of his situation. No word escaped him, no murmur, no tears, no threats; he sat stolid, and, to all outward appearances, indifferent. But those who know him best, those who are still proud to clasp his hand with a firm and abiding belief in his honesty and innocence, knew that his warm and generous old heart had been rent asunder and noted the scalding tears which rose, unbidden, to the surface.

These reflections were cut short by the announcement from Judge Calhoon, that the defense had a motion to offer, which was as follows: "And now comes the defendant and moves the arrest of judgment because the indictment as returned into court does not charge any offense known to the laws of this State."

After considerable discussion by both the State and defense, during which the law bearing on the different counts of the indictments and the sections of the code under which the indictments were drawn were discussed, the court overruled the motion.

The defense offered then another motion which asked for a new trial, and was as follows:

"And now comes the defendant and moves the court to set aside the verdict and grant him a new trial in this court for the following reasons:

1. The verdict of the jury is against the law and instructions of the court.

2. The court erred in giving the instructions for the State, and in refusing instructions numbered 14 to 36, inclusive, asked by the defendant, and in modifying defendant's fifth instruction by erasing the words 'to amount as charged in the indictment.'

3. The district attorney in his concluding speech to the jury conducted himself improperly, and went outside the evidence and thus prejudiced the minds of the jury by a suggestion or statement of certain incipiatory facts not in evidence, and based argument thereon, and stated matters of fact contrary to the evidence in this case.

4. The verdict of the jury is against the evidence.

5. The court erred in overruling the motion for continuance, and permitting juror Dorsey to be challenged for cause.

6. And for other causes to be assigned at the hearing."

Col. Nugent, in offering the motion for a new trial, reviewed at considerable length the closing speech made by the district attorney, and urged that he referred to matters totally out of his lawful track, and which were not brought out in the evidence before the jury. Among other items treated by Mr. Miller, in his closing speech, Col. Nugent called the special attention of the court to the following portions of the speech of the district attorney:

"I want to ask you now where he got that $10,000 to put in that bank. But oh, says Brother Nugent, he just pulls out that $10,000. Wouldn't you like to go home and raise your children by telling them that you turned a fellow loose that there was no doubt about his getting $315,000, understand, and then that he walked right out with $10,000 of that money out of the State treasury on the sixth of January, and paid it over for stock in a bank; and still you give your approval to that. Where did he get that money to put in that bank? They say he paid it in January. The burden of explaining where he got it is on him. Where did he get that money? The court tells you. I do not have to go and show that Col. Hemingway took $5,000 here to-day to buy a plantation in Coahoma county, or that he took $10,000 another day, and went to Dakota to buy a wheat farm, and that he took $5,000 some other time, and went over to Kansas City and bought lots there, or that he took $2,000 of the people's money and bought a fine carriage at another time, and that he took $2,500 of the people's money to buy a fine pair of horses at another time. The burden of that explanation is on him."

Col. Nugent was followed by Mr. Green, who first explained the deposit of certificates of indebtedness in Green's Bank, and denounced the reference to them in the bank as uncalled for and unjust. He then took up the instructions given by the court to the jury, and discussed them at length.

Mr. Williamson replied on the part of the State, refuting the numerous charges made upon the district attorney by counsel for the defense, and stated Mr. Miller's exact language was not known, especially in what he said about Gov. Lowry going to Natchez with Col. Hemingway to borrow the money from Britton & Koontz.

Col. Nugent replied that he had Mr. Buck here last night to take down the speeches, and had Mr. Miller's exact language on the borrowing of money at Natchez, and read that portion of the speech.

Mr. Miller here interrupted with the remark that these matters were merely mentioned as illustrations to show what might have become of the money, to what uses it might have been put, and in that connection mentioned the trip to Natchez and the Green Bank matter.

Col. Nugent replied that those things were not in evidence, and that the defense had never denied that Col. Hemingway received the certificates that were reported in Green's Bank.

Judge Calhoon remarked he thought the course of the district attorney was farther off the track and more unfair than any man he had ever seen. His appeal to the jury, patting Bro. Cummings on the back, and telling the jury that, if they failed to convict, they would go out with a brand of infamy on their brow. He quoted Mr. Miller's statement, that "if he had J. B. H. Hemingway and Hal Green here, he could a tale unfold that would make each particular hair stand on end, like the quills upon the fretful porcupine."

After some more discussion, Judge Chrisman announced that he would overrule the motion for a new trial, and said:

"The court feels keenly the criticism on the character of the argument made by the district attorney, because while there was extemption for him, considering his surroundings and the heat of the argument, there would seem to be none for the court when it failed to interrupt him when he made reference to the signers on the head of the defendant. The other remarks complained of the court considered as an illustration instead of a comment upon a fact. But the leading and controlling question is the guilt or innocence of the defendant, and if the verdict could not and should not have been otherwise, and it is sustained by an overwhelming preponderance of the evidence, it ought to be sustained, and believing that it is so sustained, the motion for a new trial is overruled."

In answer to the court, "Have you anything to say?" Col. Hemingway replied, "I have nothing to say;" but, after a slight pause, he continued:

"I believe I will make a few remarks. Realizing the terrible situation in which I am placed, I find it extremely difficult to formulate words to express my feelings. I must protest against the undue haste with which the case has been worked up against me. The district attorney has worked against me with a vigilance and persecution heretofore unheard of. He made the original affidavit against me, and took no steps to fix the amount of the bond; and, after being fixed, he made no effort to have it raised, which goes to show he believed in the depths of his heart that I was innocent.

"The amount of my bond was only $25,000, and the amount which I am accused of abstracting is $315,612 19. How easy it would have been for me, if guilty, to have paid the little bond and gone beyond the jurisdiction of this court, or any other court. I am informed and believe that a serious injustice has been done me by the court in refusing to grant my petition for a continuance. My counsel have searched in vain for a parallel case; never before was a case of such magnitude and importance, both to the defendant and to the State, been brought to trial in such an unwarranted and hasty manner. Errors have been discovered and proven here which, if not for the last speech of the district attorney, would not only have created a doubt, but absolutely carried conviction of my innocence. His speech was the most unfair, unjust and dishonorable that ever fell from the lips of a law officer. I stand before this court and this audience and assert my innocence. I have been convicted by a jury of my countrymen; I may go to the penitentiary, and I may die there; and when I go to the bar of God, may go to hell; but, thank God! it will never fall to the level of that man (pointing to the district attorney). Nothing was more unfair than the action of the district attorney when he stated that I had used $2,000 of the people's money to buy a pair of horses and a large sum to dress my servant in livery. He did not state these things as an illustration, but as facts, and which he knew to be false. He had three months to get up the evidence of where I got that money; but he never tried to prove it. He had given it out to the public that he had a witness to testify that I had telegraphed to New Orleans for $150,000. The operator who sent the telegram, and the express man through whom he claimed the money was brought, were kept here several days, drawing their wages as witnesses; but never a word of such proof was attempted. It was only done to manufacture public opinion and poison the public mind and the jury against me. He has done everything he could against me to injure and disgrace me."

After Col. Hemingway had addressed the court, he folded his hands and stood silent to receive the sentence, and, after a short pause, Judge Chrisman said:

"There is no evidence in this case as to what became of the money which the jury found to be missing from the treasury. There is no evidence in the record to show that any part of it was converted by you to the purchase of property, or expended by you for your individual use. You were convicted in this court on the third count in the indictment which charged that you had willfully omitted to pay over to your successor in office $315,612 15, according to your legal obligation. Your friends do not believe you used it for your own benefit. Believing that the testimony sustains the third count in the indictment, you are sentenced to five years' imprisonment in the penitentiary."

At the conclusion of the sentence by Judge Chrisman, Col. Hemingway broke down completely and wept like a little child, with his bowed head resting upon his hands, whilst around him gathered his only son, his brother and several other near and dear relatives, and a host of sympathizing friends.

Whilst this affecting scene was being enacted, Judge Calhoon appealed the case to the Supreme Court, and Col. Hemingway was admitted to bail for his appearance next October in the sum of $10,000.—Clarion-Ledger, June 27.

THE BELLS OF EARTH.

BY INCREASE N. TARBOX, D. D.

The bells of earth go sounding on
From many an ancient steeple,
Telling their tales of joy and woe
To all the waiting people:
In merry strains of festal mirth
They cheer our hours of gladness,
Or wail their cry, when midnight flames
Are raging in their madness:
So on they ring, these bells of earth,
With note that never changes;
But over all the chords of life
Their mystic music ranges.

To-day they mourn a nation's loss,
In heavy moans of sorrow,
But chant the tripping wedding-march
In gladsome tones to-morrow;
To-day they sing of victory,
With banners gayly flying,
To-morrow requiems for the slain
On all the winds are sighing:
So on they ring, these bells of earth,
With note that never changes;
But over all the chords of life
Their mystic music ranges.

How gently, on the morning air,
The Sabbath bells are calling;
How softly, at the hour of prayer,
When evening dews are falling;
But when death's sad procession moves,
And bells are slowly tolling,
How mournfully upon the ear
These waves of sound come rolling:
So on they ring, these bells of earth,
With note that never changes;
But over all the chords of life
Their mystic music ranges.

Their note is one—but human souls,
All thoughts and passions blending,
Can turn the music at their will,
To each emotion bending;
These songs from turret and from tower,
Which o'er the land are ringing,
Are echoes from the self-same song,
Which every heart is singing:
So on they ring, these bells of earth,
With note that never changes;
But over all the chords of life
Their mystic music ranges.

Whitworth Female College.

This noted institution of learning needs no fulsome words of praise from me, or anyone else. Its reputation is known throughout our country; its character is established; its president, vice-president and faculty measure fully up to the highest expectation of the church in its patronizing territory; yet we like to be reassured, annually, of these facts by a report from an eye-witness. The commencement exercises took place June 8-10. A large and appreciative congregation were present in the chapel on Sunday, at eleven o'clock A. M., to hear the commencement sermon by Dr. Monk, of Memphis. The speaker seemed to be fully at himself, and master of his subject and the situation. It was one of his happiest efforts. The sermon, in all its features, was a good one, and to the edification of all who enjoy a pure, logical gospel sermon. The annual sermon before the Young Ladies' Christian Association was preached at eight o'clock P. M. by this scribe. Bishop Galloway, who was present, said we had a good text; and I suppose no one will dare appeal from his judgment.

The exercises on Monday morning opened with a debate by the senior class—ten in number, five on each side. Subject: "Resolved, That Co-Education Promotes the Higher Culture of Both Sexes." The young ladies acquitted themselves grandly, reflecting great credit, at the same time, on the skillful hands by which they had been trained. The discussion evinced a great deal of research, and intellectual grasp and training, by which they handled a live subject with a dexterity rarely witnessed on such an occasion. Though but little margin was left, on either side, for a decision—so close was the contest—the judges decided in favor of the negative, and awarded the medal to Miss Annie Buckley, of Jackson, Miss., as the best debater. The concert on Monday and the entertainments of the afternoon and at night gave evidence of very superior training in the departments of music, art, and elocution. Indeed, they were of the highest order—the faculty in these departments being specialists.

Tuesday was commencement day. The annual address was delivered by Rev. W. R. Sims, of the University of Mississippi. Subject, "Talking, and the Talker." It was superb, abounding in common sense, wit, humor, portrayal of character, and with some of the purest gems of literature and refined thought—delivered in language as chaste and beautiful as a pure English could make it. The valedictorian was Miss Sadie Dove, of Arkansas. Her essay was in harmony with the occasion, and delivered in a sweet, gentle, dove-like voice and manner that gave a peculiar charm to her impressive words of farewell to president, faculty, class-mates and friends. The editor of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE failing to put in an appearance at the expected hour, general disappointment prevailed; but his excuse was received, and the president of the college, prepared, it seems, for all emergencies, supplied the place with an easy grace and feast of practical thought that surprised and gratified all.

The college is the best equipped, in every way, of any institution of the kind within my knowledge. The location and grounds are beautiful, the buildings superb; the furniture, instruments of music and apparatus abundant, and of the best quality.

The past session has been one of the most prosperous, harmonious, and satisfactory. The faculty, the patrons and the students all express satisfaction. The conduct and studiousness of the young ladies are reported to have been exceptionally good throughout the session. The healthy glow, the cheery laugh, the lady-like deportment, the air of contentment, the moral and religious character, together with the literary and scientific development of the young ladies—all speak loudly for this college.

Grenada District Conference.

On the evening of June 26, the delegation, ministerial, lay and visiting, were met at Greenwood by Bro. Shipman, the preacher in charge of McNutt and Sunny Side, Leflore county, and conducted to the Brantly House, and strengthened and refreshed with a substantial supper, and then repaired to the John F. Allen, a neat little boat, which was held over from two o'clock till seven to carry this delegation to Sunny Side, the place appointed for the meeting of the Grenada District Conference of North Mississippi. All were cheerful and pleasant as the boat left the wharf, carrying some people from the hill country who had never seen this beautiful delta country. Methodists soon know each other, and it was not long before all were inquiring of Bro. Shipman concerning everything. He and others answered all questions to the satisfaction of all until it was suggested that by a recent change in the holding of the North Mississippi Woman's Missionary Meeting at Sardis, instead of Greenville, had changed the programme of the people of Sunny Side, as they wished to hold a Woman's Missionary Meeting on Friday; but their delegates were called to Sardis at this time; so it was suggested that some line of action or plan for the morrow or Friday be adopted at once. So Bro. T. J. Newell, of Grenada Collegiate Institute, was called to the chair and a secretary appointed and a Sunday-school programme arranged, after which the members engaged in a general social chat, and some, securing berths, laid themselves down to be rocked to sleep by the gentle motion of the Allen. Next morning at sunrise nearly all were on the roof looking at the very beautiful farming country through which we were passing, and many expressions of delight escaped the lips of the new visitors. At six o'clock in the morning we arrived at Sunnyside, and, indeed, it was a Sunny Side. In a few moments every delegate and visitor had a sunny home, and the people clamorous for more guests. This writer was domiciled with Bro. Page and wife; he, of Black Hawk, and she of Vaiden; both of which places can well be proud of the solid Christian influence they are wielding in their new home. Their home was truly ours. The time having been fixed for the Sunday-school session, to open at 9:30 o'clock, we repaired to the beautiful church situated upon the bank of the Tallahatchie, a short distance below the town, and commenced the exercises by recalling Bro. Newell to the chair, in the absence of Dr. J. W. Price; and the various topics were discussed so freely and fully that some good will follow, we hope, in every charge represented. Bro. T. W. Lewis, of Winona station and district, was a visitor, and most welcome and helpful was he in these discussions and afterward in preaching the Word. His friends in this section are numbered by the scores. Dinner on the ground, and everything so fit and appropriate, shade and water in abundance, and just superb. On the next morning, at nine o'clock, Dr. J. W. Price, presiding elder, was in the chair and called the Conference to order, and the order of the day was the business of the Conference; and of eighteen charges composing the district twelve were represented. The spiritual condition represented health and strength. Sunday-school interests well up and education improving. Finances average well, church-houses building, improving all along the line; missions and all special collections having prompt attention. Committees were had on the matters to be determined upon, and I send you some of the resolutions.

A committee reported as follows after reaffirming its interest in Christian education:

Rejoice that the enterprise of Millsaps Methodist College for boys and young men in our State has been inaugurated and is in progress in securing an endowment fund. We are also glad to know that the Grenada Collegiate Institute has just closed another very successful year.

Resolved, That we do all we can to further the interests of Millsaps Methodist College, and that the Rev. A. F. Watkins, the agent, is urgently invited to visit our charges in the interest of this institution.

Resolved, That we note with pleasure the presence of Rev. T. J. Newell, president of Grenada Collegiate Institute. The management of this institution we most heartily endorse, and we recommend that he be requested to address the Conference this morning at eleven o'clock in the interest of these institutions, and that he take a collection for endowment fund of the Millsaps Methodist College.

Resolved, That the Methodists of this district be urgently requested to patronize our own institutions of learning. S. D. LONG, for Com.

Collection resulted in $505.

The next resolution was in regard to the destruction of church property at Oxford by fire, on which was no insurance, and Bro. S. D. Long, of Oxford station, was requested to present the matter, which he did, resulting in a collection of $301 95; and all congregations in the district are to have this matter presented to them.

J. M. WYATT, for Com.

The Conference reaffirmed by resolution its faith in the prohibition laws, and trust that the day is not far off when the State shall be entirely free from the saloon power.

Resolved, That this Conference heartily approve the resolution passed by the Sardis District Conference, inviting Bro. J. H. Brooks to preach on the fiftieth anniversary of his Conference membership before the next North Mississippi Annual Conference, to convene at Grenada, December 10, 1890, and hope he will comply with the request.

C. H. MOREHEAD, for Com.

Resolved, That the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, our Conference organ, is a pure, good paper and deserves our patronage; but we would be glad to see more Conference news in its columns, and a more vigorous discussion of the great interests of our church. T. J. NEWELL, for Com.

Resolved, That the thanks of this body are due and are hereby tendered to the good people of this community for their generous hospitality, and to the captain of the steamboat for favors.

J. C. WOODRUFF, for Com.

There were others which would be reported but for fear of taxing your space too much; but we must mention one more matter specially. We have a Ministerial Aid Association in this District Conference; and as the election of officers was at hand, Dr. Price gave permission to bring more prominently before the Conference by presenting the matter. Bro. T. J. Newell did this, and many responded by paying their annual dues, and a brother and local preacher arose and stated he would like to belong to this association, but he had not the means, as he only had sufficient to carry him home. His fee was paid, and in his own way he told how he was striving to preach and support a wife and three children, and also to fit himself to preach the gospel, and it was the most powerful appeal that was ever heard in that valley for ministerial aid; and it was answered as few have ever been before. His people tried to persuade him not to come to District Conference; he had not the means to spare. He said: "I am going, and I'll not lessen the meager home-purse. God has blessed Joe Woodruff with strong arms and willing hands." So he went out and cut oats for the money to carry him to District Conference at Sunny Side, which was some 150 miles from his home (or where he lives), and a layman put into his hands, through Dr. Price, one hundred and fifty dollars, and ministers, who were not overburdened with cash, forgetting their own needs, were putting money into Joe's pockets, and he saying: "Oh, no, brother. You keep it; you need it." Something over $200 was raised, and then books promised, so we don't know how to figure on this collection. But one thing sure—there was more genuine godly religion in it than I ever saw in a collection before; and the religious fervor increased, broke out fresh next morning in the love-feast, ran over into the communion sermon and service, and continued through the afternoon service, and if Bro. S. D. Long had not been sick, so he could not preach, and would have preached from Malachi about "bring all your tithes into the storehouse of the Lord," I just don't know what would have happened. And all this $1,000 or more, and good, sweet, melting religious time all through without a Bishop.

Brethren, after we fill our pockets a little, we are willing to have another District Conference at Sunny Side, or its neighbor.

Delegates to Annual Conference: B. F. Saunders, G. P. Lake, J. A. Towns, H. H. Estes. Alternates: T. J. Manley, M. G. Dubard.

HEMINGWAY, Miss.

An Easy Plan to Make Up the Loss.

The loss of a church, in which to meet and worship God, is a very great calamity to any community, as New Iberia is just now experiencing. To build the church at first a heavy contribution, in some instances, has to be levied upon the willing people; and then for it to be destroyed, and they have to rebuild, unaided, often requires a hard struggle, indeed. And some plan ought to be adopted by the whole Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to meet such a contingency, and distribute the duty among the whole membership, or make it so light upon each one that it would be just a pleasure, instead of a hardship, to perform it. Let the church adopt the plan herewith submitted, or devise and adopt a better one. By the plan here suggested, the contribution called for from each church would be nominal, and the exact amount due could be definitely arrived at, and no question could be raised about it; and the community, that had suffered the loss, could be easily reinstated, and that without delay. D. W. FOSTER.

PLAISANCE, La.

THE PLAN.

Sec. 1. Let each and every church and parsonage belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, be fairly valued and recorded in a book of record specially for the purpose, and kept by the Secretary of Church Extension, at Nashville, Tenn.

Sec. 2. Whenever a church or parsonage be destroyed by fire or other element, the said secretary shall be forthwith notified of the fact by the trustees of the property lost, stating the nature and extent of the loss.

Sec. 3. And immediately upon receipt of the information, the said secretary shall ascertain, by exact calculation, what percentage of the whole church and parsonage property recorded (including that just lost) will be required to make up the recorded value of the property just destroyed; and he shall notify each and every church by mail, without delay, of the facts—of the loss, and the amount—and from it to make up the same.

Sec. 4. And immediately on receipt of the information from the said secretary, each and every church shall promptly forward its quota of money to the trustees of the lost property.

Sec. 5. And the said trustees shall at once acknowledge to each and every church receipt of the money received from it, and shall also acknowledge receipt of the same to the said Secretary of Church Extension, who shall keep a record of the whole.

Help Called For.

The town of Lake Arthur is on a beautiful lake of the same name, in the southeast corner of Calcasieu parish, Southwest Louisiana. The place is only two and a half years old, and is settled and filling up by a good, industrious class of people, mostly from the Northwest. Some of them are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and are anxious to maintain their church relation. They have organized, and have secured, according to the laws of this State, a very suitable piece of ground on which to build a church-house. They have contributed freely of their scanty means toward erecting a house of worship; but these sums are not sufficient for the purpose. They have secured all that can be obtained in the community—which is mostly Catholic—and yet they can not build even the shell of a house in which to worship God. They have been using for a few months a house that was built and used for a saloon; but the owner refuses to rent it to them beyond the first of July. There is but one other unoccupied room in the town. This is small and unsuited, and may be taken from them at any time. One hundred and fifty dollars will enable us, with what we have, to cover and seat a room that we can use until we can do better.

J. L. GIBSON.

[The presiding elder, Bro. Miller, says that Lake Arthur is the key to a vast region of unoccupied territory in Calcasieu parish, and that the building of the church there will insure our occupancy of that region. Bro. Gibson received a handsome sum at the Opelousas District Conference; but he needs more. We heartily commend his enterprise, and hope that the Louisiana Methodists will send him enough money to build an attractive church.—EDITOR.]

From the Work.

GARLAND, TEXAS.

Bro. George S. Inge, of Holly Springs, Miss., has favored us with a visit to this western empire, the Lone Star State, and, of course, he held a revival service for us, and a revival it was in the highest sense of the term. The meeting began on the fifteenth and lasted nine days with unabated interest, resulting gloriously. One hundred and forty conversions; nearly all of whom were adults. One hundred joined the churches (sixty of the number the Methodist Episcopal Church, South), and others will yet join. The church members were aroused and moved as never before in this country; all denominations shared in the good results.

Bro. Inge says it was one of the grandest meetings of his life. Fully one thousand attended the services every night. Two hundred and fifty dollars were raised during the meeting; two hundred of which was given to Bro. Inge in token of their appreciation of his services; not that his good work done here could be measured by any amount of money. The brethren out here are urging Bro. Inge to stay in Texas and help them, and he has consented to come again during the year. He is now at Forney with Bro. W. M. Adams, and God is blessing him in that town, as he does everywhere he goes.

I have had a prosperous year, so far, in Garland station. Garland is a good town in the rich prairie country, twelve miles from the city of Dallas, in the North Texas Conference. We have been well provided for; have been well pounded; preacher's salary well up to date. Conference assessment raised first of the year, and now this great revival caps the climax. Have received near one hundred members since Conference, and expect a good many more yet. So we will, through the goodness of the Lord, be able at the approaching session of our Conference at Texarkana, November 5, to make a good report, both spiritually and financially.

We are always so glad to receive the weekly visits of the dear old NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, and now, in conclusion, let me send greetings to the dear brethren of the North Mississippi Conference. God bless them till we meet again!

Brethren, there are fifteen of the old North Mississippi preachers now in the North Texas, and all doing good work, and in the sweet by-and-by I expect to find you all in the general assembly of the first born. Send up fervent prayers often for your fellow-servant, H. C. PARROTT.

ELLISVILLE, MISS.

I rejoice to be able to send forth good tidings from this place. June 10, Rev. W. W. Hopper, agent for the Mississippi Conference Endowment Fund, commenced a meeting here that continued through to June 20. From the first service to the close, the people of this community entered heartily into the meeting. Most of the stores closed from ten A. M. to twelve M., allowing employees to attend service.

The word preached was plain and practical, attended by the blessing of the Holy Spirit, and mainly addressed to believers, inciting them to a closer walk with God, and yet not neglecting the unsaved, giving to all a portion in due season. As far as I have been able to ascertain, it is the universal opinion of this community that for solid, permanent results, it has been the best meeting ever held here. Many conversions and eight accessions to Methodist Church, estranged friends reconciled, family altars established, men and women willing to talk to penitents and pray in public, one hundred and forty-five dollars raised in cash and notes for the Conference Endowment Fund, and a purse of fifty dollars for Bro. Hopper. I am glad Bro. Hopper feels called to press upon Christian people the necessity of living holy lives, and that "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin."

Some persons may think it essential to slowly develop and require forty-odd blessings before they can be practical, consistent, pure, entirely sanctified unto the Lord. Let it be so. Others will take a shorter route, and thank God. He will honor Christian faith to its full measure. I believe many suffer great loss of Christian fellowship with God because unwilling to believe that, after proper consecration of all, by an act of faith it is possible to be admitted into the life of perfect love. I have no controversy with any; only see that every attainment is possessed, possible to our present state, in order that we prove faithful witnesses, as the world is to be led to faith in God by the lives that we live. ROBT. B. DOWNER.

STARKVILLE CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

This is our second year on Starkville circuit. We lived six and a half miles west of Starkville last year, in a parsonage said to be worth $75; but have built a new one in Starkville, which is near the center of the circuit, which, including lot, is worth $550. Our new home has been quite pleasant. Some of our members live here. My health has not been very good this year; wife has been quite sick for sixteen days with fever—is better to-day (June 30). Our sickness this year, I think, has been caused from the malarial district in which we lived last year. Since we have been sick the good people of Starkville have been very kind in sending us a barrel of flour and ten dollars in money, ham, sugar, canned goods, ice and lemons, etc.

Bro. Joe Jones will hold a meeting on my work the fourth Sunday in July. We are praying for a gracious revival of pure and undefiled religion, especially in the church. Pray for us. May God's blessings rest upon you and the dear ADVOCATE!

J. W. TREADWELL.

ELLISVILLE CIRCUIT, MERIDIAN DISTRICT.

This charge consists of Estabuchie, Ellisville, Laurel and Sandersville, stations on the Northeastern railroad, and Liberty, a country church. At Ellisville we have a neat, comfortable and well-furnished parsonage building. This week an annex, of two rooms more, has been completed. This will give ample room for an ordinary-sized family. This is a new circuit, with new preacher and presiding elder.

Our third quarterly meeting has been held, and the reports show steady development on all lines. Our presiding elder's (Bro. T. L. Mellen) heart is in his work, and he has impressed himself upon the minds and hearts of all as a servant sooming to do the Lord's work negligently. I find many precious, good people wherever I go; and this work is no exception. This year I am compelled to move cautiously. The earthly house of this tabernacle begins, after an active service since 1858, to show signs of decay. I keep moving, but not with ease or comfort. I long, not for the wings of a dove, but the strength of an ox. The field is white to the harvest. A glorious ingathering of precious souls is in sight. I wish to be abundant in labor, and faithful unto death.

R. B. DOWNER, P. C.

The Lottery.

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted by the Delhi District Conference, which met in Delhi, June 24, 1890. Your committee, to whom were submitted the question of the Louisiana State Lottery, after having considered the subject, submit the following preamble and resolutions for your adoption:

Whereas, The Louisiana State Lottery has for years been exerting a damaging influence in this State and elsewhere, both morally and financially; And, whereas, This immoral and financial vampire is seeking a renewal of its charter for the term of twenty-five years longer; And, whereas, Means grossly immoral are being used by said company for the accomplishment of its iniquitous purpose; And, whereas, One of the members (elect) of this District Conference is reported as using and having used his influence as a legislator for said company: And, whereas, Through his influence and that of others we greatly fear that this monstrous iniquity will obtain a new lease of life; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we denounce the Louisiana State Lottery as evil, only evil, and that continually.

Resolved, That we are unalterably opposed to and greatly regret any legislative action in any way tending to the recharterjng this iniquitous institution.

Resolved, That we are not in sympathy with, but heartily opposed to, the reported action of Bro. T. S. Jackson, one of the members (elect) of this body, and insist that the Quarterly Conference of which he is a member will not return him as a member of this District Conference if it be true that he has voted for said company, as is reported by the secular press.

Resolved, That we heartily commend the action of those true and tried members of both Houses of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana who have stood so firmly and fought so nobly against the encroachments of this iniquity of iniquities, and we earnestly pray God to give them success, and bring to naught the counsels of the wicked.

Resolutions adopted by the Grenada District Conference, June 28, 1890:

Whereas, The gigantic monopoly and gambling scheme known as the Louisiana State Lottery is now offering a bribe of $1,000,000 per annum to the commonwealth of Louisiana for the continuance of its franchise for a period of twenty-five years; And, whereas, This infamous institution is not only subversive of good government and of the freedom of the press and people, but also stands pledged to foster and stimulate a spirit of recklessness, gambling and debauchery; And, whereas, Its pernicious influences are not confined to the State in which it seeks a charter; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, ministers and laymen of the Grenada district, North Mississippi Conference, in District Conference assembled, do tender our deepest sympathies to our brethren and friends of Louisiana in their efforts to put down this monster of iniquities.

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to do all we can, both publicly and privately, to help them in this great battle for the material and moral well-being of Louisiana and of our common country. J. W. MALONE,
J. M. WYATT.

SUNNY SIDE, MISS., JUNE 28, 1890.

The following resolutions were adopted by the San Antonio District Conference, West Texas Annual Conference, in session at Devine, Texas, June 28, 1890:

Whereas, The Louisiana State Lottery Company is an unmitigated evil and a blighting curse, the child of the devil and the enemy of all righteousness, corrupting our morals and undermining our social and religious life; And, whereas, Its influences are to be found not alone in our fair sister State of Louisiana, but throughout the entire land, extending even right into our very midst; And, whereas, A desperate effort is being now made by its friends and supporters, through enormous bribes, to renew its charter, and thus prolong its infamous life for another quarter of a century; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we give this unrighteous institution our unqualified condemnation.

Resolved, That we recognize in the Lottery a common enemy, and that in meeting it the cause of Louisiana is the cause of the nation, and to this end that we, as preachers and laymen, will use our influence, in private and in public, to strike it down, and bury its miserable carcass forever.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the Conference Minutes, and that a copy be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

LESSON III.—July 20.

TAKING UP THE CROSS.

Luke xiv, 25-35.

GOLDEN TEXT—Whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, can not be my disciple—Luke xiv, 27.

TIME.—A. D. 29.

PLACE.—Perea (?).

25. And there went great multitudes with him—This is evidently as cene of the journey whon multitudes of the Galilean pilgrims were accompanying him on their way to one of the great Jewish feasts.

26. Self-renunciation, pushed if necessary to the extremest lasues, is with Jesus the one indispensable condition of discipleship. He asks for nothing less than the heart, and that can not be given by halves. What is meant by "hatred" in this case is shown by the fact that the man is to hate "his own life (or soul) also." In the sense of wishing evil such a hatred is in the latter case inconceivable, but the man is to be prepared to sacrifice all that his soul most desires—yes, even life itself—and must, in like manner, be prepared to surrender his nearest and dearest to a yet higher obligation. His own life—This further explains the meaning of the word "hate." The "soni" or "animal life" is the seat of the passions and temptations which naturally allenate the spirit from Christ. These must be hated, mortified, crucified, if they can not be controlled; and life itself must be cheerfully sacrificed.

27. Whosoever doth not bear his cross—The words, as spoken before in Matt. x, 28, suggested the picture but too familiar to the inhabitants of Palestine under the Roman Empire, of criminals going forth to their execution, and carrying the cross on which they were themselves to suffer. As now uttered, however, the words had a fresh signification as interpreted by what the disciples had heard from their Master's lips between Peter's confession and the transfiguration. Chap. ix, 22, 23. That "bearing of the cross" was becoming every day more clear and terrible in its growing nearness, and now, it may be, suggested tho manner of his death as well as the death itself.

28. Which of you, intending to build a tower—Pilate had begun to build—certainly su aqueduct, probably a tower in conuection with it—and had not been able to finish. He had not "counted the cost," and when he was hindered from laying hands on the corban, or treasure of the temple, his resources failed. Did men polut in mockery to the unfinished work as a witness of the failure? Christians must at the commencement of all things ever look at the end.

31. What king, going to make war against another king—Here there may have beeu a side glance at contemporary history. The tetrarch's divorce of his first wife had involved him in a war with her father, Aretas, an Arabian king or ethnarch, in which his army was destroyed; and the Jewish historian sees in this the beginning of all his misfortunes. In the Greek there is a subtle shade of difference lu the two prepositious rendered "with"—the first implying that the ten thousand are the weaker king's wholo strength; the second that the mightier, though accompanied by the twenty thousand (there may be a possible refereuce to Psa. lxviii, 17), has yet more at his command.

32. What our Lord teaches is the necessity of thoroughness lu wlnt we do. If we can not make up our minds to the cost involved in warring against the world aud its evil, we had better come to terms with it, and live in such peace as we can thus gain. As with like proverbs and parables, however, it admits of a directly inverted application. Are we strong enough with our powers to thwart the triumphant progress of the great King? If we shrink from the thought of fighting against God, we had better accept his "conditions of peace" before he comea in the fulness of his might. The worst folly of all is to enter into the conflict with a wavering will, not caring to know what "the things belonging to our peace" actually are, or to endeavor to stand apart in an impossible neutrality.

33. Forsaketh—Bids good-bye to. Rev. Ver., renounceth. In that forsaketh lies the key to the whole passage. Christian discipleship is founded on self-renunciation. Fishing-nets and hired servants, great possessions, ease and safety, besetting sins, fancied righteousness—all had to be renounced.

34. Salt is good—The words are all but identical with those of Matt. v, 13, and resemble those of Mark ix, 50. They appear now, however, lu a very different context, and the train of thought (possibly owing to the absence of some links in the sequence) is not at first sight so clear. The common element in all three instances is that salt represents the purifying element in life, the principle of unselfish devotion, and, in the extension of the thought, the church of Christ as the purifying element in history. "Salt," in Scripture symbolism, is the life-retaining, antiseptic influence of God's Spirit. If the salt have lost his savor—It we may suppose a lump of salt to have all qualities of salt, as to appearance, form, texture, color—everything but its saltness—we have a case which illustrates the professed piety of which Jesus speaks—a piety that has every element of form, but lacks the very qualities of heart which make piety a power in Christ'a kingdom. It is sharply suggestive to say that such salt is worthless, even for manure. The farmer gets it out of sight and out of his way as best he can. Jesus has no place for such piety in his kingdom. Let all men take notice. Wherewith shall it be seasoned—A question asked in hopeless sadness. What purifying influence can be brought to bear on us when the love of Christ has failed? The Christian is the salt of the earth; the savor is the spirit of self-sacrifice, by which Christ's disciples are to purify and save the word. If this spirit of self-sacrifice be wanting, they are utterly worthless.

35. It is neither fit for the land, nor yet for the dunghill—A new use of salt, distinct from that of preserving food or its symbolic meaning in sacrifice; is brought before us, and becomes the ground-work of a new parable. The use is obviously a lower and humbler one than the others. The salt serves, mingling with the dunghill, to manure and prepare the ground for the reception of the seed. Bear this in mind, and the interpretation of the parable, connected, as it thus is, with that of the fig-tree, is obvious. A corrupt church can not even exercise an influence for good over the secular life of the nation which it represents. The religious man whose religion has become an hypocrisy can not even be a good citizen, or help others forward in the duties of their active life by teaching or example. The church and the individual man are alike fit only to be "cast out;" to become, that is, a by-word and proverb of reproach. Our Lord's sense, if we may so speak, of the depth and fullness of the meaning of his words is shown by his emphatic reproduction of the words that had accompanied his first parable, "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." The main lesson of this similitude is expressed with its full force in Heb. iv, 4-12; x, 26-39. How can a devout Christian read our Savior's threo warnings to his followers against the fate of the salt that has lost its savor, and of his warning against the fate of the vine that is cut down and cast into the fire, and then teach that none who are truly the Lord's can fall from grace and be finally lost?

Missionary.

Letter from Mexico.

Mrs. Lizzie A. Rowland—

DEAR SISTER: Youra of June 7, with draft for $55, was received on the morning of the fourteenth, and the money will be applied to the much-needed bettermeut of the appointments of our school in this city. Wife and I are doing what we can to inspire this school to greater endeavor and usefulness to the church; she by teaching painting and English, and I by giving the girls employment as teachers as fast as Miss Rowldan can endorse them as qualified for such work. Our great need in our work are Christian girls to take charge of our schools, and train the children in the way of the Lord at the age when such training is so effective in all countries, but especially in this, where our future is almost wholly dependent upon it. And it is with profoundest gratitude to "our Father" that I am able to say to you and to your society that i can fully rely upon the girls of this school, wherever placed, to do faithful work for tho church. They will pray in public when called upon, and always open and close school with prayer. I have one of them employed as a teacher in Teplettexpa, and she now has seventy-eight pupils; and so great is her popularity and success that the authorities of the town have tried to take her from me by offering her more money than I can afford to pay her, but she remains true to me. I have recently employed her mother to assist her, and I pay them both only twenty dollars per month. Our greatest need in our school is a music teacher. They are a music-loving people, and, however accomplished they may be, they feel that a knewledge of music is esseutial, and in our work this is quite true.

My own labors have been successful beyond my expectation or my faith. To date I have received 301 members into the church, and baptized about seventy children. A week ago last Sabbath i received thirty-four, and as I was about beginning to baptize them an aged man asked permission to pray, and his earnest pleadings for the baptism of the Holy Spirit with the water were answered by as great a display of the presence and power of the Spirit as i ever witnessed. Every person in the house was in tears, and not a few cried aloud with joy. I only wish I had the ability to impress the people at home with the depth and earnestness of this work we are doing, and of the possibilities before us if we only had the men and means. It is a hard and trying work; but who are we and what are our trials that we should complain?

Last week i had to give up and take my bed, and send our Bro. D. F. Watkins, as my substitute, to hold my Quarterly Conference. I am able to be up to-day, but am very weak. I hope, however, to be able to go out next Friday on a long trip to a new field I have just opened, and where there are about twenty to be received into the church.

I hope you will excuse this dull letter, and at another time, when I feel better, I will write more at length. But do not net forget to pray and work for Mexico. Wife joins in best regards to yourself and the friends.

Yours truly, J. W. WEEMS.

Catechism on the World.

What is the population of the world? Some persons estimate it at 1,500,000,000, and others at 1,434,000,000.

How are these divided religiously? Into Christians, Jews, Mohammedans, and heatheu.

How many are called Christians? About 390,000,000.

How are those called Christians divided? Into Protestants, Greek and Oriental Churches, and Roman Catholics.

How many are Protestants? About 116,000,000. These are inhabitants of nominally Protestant countries, but there are only about 30,000,000 who are members of Protestant Churches?

How many Jowa are there? About 8,000,000.

How many Mohammedans? About 170,000,000.

How many heathen are there? About 856,000,000. Under this head are included Shintos, Buddhists, Confucianists, Brahmanists, Fetish, etc.

What is the population of America? About 100,000,000; there being 69,000,000 in North America and 31,000,000 in South America. About one-fourth of the people of North America and nearly all the people of South America are Roman Catholics.

What is the population of Europe? About 332,000,000, of whom one-third are members of the Greek Church, one-third Protestants, and one-third Roman Catholics.

What is the population of Asia? About 800,000,000, of whom about one-fifth are Mohammedans, and nearly all the others are heathen.

What is the population of Africa? About 200,000,000, of whom one-tenth are Mohammedans and three-fourths are heathen.

In heathen and Mohammedan lands how many Protestant missionaries are there? About 6,700, of whom 2,700 are women.

How many native laborers? About 33,000.

How many adherents? About 2,250,000.

How many members? About 750,000

How many organized churches? About 5,000.

How much money is expended each year by Protestants to give the gospel to heathen? About $10,000,000. Of this about $4,000,000 is raised in America and $6,000,000 in Great Britain.

How many ministers are there in the United States to every 800 persons? One.

How many missionaries are there to every 400,000 souls in foreign lands? One.

What is expected of us? To send the gospel to every creature.—Gospel in All Lands.

Temperance.

Total Abstinence vs. "Moderation."

Total abstinence, instead of "moderation," is to be preferred:

1. Because scientific research and experience have demonstrated that alcoholic beverages are in no sense a necessity to the human system.

2. Because we teach by example as well as by precept, and to the young, and to those tempted by the abnormal alcoholic appetite, our example for total abstinence would be a source of strength to resist where the "moderate" use of intoxicants might tend to mislead others to alcoholic indulgence.

3. Because the human body, as the temple of an immortal soul, ought to be kept free from the poisonous alcoholic taint. To poison the body is to impair the action of the mind and cloud the spiritual vision.

THE DRINK TRAFFIC IN AFRICA.—The Presbyterian General Assembly received a report from its committee on "Rum on the Congo," which said that after an interview with the State Department at Washington, it found that our government never had become a party to the Berlin treaty, and could not take a leading part in affairs on the Congo. The deputation from the National Temperance Society that waited upon the Secretary of State upon this matter some time ago, found that our government was willing to unite with other governments to help stop the tide of desolation which resulted from drink in Africa, but it had no "colonies" there, and no police power whatever over the territory. It has issued instructions to its representative at Brussels to unite with other countries in any endeavor to abate the evil.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

Wonders

Are wrought by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor in restoring gray hair to its original color, promoting a new growth, preventing the hair from falling, keeping it soft, silky, and abundant, and the scalp cool, healthy, and free from dandruff or humors. The universal testimony is that this preparation has no equal as a dressing, and is, therefore, indispensable to every well-furnished toilet.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for some time and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor my head is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth, of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair to use Ayer's Hair Vigor as a dressing."—Mrs. Lydia O. Moody, East Pittston, Me.

"Some time ago my wife's hair began to come out quite freely.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

not only prevented my wife from becoming bald, but it also caused an entirely new growth of hair. I am ready to certify to this statement before a justice of the peace."—H. Hulsebus, Lewisburgh, Iowa.

"Some years ago, after a severe attack of brain fever, my hair all came out. I used such preparations for restoring it as my physicians ordered, but failed to produce a growth of hair. I then tried, successively, several articles recommended by druggists, and all alike fell short of accomplishing the desired result. The last remedy I applied was Ayer's Hair Vigor, which brought a growth of hair in a few weeks. I think I used eight bottles in two years; more than was necessary as a restorative, but I liked it as a dressing, and have continued to use it for that purpose. I believe Ayer's Hair Vigor possesses virtues far above those of any similar preparation now on the market."—Vincent Jones, Richmond, Ind.

THURSDAY, JULY 10, 1890.

Rev. John Barcroft.

The dispatches inform us of the death of Rev. John Barcroft, of North Mississippi Conference. He died Sunday, July 6, at Richland, Miss., of apoplexy. He was one of the foremost men in the Conference, and had been its secretary for years. He leaves a wife and two children, with whom we deeply sympathize in this, their great bereavement.

Note from Bro. Kendall.

Rev. W. T. Shell, of the North Mississippi Conference, died at his home in Saltillo, Miss., June 30. He was in charge of the Saltillo circuit. His end was peace.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Aberdeen station, is very low with typhoid fever, and the prayers of the church are earnestly solicited in his behalf.

The Lottery Bill Passed.

Our General Assembly has at last passed the Lottery bill by two-thirds' majority in both Houses, and the people will be called to vote upon it in April, 1892. We consider the passage of this bill a great outrage upon the people of Louisiana, because they have already declared themselves opposed to lotteries, and made it a part of their Constitution that all lotteries should cease forever when the term of the present company should expire, and because they have not asked that this matter be submitted to their suffrages. In thrusting this matter upon the people the Lottery Company has violated its pledge to the State, because it agreed to the terms made, that all lotteries should cease after a certain time. After this violation of the Constitution of the State by the Legislature and this breach of compact by the Lottery Company, who can have any faith in its promises and pledges in the future? Our people need now to look this matter square in the face and enter enthusiastically upon a two years' campaign to defeat this iniquitous measure at the polls. Dont let the subject "get cold." Investigate and agitate and keep the matter always and everywhere before the people.

The Incorruptible Twelve.

We have twelve more names that have gone on the roll of honor. These men have been true to their State all through the dreadful fight of the last six weeks. These honorable Senators have no need to "explain their votes," and can return to their constituents and look them in the face without shame. They have done what they could to save the State from further degradation, and are entitled to all honor and distinction. In the Senate, those who stood and battled against fraud and dishonor are these:

O. P. AMACKER, of St. Helena.
JOHN N. AVERY, of Iberia.
J. H. DUGGAN, of Orleans.
C. J. DECKER, of West Feliciana.
MURPHY J. FOSTER, of St. Mary.
W. W. HEARD, of Union.
AUGUSTE LEVERT, of West Baton Rouge.
HIRAM R. LOTT, of West Carroll.
O. O. PROVOSTY, of Pointe Coupee.
J. R. PHIPPS, of Claiborne.
FREDERIC SEIP, of Rapides.
W. W. VANCE, of Bossier.

"The Prime Object of Sunday-School Teaching."

AN ADDRESS MADE BEFORE THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION AT OKALONA, MISS., BY GEORGE J. LEETWICH.

The prime object of Sunday-school teaching is the spiritual, moral and intellectual elevation of man. But the church—is it not the object of the Sunday-school to recruit the ranks of the church? By all means do that; but lengthening the church roll is only throwing around the people the protection of a divine institution to reach the end first indicated. "The church is of God;" but, like the Sabbath, it was made for man, not man for the church. He is beset with narrowness and bigotry who can not see beyond the prolongation of his own church register. The teacher should so understand the doctrine, the ordinances, the economy of the church as to impress its beauties upon his class, and make it a grand means of spiritual elevation.

The Bible is the second instrument the teacher must use for the spiritual, moral and intellectual development of his pupils. The Sunday-school pupil, properly taught, incidentally learns the Scripture—a grand thing in itself. That view is a narrow one which makes "cramming" the Bible the aim and end of Sunday-school teaching. The logical professor of Latin and Greek makes the acquisition of those languages incidental to the larger scheme of the mental growth and expansion of the mind. The logical teacher of the Bible should make the acquisition of biblical facts incidental to the use of the Bible as a text-book of divine authorship to develop spirituality, morality and intellectuality. The Bible is the revelation of divine will provided by God for man's enlightenment. If the teacher use the Bible according to its purpose, he must know it as he must know algebra to teach algebra. He can not use it aright and be a smatterer. He must know its scope, its history, its spirit; he must know it technically, intimately.

It is lamentable that the average Sunday-school teacher is such a gross ignoramus about the Bible. Every well-conducted Sunday-school has competent teachers; but there is a larger number who, if the same degree of knowledge of the Bible were required of them as is required of the public-school teacher in the common branches before he is licensed to teach, would fail of getting a fourth-grade certificate. The church goes on using its talent and brains preaching to pews full of gray-haired, hardened sinners, and the Sunday-school, the nursery of the church, "on which her hope is fixed," manned, in a great degree, by simpletons, as far as the essential qualifications for such work is concerned. Let him who says I am severe, study closely the methods of the average teacher's mechanical, hurried asking of the questions laid down in the quarterlies, and the pupil's mechanical, oft-times silly answers, which the teacher accepts without comment. The teacher's laziness and want of consecration is to blame, and the church is to blame for providing the children with no better instructors. The church must wake up along this line. If she properly educates one generation, the next will be the millenium.

Lastly, the teacher must know Christ by intimate association, so that he may use him as the most powerful leverage for the pupil's elevation. "I am the way." The teacher leads a lost wayfarer over a way he has trodden himself. How can he otherwise lead him? The word "pedagogue" means to lead the feet. Yet we have known of Sunday-school classes taught by unchristian men and women; and we have heard of superintendents not Christians. How little sense—not to say, religion—there is in things the church permits.

The means, then, of the spiritual, moral and intellectual development of man are the church, the Bible and Christ. The instrument is the teacher. To lift up the pupil with one hand on to a higher plane of existence, and hold in the other those things of infinite magnitude, the church, the Bible and Christ, is like hurling the thunderbolts of Jove. A serious contemplation of the task verifies the remark of Herbert Spencer in his work on education, "That to educate rightly is not a simple and easy thing, but a complex and extremely difficult thing; the hardest task which devolves upon adult life."

The Sunday-school teacher is unfit for his task without exacting labor, humble consecration and great perseverance and patience. The church must fight her battle here and give over her ablest ministerial talent to the undertaking. Her victory will be won when she has brought all the children of the land into the Sunday-school, taught by competent teachers. She should do it, if it be necessary, to take the preachers from the pulpit and put them to organizing Sunday-schools and teaching teachers. We need brains in this field and efficient labor. The heads of the church must devise the ways and means to save and educate all the children.

Millsaps College—The Endowment Fund Growing Daily.

I am able to report steady and gratifying progress in our college canvass. Within the past six days we have received over $2,400, nearly $1,000 of which was in cash. I attended the Brookhaven District Conference at Hazlehurst and secured $1,085. One venerable brother subscribed $100 each for five members of his family and paid it in cash.

Bro. Watkins attended the Greenville District Conference at Rosedale and raised $405.

Rev. T. J. Newell, one of the trustees, reports from the Grenada District Conference, at Sunny Side, $507. Other amounts have come in from pastors and "the faithful," aggregating over $2,400.

One honored brother, and a distinguished citizen of the State, enclosed $100 in cash, saying he had not been asked to subscribe, but wanted to have some stock in such a worthy and much-needed enterprise.

The Educational Experience Meeting at Hazlehurst was a revelation, and proved to be an inspiration. There were confessions and earnest resolutions. Some of these vows were speedily paid—all are good.

One fact is specially gratifying—the preachers generally are presenting the college endowment directly and successfully to their people from the pulpit and on their pastoral rounds. It is getting near the consciences of the brethren as never before. This is far better than reliance upon special agents. The results upon the life of the church and the future of the college will be larger and more enduring.

We are moving on to certain and grand success. When this college is established and ready for work, Mississippi Methodism will enter upon a new era of heroic achievement for the Master. From present indications and assurances, the next sessions of the two Conferences in the State will be occasions for jubilee.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

JACKSON, MISS., July 3, 1890.

King Leopold has appointed Henry M. Stanley, governor of the Congo State.

The Bible and Training-School of the Woman's Board of Missions.

The Woman's Board of Missions received authority from the last General Conference to establish and maintain a "Bible and Training-school for Foreign Missionaries and other Christian Workers." In accordance with this, the Board in annual session, May 21, accepted Dr. Nathan Scarritt's munificent donation for that purpose and obligated itself to comply with the conditions of his offer.

The telegram announcing the acceptance of the Board reached Dr. Scarritt when he was dying, and no legal steps could be taken to secure the gift. His will was made three years ago, and, of course, contains no mention of the Training-school. These facts, being known, have awakened many inquiries among the friends of the enterprise. In reply to these, I have the following from Bishop Hendrix:

Miss Helm: As secretary of Home Affairs, charged with the correspondence regarding the Training-school, you are authorized by me to announce that the family of Dr. Scarritt stands ready to carry out his wishes as he himself would have done had he lived, and that the grounds and $25,000, which he intended giving, will be promptly conveyed so soon as the $25,000 promised by the other friends of the enterprise are in hand.

Yours cordially,

E. R. HENDRIX.

By order of the Woman's Board the school will be incorporated at once in Kansas City, Mo., with the title, "The Scarritt Bible and Training-school for Foreign Missionaries and other Christian Workers," and Bishop Hendrix, as president of the Board of Managers and chairman of the Building Committee, will do all in his power to carry out the purpose of the school and perfect the plans so wisely begun. It now rests with the Woman's Missionary Society and its friends to secure the speedy establishment of the institution by giving at once, and liberally. Over $12,000 has been collected, and a much larger amount pledged to be paid in annual installments. Let us have the remaining $12,000 required for the building as soon as possible, that the work may not be delayed, and the amount necessary to maintain it by the time the school is opened. Public meetings should be held in the interest of the school, the great need of such training as it proposes to supply explained, and collections taken both in money and pledges. Miss Belle H. Bennett, Richmond, Ky., will receive all funds and furnish information and blanks for promisory notes.

The need of this school is felt in every mission station in the foreign field and in every city and town in the home-land; then for every heart interested in the coming of Christ's kingdom, a hand should be stretched out to aid in its establishment, a prayer be offered that it may prove a fountain of living waters for the saving of the nations.

MARY HELM,
Sec. of Home Affairs, W. B. M.

The Editor for a Religious Newspaper.

As the Publishing Committee of this paper will be called upon at the next meeting in October to elect an editor for it, we reproduce from the Interior an editorial on the subject of religious editors. Dr. Gray, the editor of the Interior, is a layman who has both eyes and ears open and makes one of the best papers in the land. We commend his article to the committee as worthy of their best consideration:

The most difficult bill to fill hereafter will be an order for an editor for a religious paper. The old way will not do—to pick up a preacher who can preach a little and write a little. We are far from agreeing with Mr. Godkin, of the Nation, or Mr. Curtis, who was till lately editor of Harper's Weekly—but what marvelous simplicity and clearness of style, and what resources of ideas! The London Spectator has a whole staff of such writers—clear, animated, forcible, direct and elegant. None of the writers we have referred to have all the qualities—a completeness of equipment which never probably will be found in one mind. There should be a touch of humor and a sprinkle of the Attic salt. In addition to a fine literary style—and by fine we do not mean florid—the coming religious editor ought to be quick in recognizing points of interest, and in turning them to account. He ought to be wide in his range of knowledge and deep in spots—the more of these sun-spots the better. He must be broad and generous in his Christian sympathies. He should be clear in his convictions, and they should be in him, not outside of him. He should be capable of hard work and like it—rapid on the trail of a subject, and not liable to get lost. He should be right at first, rather than sorry afterwards. He must not be a crank nor a bigot—nor a hobby-rider—at least he must have sense enough to do his hobby-cantering outside the columns of the paper. He must know how to get away. Very often an editorial writer catches a Tartar—and he must know what to do with him. Tartars are good. They are, according to size, the trout, bass, tarpon or shark of the limpid waters of literature. "But," the interested and solicitous reader may ask, "have you not omitted the one thing needful—religion?" There is the rub.

All the tendencies of literature are to secularity—if not to that, then to religious liberalism. A thousand to one of trained journalists are trained to Sunday journalism. Even if not so employed, they must have no conscientious scruples against that kind of work. A man who expects to make a living at any special employment must be ready to take it as he finds it—as they all are. A man of first-rate natural talent and acquirements who goes into the work must break up his literary habits, which is about as difficult as changing one's handwriting. An orator is never a good writer, and vice versa. Gladstone is a distinguished writer—of orations. He never has written anything but orations. When he writes a book review he writes an oration upon the book. The question of thought which becomes unconscious habit is, "Will it speak well?" not, "Will it print well?" The excellencies of the one kind of composition are the faults of the other. The orator must elaborate till he has made his impression irresistibly powerful. The writer must compel you to re-read what he has written, not by obscurity of thought, but by the charm of his subject and style. Necessity compels the one to be the contrast of the other. Greeley was an oratorical blunderer, by as much as he was a finished and powerful editorial writer. There have as yet been no great religious editors—none who would rank anywhere near a Charles Hammond or a Greeley—none now who compare favorably with Reid, Dana, or Godkin, Cockerill, Watterson or Halstead. We have some very good letter writers, paragraphists, reviewers. Where there is a demand it will be supplied sooner or later. The great religious writer is coming, but who he is—"what's his name or where's his name," we wish that we could tell!

The Sunday Law.

The General Assembly has virtually repealed the Sunday law. The testimony from every direction is that this law has done incalculable good to our people, and yet our wise statesmen have seen proper to pass a bill which virtually repeals it all over the State. Because the sworn officers would not execute it here in New Orleans, they jump to the conclusion that it could not be executed, and, therefore, should be repealed.

Thus Louisiana takes another downward and backward step. It is not at all surprising that the same members of the Legislature who carried the Lottery bill through are those who have voted to repeal the Sunday law. Our people can see from this what sort of government we shall have when the Lottery comes in power. It is the opponent of morality and good government all the time. They may set it down as the truth that the Lottery Company has destroyed the Sunday law.

Millsaps College.

The Joint Committee, appointed by the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences to move in the matter of the organization of a college for boys in the State of Mississippi, met in the Y. M. C. A. rooms in Jackson, on Wednesday morning, June 25.

The meeting was largely attended and the reports received of the progress of the canvass were very encouraging. The cause is taking hold of the hearts of the people, and the outlook is at present more encouraging than at any time since the canvass began.

The charter passed by the last Legislature was adopted, and the Board of Trustees was organized with the following officers: Bishop C. B. Galloway, president; Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D. vice-president; Rev. T. J. Newell, secretary; Major R. W. Millsaps, treasurer.

The treasurer stated that he had secured a safe and advantageous investment for the balance of cash in hand, and steps were taken looking to a more thorough canvass of the State. The Board adjourned, feeling assured that the establishment of the college was a question of only a few months.

A. F. WATKINS.

Notes.

A brother, in a recent District Conference, stated that he knew some church people who carried their spirituality in a jug!

We heard a preacher say, not long since, that he had served in a certain portion of the Lord's vineyard for eighteen years, and for his "hire" for that time he had received two hundred dollars. Who says the gospel is expensive?

Have you read the thirty-fourth chapter of Ezekiel lately, Bro. Preacher? And how long has it been since you refreshed your memory by reading over again your ministerial vows? It is good to keep these fresh in the mind!

Mr. Spurgeon, the eminent London Baptist, has refused a bequest of $150,000, because the donor left relatives poorly provided for! Mr. Spurgeon relinquished the whole claim in favor of the poor relations. "Covetousness, which is idolatry," evidently has no place in Mr. Spurgeon's heart. Does anybody know of a case similar to this?

The hospitality of the Methodists of Mississippi has been one of the marked features of that State for many years; also the house-wife qualifications of its matrons; but at the Okalona District Conference, where the ADVOCATE'S representative enjoyed the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Harper, every home seemed a preacher's or delegate's home, and the best of the land was not too good for the cordially welcomed guests.

M. J. Foster, of St. Mary parish, the Anti-Lottery leader in the General Assembly, has covered himself with glory and won honors that will live forever. He fought the dragon at every point, with a rare combination of courage and skill, and when casting his vote against the monster he uttered words that will be memorable forever: "For my country and her honor, for my State and her good name, for her dead and her living, I VOTE, NO."

A Sunday-school Convention was held in Pittsburg recently, and the report of the statistical secretary shows the number of Sunday-schools in the United States, 105,894; officers and teachers, 1,120,438; scholars, 8,598,851; total in Sunday-schools, 9,719,284. In Canada—Schools, 6,689; officers and teachers, 55,706; scholars, 528,329; total in Sunday-schools, 584,035. In Newfoundland and Labrador—Schools, 314; officers and teachers, 2,162; scholars, 22,817; total in Sunday-schools, 24,979. The footings show: Schools, 112,897; officers and teachers, 1,178,301; scholars, 9,149,997; total in Sunday-schools, 10,328,298.

The Picayune is lugubrious over the fact that the State census shows that "the increase of population in the State for the past decade was only 5⅔ per cent., when in order to keep up with the average increase of the entire Union, the population should have increased at the rate of 30 per cent. in the ten years preceding." It also says that New Orleans has retired from the ninth place to the twelfth place as to population when compared with other cities. The cause of this is not hidden. Let the Lottery be thrust upon our people again, and the next census will reveal a great deal more of the same sort. The right kind of people will never come here, and those who are here will do their best to get away!

Personal and Otherwise.

Bro. Scurlock represents the Lower Coast Mission as improving. He has six preaching-places and four Sunday-schools, one of them being a union school. He preaches to three hundred people each month. This is good for that country.

Bro. Bennett, of the Arkansas Methodist, has found out that an average of seven dollars a year for every man, woman and child in Little Rock goes for Lottery tickets, and he strikes a vigorous blow against our pet. When the people outside of Louisiana realize that they support the Lottery, maybe "something will turn up!"

Dr. John Kern, of Randolph-Macon College, has been elected to fill the chair in Vanderbilt made vacant by the election of Dr. Hoss to the editorship of the Christian Advocate.

Rev. W. B. Lewis, of Brookhaven district, has made some changes in his third round of quarterly meetings. If you are interested, you had better consult his appointments as revised and published in another column of this paper.

Bro. F. S. Parker, who has been quite sick for a time, is spending a few days at home recuperating. His prospects for a new church at New Iberia are promising.

Bro. Adams, from Pearlington, Miss., gave us a call last week. The work of the Lord is prospering in his hands.

Our people are making vigorous preparations for the annual meeting at Seashore Camp Ground. Rates have been reduced on most of the roads, and the time to begin is next Friday. Are you coming?

Two new States have been admitted into the Union—Idaho and Wyoming. This makes forty four States in our Federal Republic.

Again we repeat the request so often made already. Don't write to the editor about the business of the paper. The editor has nothing to do with it and knows very little about it. The business manager will cheerfully attend to all such matters and give any information that is in his power.

Bro. E. P. Mackie, who was a delegate from Louisiana to the Sunday-school Convention at Pittsburg recently, favored us with the Daily Commercial Gazette, of that city, in which is an elaborate account of the doings of the convention, for which we are under many obligations.

Read Bishop Galloway and Agent Watkins on Millsaps College, in another column. We rejoice in the success this enterprise has already won, and exhort all Methodists in Mississippi to help in this great undertaking!

We have received the annual catalogue of Grenada Collegiate Institute. This flourishing school, under the patronage of the North Mississippi Conference, is conducted by Rev. T. J. Newell, who has shown abundant fitness for the position he fills and adorns.

We regret to learn that Irvine, the son of Rev. T. W. Lewis, had his arm badly broken, July 1.

One brother at the Grenada District Conference gave to various causes the sum of $570. The spirit of honeficence is surely working.

Bishop Granbery is on his way to Brazil, and Bishop Wilson leaves for China during this month. Methodism is encompassing the globe!

We have received a letter from Representative J. T. M. Hancock, saying we did him injustice in what we said last week in regard to those who voted against the Lottery bill. We had no intention of doing the honorable member an injustice. We simply recorded the names of those who voted against the bill. Mr. Hancock was not present when the vote was taken; but the next day rose in his place and stated that he was absent in attendance on his sick wife, and would have voted against it had he been present. We are glad to be able to record Mr. Hancock's name among "the Incorruptibles."

Mansfield Female College.

MR. EDITOR: Noticing what you say about short essays of graduates at Port Gibson, I would like to state that Mansfield College had twelve graduates this year, and the essays were from six to seven minutes long, and occupied, with music interspersed, only one hour and a half.

The following young ladies graduated June 18: Miss Edna S. Bailey, Jeanerette, La.; Miss Jessie Bussey, Jeanerotte, La.; Miss Hattie Davis, Pleasant Hill, La.; Miss Virginia Gibbons, Mansfield, La.; Miss Fannie Griffith, Minden, La.; Miss Mabel Moss, Mansfield, La.; Miss Minnie D. Jackson, Mansfield, La.; Miss Sallie Roach, Mansfield, La.; Miss Lula Parsons, Mansfield, La.; Miss Fannie Pegues, Mansfield, La.; Miss Viona Phillips, Tennessee; Miss Lizzie A. Trosper, Bethany, La.

MISSISSIPPI STATE SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The eleventh annual meeting of the Mississippi State Sunday-school Convention will be held in the city of Vicksburg on August 5 and 6, 1890.

Each county Sunday-school Convention is entitled to two delegates, and each regular Sunday-school of any Protestant denomination to one delegate. It is earnestly desired that every county in the State be represented. Ministers of all denominations are honorary members of the convention.

Leading Sunday-school workers will be present to make the meeting interesting and instructive, and a programme of exercises will be promulgated as soon as possible.

It is expected that reduced fare will be obtained from the railroads, and entertainment will be provided for all who attend.

Our Young People.

NOT BROKEN, BUT CRACKED.

'Twas a set of resolutions,
As fine as fine could be,
And signed in painstaking fashion,
By Nellie and Joe and Bee;
And the last in the list was written,
In letters broad and dark
(To look as grand as the others).
"Miss Baby Grace, her mark!"

"We'll try always to help mother;
We won't be selfish to each other;
We'll say kind words to everyone;
We won't tie pussy's feet for fun;
We won't be cross and snarly, too,
And all the good we can we'll do."

"It's just as easy to keep them,"
The children gayly cried;
But mama, with a smile, made answer,
"Wait, darlings, till you've tried."
And truly, the glad, bright New Year
Wasn't his birthday old
When the three little sorrowful faces
A sorrowful story told.

"And how are your resolutions?"
We asked of the Baby Grace,
Who stood with a smile of wonder
On her dear little dimpled face;
Quick came the merry answer
She never an instant lacked,
"I don't tink much of 'em's broken,
But I dess 'em about all cracked."

How to Run.

Very few boys know how to run.

"Ho! ho!" say a dozen boys. "Just bring on the boy who can run faster than I can."

But just stop a moment. I don't mean that most boys can't run fast—I mean they can't run far. I don't believe there is one boy in fifty of those who may read this, who can run a quarter of a mile at a good smart pace, without having to blow like a porpoise by the time he has made his distance. And how many boys are there who can run fast or slow, a full mile without stopping?

It hardly speaks well for our race, does it, that almost any animal that pretends to run at all, can out-run any of us?

Take the smallest terrier-dog you can find that is sound and not a puppy, and try a race with him. He'll beat you badly. He'll run a third faster than you can, and ten times as far, and this with legs not six inches long. I have a hound so active that he always runs at least seventy-five miles when I stay a day in the woods with him, for he certainly runs more than seven miles an hour, and if I am gone ten hours, you see he must travel about seventy-five miles of distance.

Then, you may have heard how some of the runners in the South African tribes will run for long distances—hundreds of miles—carrying dispatches, and making very few stops.

I make these comparisons to show that our boys who can not run a mile without being badly winded, are very poor runners.

But I believe I can tell the boys something that will help them to run better. I was a pretty old boy when I first found it out; but the first time I tried it I ran a mile and a quarter at one dash. And now I am going to give you the secret:

Breathe through your nose!

I had been thinking what poor runners we are, and wondering why the animals can run so far, and it came to me that, perhaps, this might account for the difference, that they always take air through the nose, while we usually begin to puff through our mouths before we have gone many rods. Some animals, such as the dog and the fox, do open their mouths and pant while running; but they do this to cool themselves, and not because they can not get air enough through their noses.

I found once, through a sad experience with a pet dog, that dogs must die if their nostrils become stopped. They will breathe through the month only while it is forcibly held open. If left to themselves they always breathe through the nose.

So, possibly, we are intended to take all our breath through the nose unless necessity drives us to breathe through the mouth.

There are many other reasons why we ought to make our noses furnish all the air to our lungs. One is, the nose is filled with a little forest of hair, which is always kept moist, like all the inner surfaces of the nose, and particles of dust that would otherwise rush into the lungs and make trouble, are caught and kept out by this little hairy network.

Then the passages of the nose are longer and smaller, and more crooked than those of the mouth, so that, as it passes through them, the air becomes warm. But these are only a few reasons why the nose ought not to be switched off and left idle, as so many noses are, while their owners go, puffing through their mouths.

All trainers of men for racing and rowing, and all other athletic contests, understand this, and teach their pupils accordingly. If the boys will try this plan, they will soon see what a difference it will make in their endurance. After you have run a few rods holding your mouth tightly closed, there will come a time when it will seem as though you could not get air enough through the nose alone; but don't give up; keep right on, and in a few moments you will overcome this. A little practice of this method will go far to make you the best runner in the neighborhood.—St. Nicholas.

Eyes Open or Shut.

Two boys one morning took a walk with a naturalist.

"Do you notice anything peculiar in the movements of those wasps?" he asked, as he pointed to a puddle in the middle of the road.

"Nothing, except that they seem to come and go," replied one of the boys.

The other was less prompt in his reply, but he had observed to some purpose.

"I notice that they fly away in pairs," he said. "One has a little pellet of mud, the other has nothing. Are there drones among wasps, as among bees?"

"Both were alike busy, and each went away with a burden," replied the naturalist. "The one you thought a do-nothing had a mouthful of water. They reach their nest together; the one deposits his pellet of mud and the other ejects the water upon it, which makes it of the consistency of mortar. They then paddle it upon the nest and fly away for more materials."

And then, on the strength of this interesting incident, he gives this good advice:

"Boys, be observant. Cultivate the faculty. Hear sharply—look keenly. Glance at a shop window as you pass it, and then try how many things you can recall that you noticed in it. Open your eyes wider when you stroll across the meadow, through the woods, or along the brook. There are ten thousand interesting things to be seen, noted, wondered at and explained. Animals, birds, plants and insects, with their habits, intelligence and peculiarities, will command your admiration. You may not become great men through your observations, like Newton, Linnæus, Franklin, or Sir Humphrey Davy, but you will acquire information that will be of service to you and make you wiser and quite probably better."—H. F. Stauffer.

"Weak and weary," describes the condition of many people debilitated by the warm wether, by disease or overwork. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just the medicine needed to build up and strengthen the body, purify and quicken the sluggish blood, and restore the lost appetite.

Next to the immediate guidance of God by his Spirit, the counsel and encouragement of virtuous and enlightened friends afford the most powerful aid in the encounter of temptation, and in the career of duty.—Robt. Hall.

Keep Up with Your Children.

It is a sweet remembrance, that of a quiet old farm-house where a tired mother after a hard day's work gathered her seven children about her, her knitting-needles keeping time to the measure of the verses read by one of the group from a great poet. The poetry which she knit into the lives of her boys has outlasted all the stockings, and crowned her memory with a halo of poetic recollection.

The boy whose "mother would not go to bed until she had finished reading Pepacton" with him is more to be envied with his poor jacket than the elegant lad whose mother, with no time to read, takes time to consult the latest fashion plates that he may be—handsomely attired. There seems to be a settled conviction in the minds of many that children must take intellectual progress beyond their parents who are fated to lose out of their own lives any interest in books; and we often see stories of toil-worn parents who, having educated their children through many sacrifices, are pushed aside and kept behind the scenes because they are not up with the times. Investigation will, doubtless, show that such parents have had time to gossip abundantly while educating their children, and have shut themselves away from their children's mental life through willful preference. Children crave intellectual comradeship, and the parent who enters into companionship with his child will not get "behind the times."

An uneducated working-man, deploring his lack of early advantages, was in the habit of taking his little son on his lap at night to hear his lessons. He followed the boy through all his high school work, and is to-day an educated man, through giving his child continued sympathy in his studies.—Selected.

The Helpfulness of Sunshine.

Be sunshiny! There is nothing in the world so helpful as cheerfulness. What a wonderful power for good there is in a happy face! One instinctively feels that happiness is never far from truth. The face that shines must have something behind it to make it shine, and there is no real sunshine of the soul except truth and goodness. Other lights are transitory and fitful; but the sweet, steady light of a true soul beams upon the face like the joy and peace of a summer day.

This is the real secret of the helpfulness of sunshine in human lives. We know that it comes from something very deep and genuine and abiding within. The sunshiny person, we feel, has become possessed of the secret of life—the being in perfect sympathy and harmony with all things. And every smile, every loving, cheerful look, is an overflowing of the great fountain of truth and peace that is welling up in the soul.

Therefore, the happier we are in the possession of the truth, the more we shall help others by inspiring them with a sense of its realness and its value. Sunshine always has a winning quality, that makes people wish to hold it and to keep it. One of the first conscious acts of an infant is to grasp at sunbeams with his chubby hands; and all through life we are seeking the sunlight of the sky and the sunlight of the heart. Whoever reflects it, helps others. It is a Christian service to be happy.—Zion's Herald.

MAKE DAUGHTERS INDEPENDENT.—How many men are there to-day toiling night and day in order that they may, when they die, leave their daughters safe from want, and in comfortable circumstances. The best way to leave their daughters safe, is to give them a knowledge of business and affairs that will enable them to take care of themselves. Give them the knowledge of a profession or occupation, so that they will be able to take care of their money, if they have any; to earn it, if they have not. This is better than to leave the daughter a princely fortune, and make her a mark in the community for every eager, grasping, selfish prodigal to reach out to attain. Better have her able to fight the battle of life for herself, and to so live that the world will be better for her life.—Exchange.

The Art of Fast Walking.

Persons who have never been trained to walk fast generally quicken their gait by bending forward and lengthening the stride, at the same time bending the knees very much at each step. It is pretty safe to say that no one can possibly adopt this style and keep a fair walk at a faster gait than six miles an hour. The fast walker must keep himself erect, his shoulders back, and chest thrown out. He must put down his forward foot and heel first, and with the leg straight. He must take strides so quick that they look short. He must, if he expects to get a good stride, work his hips considerably, overcoming the sidewise tendency of the hip movement by a compensatory swinging of the arms. The length of stride in fast walking is astonishing to those who look at it. A little figuring will make it clear why this is so. There are 1,760 yards in a mile, or 1,760 strides three feet long. To do a mile in eight minutes a walker must cover 220 yards a minute, or 11 feet a second. Now 220 steps a minute—nearly four a second—is pretty quick work, as anyone may discover for himself. Even three steps a second, or 180 to the minute, seem quick. The chances are that your 8-minute man, although his legs move so quickly that the steps seem short, is not doing as many as 200 steps to the minute, and consequently that the stride is, at least, 3 feet 6 inches. With a little practice a man 6 feet high can easily maintain a 4-foot stride for half a mile.

It is true that fast walking is an artificial gait; but it is also true that practice at fast walking will quicken a man's unartificial gait. One who can do his mile in 7:30 in racing trim and on the cinder path, can walk in the street at a six-mile gait without either getting out of breath or becoming red in the face, and without attracting attention by any peculiarity of his gait except its swiftness. It is a real gain to any man to be able to walk a mile in ten or twelve minutes without over-exertion or fatigue; to be able to walk five or six miles for every four he used to walk without any more conscious effort, and with a sense of enjoyment in the mere exercise that he never had before.

The walking records at some of the ordinary distances stand: One mile, 6 minutes, 29 3-5 seconds, F. P. Murray; two miles, 13 48 3-5, F. P. Murray; three miles, 21.09⅘, F. P. Murray; five miles, 38.0⅝, W. H. Purdy; seven miles, 54.07, E. E. Merrill; ten miles, 77.40¾, E. E. Merrill.—Harper's Weekly.

The Stellar Creation.

Stephen M. Allen, A. M., in The Arena, says:

The starry heavens present a field to our vision of such beauty, grandeur and immensity that the human mind is lost in wonder at beholding them, and asks in vain, under old theories, for a consistent explanation of their physical structure. It is constantly reiterated by astronomers that stars are composed of heated, luminous matter; consequently uninhabitable. That the fixed stars, with our sun the nearest, are fire balls, or melting furnaces, ever ready to devour nebulæ, and everything else around them that is tangible, in order to supply light and heat for the cold and dark universe of space. This old theory can not longer be rationally sustained, and must give space to the newly discovered law of Action—i. e., combustion. More than 6,000 stars meet the gaze of the naked eye in its survey of one night. Astronomers say that the fabulous number of 20,000,000, all aglow, can be seen with a powerful telescope. When we consider that the nearest of these is 200,000 times as far from us as the sun, and that it would take from three and a half to twenty-one years for the light which reaches us to cease, if they were extinguished, we can not grasp and hold the vast conception in our minds. Yet it is supposed that each of these is a central sun, with its own colony of planets circling round it, which in size are vastly superior to those of our solar system, and are traveling through space with such speed that it is impossible for us to comprehend it. The star Sirius is said to be moving fifty-four miles a second, or 194,400 miles per hour; a flaming mass, leading its brood of planets through illimitable space.

READ THIS LETTER.
"For years I have been afflicted with bad Digestion, Constipation and Piles. I have tried all the medicines I could get hold of, but all in vain. Even my physicians could not relieve my costiveness. In the meantime I struggled under great pain. Life was a burden. Two weeks ago I saw the Chicago "Times," and my eye fell on an advertisement of Tutt's Pills. I decided to try them. They have worked wonderfully. They keep me regular, don't make me sick, give me an appetite and are curing my piles. I am strong and can walk any distance. If I had had these pills five years ago they would have saved me $10,000; but they have saved my life. Let the afflicted everywhere know their value, which is beyond expression."

PONDER—LILY LILLIAN PONDER was born February 20, 1868, and died May 5, 1890.

Left an orphan at an early age, she found a heavenly Parent who was to her during her life a constant stay and solace. Before she was fifteen years old she united her fate to D. T. Ponder, who afterwards was licensed to preach, and took charge of the Gansville circuit, as a supply, in June, 1888. Shortly after their removal to their new home, consumption fastened itself upon her. The fell disease advanced rapidly, and when the writer saw her first on December 28, 1889, the painful conviction was borne upon him that the young wife and mother was soon to be called upon to render an account of her deeds to him who doeth all things well.

During the few months it was my privilege to be associated with her as her pastor, I never heard a murmur—such patience and resignation to the divine will could only be the result of a "life hid with Christ in God." Her faith was strong to the last; her assurance beautiful to behold; she knew in whom she believed. Her stricken husband hears testimony to her constant piety, her abiding faith and consistent walk. He is heavily burdened, but leans upon Jesus. The three children she left are snored trusts deposited in his hands to raise for the Lord, to train for heaven, where she fully expects to meet them never more to part. She lived well; therefore, she died well; her end, peace, perfect peace.

For our bereaved brother, our heart goes out in deep sympathy. He is God's servant, and, as such, will constantly pray, "Thy will be done," and always bear in mind the words almost the last addressed to him by his Lilla. Let the ministry be your daily study and occupation. Be faithful as a servant of God, and we will meet again. For the little ones left motherless the well of love is stirred, but we rejolee to hear Christ say, "Come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." May God sanctify this affliction to their eternal good!

G. A. MANDEVILLE, P. C.

PAINE—Dr. STERLING L. PAINE, half-brother of Bishop Paine, was born in Giles county, Tenn., December 14, 1824; died in great peace at the residence of his son, Dr. Frank Paine, in Muldon, Miss., April 28, 1890. At the age of eleven years he was left an orphan and entrusted to the care of his brother Robert, afterward Bishop Paine, whom he loved and reverenced as a father. He gave such promise in his childhood that his father requested that he should be a physician. Dr. Paine was educated at Lagrange College in North Alabama, under the presidency of Bishop Paine. On October 14, 1817, he married Miss Maria L. Oliver, of Alabama. She was a suitable companion for him. Three daughters and one son, with their interesting Christian families, wear the impress of a pious mother and an intelligent father. It was at Prairie Chapel, in Monroe county, Miss., June, 1870, when Dr. Paine was happily converted and joined our church. His Christian life was quiet and consistent. During the last years of his life he grew rapidly as a Christian, and by the grace of God he met all his suffering with patience and fortitude.

Dr. Paine was well informed on all important subjects and conversant with current events, which made him a pleasant companion and safe counselor. He was a skillful physician, a model Southern gentleman, a devoted husband and a fond father. The closing chapter in his life was the most beautiful. On Sabbath evening, before he went to heaven on Monday morning, he called his children to his bedside, and requested that they should reconsecrate themselves to God. He offered a fervent prayer, at conclusion of which he said: "My all is on the altar. Whatsoever he doeth is well. Oh, that I had done more for my Savior who hath done so much for me." Thus at the highest point in all his experience he was gloriously discharged from his suffering here and received his reward above.

ELLIS—Miss DORAH ALICE ELLIS, daughter of Rev. R. A. and M. S. Ellis, was born June 29, 1867, in Lafayette county, Miss. She professed religion at Banner, Banner circuit, at ten years of age under the preaching of her father. Her whole life has been a demonstration of the great principles of Bible religion. She had always been regular in secret prayer. When not disabled by sickness she was always at her place in the church and Sunday-school, working with remarkable tact and great zeal. Few excelled her in anxious, loving obedience to her parents and affection for her brothers.

Having been a great sufferer for fifteen years, she seemed to feel sometimes that she was a burden to her father's family, and was always so grateful for any little kindness shown her. When a cup of water was handed her, or any little kindness shown her, she always responded with the sweet "Thank you!" Her last illness was very severe, lasting about twelve weeks, resulting in her departure from this world at 10:35 P. M. on the evening of June 17, 1890. She was one of the most patient and consecrated Christians I ever saw. She had shown to the world those nobler and sweeter graces which soften the heart and ennoble the life, and God seems to have sent her into the world to teach us these lessons.

We carried her remains to old Church Grove Cemetery, about four miles east of Taylor's Depot, on the I. C. railroad, and laid her away to rest until the resurrection morn. She leaves three brothers, besides her parents, and a large number of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. May God give us the grace of cheerful, patient, loving obedience that was shown in her life!

T. W. LEWIS.

DIEFFENWEIRTH—PHILIP HENRY DIEFFENWEIRTH, the oldest son of Rev. J. M. and Mrs. S. E. Dieffenweirth, was born July 12, 1875, and died, of an accidental gun-shot, May 23, 1890. Although snatched away so suddenly, as in a moment, yet he left a rich legacy to father and mother and his loved ones in the life he lived.

He joined the Methodist Church, and thus gave himself to God, in 1885, under the ministry of W. H. Parker, and was a consistent member to the time of his death.

I did not have the pleasure of knowing him long; but all I did know of him was correct, was good, and nothing wrong. He was a youth of excellent impulses, generous and full of kindness. Many baskets of good things did he bring to the parsonage for us during his school days. He was ready to take part in every good thing. He had connected himself with all the branches of the temperance army, and was a constant attendant at the Christian Endeavor meetings, and always filled his place in all the services of the church.

When his father got to him he saw that his boy had but a few moments left. So he had just time enough to ask two questions. "Do you know papa?" "Yes." "My son, are you trusting in Jesus?" "Yes, papa; I am trusting in Jesus"—and the spirit of dear Philip was gone. "Jesus" was his last word.

A vast crowd followed him to his grave, and many hearts united with father and mother, and loved ones, help bear the burden. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord!"

E. H. GILES.

The following is a tribute of respect adopted by Clear Water Sunday-school:

Whereas, In his infinite wisdom, the God of love and mercy, in whom we live and move and have our being, has seen fit to remove from our midst our friend and colaboror in the Sunday-school, PHILIP HENRY DIEFFENWIERTH, whose life and character had only to be known to be appreciated; And, whereas, Philip has, for a number of years, been a faithful member of, and regular attendant upon, our Sunday-school, diligently striving to know more of the Holy Scriptures, thus setting an example worthy to be commended and followed; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we bow in humble acquiescence to the will of him who has prepared a haven of eternal rest, where the soul rests in sweet peace with him whose presence is the light of heaven, and whose rod and staff comforteth the faithful when they pass through the valley of the shadow of death.

Resolved, That we commend the friends of this young man, who has been taken away while just blooming into a bright and glorious youth, to the straight and narrow path which leadeth to life everlasting, in which he was daily walking by the Savior's side.

Resolved, That we offer our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family in this sad hour, and point them to the all-wise God, who alone can heal all sorrow; assuring them that their loss is Philip's gain; for he has passed from death, sorrow and suffering into life, happiness, and joy eternal in the heavens.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented the sorrow-stricken family, and that a copy be sent the West Hillsborough Times for publication; also that a page of the secretary's book be dedicated to his memory.

ALBERT N. DUNCAN,
For Committee.

DILLY—Died at her residence in Yazoo county, Miss., May 12, 1890, Mrs. CHARLOTTE LAMINDA H. DILLY, in the seventy-third year of her age. She was born in Jefferson county, Miss., July 25, 1817, where she remained until her seventeenth year, when she removed to Yazoo county. About a year after this she was united in marriage to Samuel Dilly, with whom she dwelt in conjugal harmony until he was taken from her by death in 1874.

Sister Dilly embraced religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in early life. When she removed to Yazoo she brought her membership with her, and cast in her lot with the people of God, among whom she remained a pious and zealous member until she was removed to the upper and better sanctuary.

She died in great peace. In her last long and lingering sickness she often spoke of death; said it had no terrors to her. She retained her consciousness to the last, and spent her last hours in counsels, admonitions and exhortations to her children and grandchildren to serve God and meet her in heaven. She was the mother of twelve children, forty-nine grandchildren and thirteen great-grandchildren—most of whom she left behind to mourn her loss.

G. W. ALEXANDER.

MYERS—Whereas, The seat of Bro. EDDY MYERS in our Sabbath-school has been made vacant by the ruthless hand of death; And, whereas, We feel it our duty to bow in humble submission to the will of a kind heavenly Father; yet we feel that it is right to give expression to our feelings; therefore, be it Resolved, By the Shiloh Sunday-school, that in the death of Bro. Eddy, we have lost a good and worthy member, and his schoolmates an affectionate companion; his father and mother, an obedient son; his brother and sister, a loving brother; the church, a good member. He was truly a model young man; true and trusty; always ready to take part in church work.

Resolved, That we tender to his bereaved parents, brothers and sisters and host of friends our heartfelt sympathy, and pray that God may abundantly sustain them.

JAS. EVANS, for Com.

HUFF—LENNIE, daughter of Rev. Geo. W. and C. J. Huff, was born in Amite county, Miss., March 9, 1888, and died after a brief illness on May 25, 1890, in Froneh Settlement, Livingston parish, La. The precious remains were buried in the Felder Graveyard, four miles north of Port Vincent, La., to await a blissful resurrection. May our heavenly Father comfort the bereaved parents!

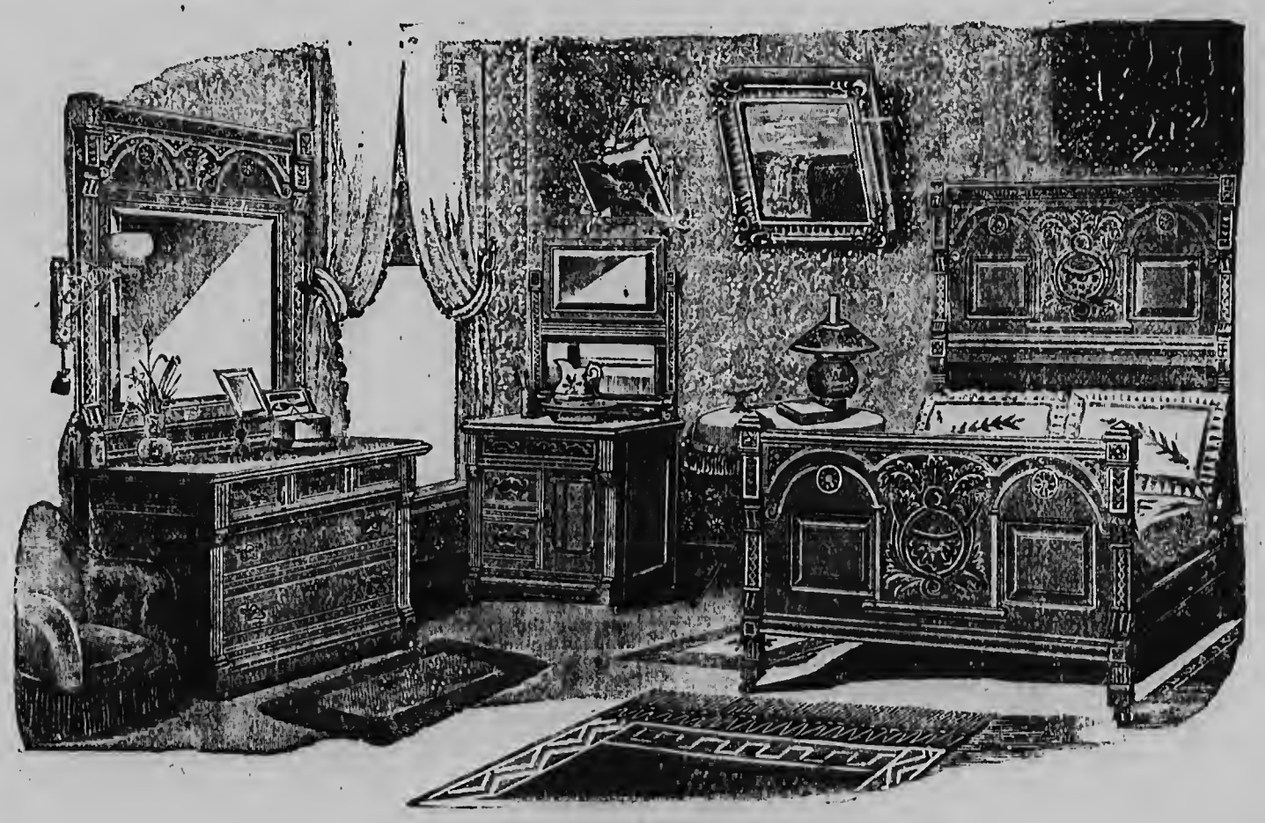
Complete Suits anywhere from $35 to $650, and odd pieces—such as Sofas, Divans, Easy Chairs, Patent Rockers, Window and Reception Chairs—at as low prices in proportion as the Complete Suits. I have these goods in Cherry, Mahogany and Walnut, and can give you your choice of any of the following coverings: Crushed, Embossed, Plain and Silk Plushes, Hair Cloth, Mohair, Raw and Spun Silks, Satins, English Tapestries, French Valours, Petit Point, Brocatelle or Damasks. I make a specialty of these goods, have many of the patterns made specially for my own trade, and can offer a greater variety at lower prices than any other house in the South.

NEW STOCK
in all departments, and every grade of goods, from the cheapest to the most expensive, in endless variety. I have all the latest and most fashionable designs, and, as I have only purchased from factories whose goods I have been selling for the past six years, can and do guarantee every piece of Furniture that leaves my establishment.



LOW PRICES
are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.
A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and whether you wish to pay $40 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs.
I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.
I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

"Hunger Is the Best Sauce."

As a rule, a person who has a good appetite has good health. But how many there are who enjoy nothing they eat, and sit down to meals only as an unpleasant duty. Nature's antidotes for this condition are so happily combined in Hood's Sarsaparilla that it soon restores good digestion, creates an appetite, and renovates and vitalizes the blood so that the beneficial effect of good food is imparted to the whole body. Truly hunger is the best sauce, and Hood's Sarsaparilla induces hunger.

Monteagle Assembly and Summer Schools.

EIGHTH ANNUAL SESSION. JULY 1 to AUGUST 25, 1890.

Assembly Park open to Summer Residents from June 1.

MONTEAGLE, TENN., widely known as the "Southern Chautauqua," is on a mountain plateau or spur of the lower Cumberlands, reached by mountain railway, one hour from Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis R. R. at Cowan, Tenn.

Rising 2,000 feet above the sea level, dry, pure air, no malaria, no mosquitos, magnificent scenery and abundance of pure spring water, it is the great natural sanitarium of the Southwest.

With 100 acres of picturesque, wooded heights enclosed; with improved water-works, sewerage, daily mails, telegraph, public buildings, and near 100 cottages; with the annual Assembly Platform and Summer Schools, affording a continual feast, it is a quiet "lodge in the wilderness," having all the world within call.

Parties desiring cottages for the summer should make early application.

For full particulars as to rates, advantages, etc., or any information desired, address.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

Wesleyan Female College.

This well-known institution has had another year of wonderful prosperity added to its crown, and the advertisement announcing the opening of the fall term will be found in another column. Under the careful supervision of its talented President, Rev. W. C. Bass, the attendance is increasing very rapidly, and all parents desiring a Christian home for their daughters, where a thorough education can be had, are earnestly recommended to write the President.

Neuralgic Persons

And those troubled with nervousness resulting from care or overwork will be relieved by taking Brown's Iron Bitters. Genuine has trade mark and crossed red lines on wrapper.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The New York Democrats celebrated the Fourth of July in a most enthusiastic manner. After the reading of the Declaration of Independence, addresses were made by Congressmen Bynum of Indiana, Crisp of Georgia, Allen of Mississippi, and others. The Federal election bill, recently passed by the House of Representatives, was discussed. A resolution was unanimously adopted declaring that mass meetings should be called throughout the country to denounce the Federal election bill and to protest against its passage by the Senate of the United States.

The National Council of Education began its session in St. Paul, Minn., on July 4.

The Fourth of July exercises of the reunion of the Confederate Veterans, at Chattanooga, took the form of a monster parade. Five thousand veterans were in line, together with the three regiments of Tennessee State Guards encamped near the city, and several military companies from other Southern cities. Gen. J B. Gordon was commander-in-chief of the procession, and rode along the line in review. No Confederate flags were displayed.

A large number of Knights of Pythias left this city, on July 5, to attend the annual conclave of that order in Milwaukee this week.

Francis Murphy's five months' labor in Iowa has resulted in 27,000 signatures to the pledge.

The presidency of the State Agricultural and Mechanical College at Bryan, Texas, has been officially tendered to Gov. Ross, and is being held under advisement by him, with the probability of his acceptance. The compensation will be made equivalent to a salary of about $4,000 per annum.

The new bridge authorized by Congress to be built across the Hudson river between New York and Jersey City will be 7,000 feet long, and have one central span 2,850 feet in length.

The first internal revenue district of Pennsylvania, which includes the City of Philadelphia, consumed last year 870,000,000 glasses of beer and 300,000,000 cigars.

Cotton-seed meal continues to loom up as a fertilizer, the Department of Agriculture people say. In Arkansas it is said: "Two years' experiment with fertilizers on wheat led the authorities to recommend 250 pounds of cotton seed meal to the acre as on the whole the most economical fertilizer for this section."

The first dirt was broken on the Corpus Christi and South American railway both at Corpus Christi and Brownsville simultaneously. The occasion was one long to be remembered, and was made the basis of a grand Fourth of July celebration, participated in by 2,000 people.

FOREIGN.

The Russian government, in order to counteract the plans of China to make Manchuria an outpost against Russia by building railroads and fortresses, is in that territory, and by an extensive colonization scheme has decided to hasten the construction of the Siberian railway and to strengthen the garrison in the Amur and Usuri provinces.

Despite the strength of the opposition in the English Parliament the Anglo-German agreement, relative to African territory, is considered to be absolutely safe. Count Von Hatzfeldt, the German ambassador at London, has the assurance of Lord Salisbury that the government is causing its supporters to know that it will stand or fall by the compact, and has secured a normal majority.

The United States steamer Mohican, with Consul General Sewall on board, has visited Pago Pago, and taken formal possession of the two pieces of land which were ceded to the United States by the Samoan government. King Maietoa remained on the United States ship half an hour on a visit, and as he left the Samoan flag was raised at the masthead, and the royal salute of twenty one guns was fired in his honor.

The German students' club at Prague subscribed 1,000 marks to the Bismarck memorial fund. The local police ordered the club dissolved, unless the members cancelled their subscriptions.

The health of Count Kalnoky, the Austrian Prime Minister, shows no signs of improvement. The Emperor Francis Joseph is constant in his attention to the Premier and visits very often.

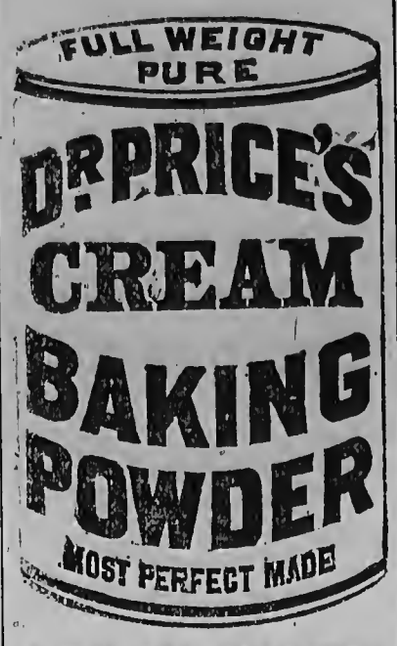
A momentous change appears to have occurred in Germany's policy in the Balkans. Instead of pursuing the semi-neutral diplomacy of Prince Bismarck, the Emperor has directed Herr Radowitz to take the initiative in advising the Porte how to meet the contending claims of Bulgaria and Russia. The Emperor's scheme of settlement involves the displacing of Prince Ferdinand and the substitution of Prince Karl, of Sweden, as ruler of Bulgaria in his stead, and also an arrangement of the Russian indemnity by capitalizing the amount through the international council of administration, which now controls the Turkish loans.

A short time ago the sum of 12,000 marks was stolen from five Chinese officers who are studying in Berlin. Every effort was made to detect the thief, but without success; and the losers had about given up hope of recovering the money. The matter was brought to the notice of the Emperor, and he has made good the loss to the officers from his personal funds.

It is reported that Montenegrins have crossed the frontier in large numbers and have been victorious in several encounters with the Turks. They now threaten the town of Ipik.

The cholera epidemic in Valencia, Spain, has slightly increased. Eleven new cases and three deaths are reported at Polova, and three new cases and three deaths at Gandia.

The handing over of the Island of Heligoland to Germany is to be an elaborate ceremony. Two imposing fleets, one having on board the Emperor of Germany, and the other being under command of the Duke of Edinburgh, will arrive off the island simultaneously. The British flag will be first saluted by the German fleet, and the island will then be formally handed over. The German flag will next be hoisted, and will in turn be saluted by the British fleet.



Its superior excellence proven in millions of homes for more than a quarter of a century. It is used by the United States Government. Endorsed by the heads of the Great Universities as the Strongest, Purest and most Healthful. Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder does not contain Ammonia, Lime or Alum. Sold only in Cans.

Asthma can't be cured? Oh! yes it can. Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar will do it. I know it because it gave me relief. Every winter I was troubled with asthma, especially if the weather was damp, suffering severely. I took about six bottles of Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and am completely cured. It is the remedy for asthma. CHAS. HEINES, 500½ Chippewa Street, New Orleans, La.

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar is a sure and speedy cure for coughs, colds, catarrh, bronchitis and consumption, and gives immediate relief in cases of croup and whooping-cough. Try it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

BIRDS-EYE VIEW OF THE SEA SHORE CAMP GROUNDS, NEAR BILOXI MISS

CAMP MEETING.

The Nineteenth Annual Camp Meeting on the SEASHORE CAMP GROUND will open JULY 11TH, next, and continue for ten days.

Eminent preachers will assist in conducting the religious services, as heretofore.

Ample accommodations will be provided for all visitors.

Two commodious bath-houses render the finest salt-water bathing on the coast accessible to all.

The Grounds are 78 miles from New Orleans, immediately fronting the beach, and on the line of the L. and N. railroad. All trains stop at the station during the meeting, landing visitors within 100 yards of the enclosure.

Reduced fares will be in force over all connecting roads for the meeting.

The gate fee for entrance into the Grounds is 50 cents for the season, or 25 cents for the day. The revenue thus obtained is used for improving the Grounds.

Preachers will be furnished sleeping accommodation free of charge, and tickets for meals at the restaurant at half rates, as heretofore.

Railroad tickets—Louisville and Nashville—on sale from July 6 to 22; good until 31st. Excursion tickets also on sale to Camp Ground; good to return on to September 30. All trains will stop at Grounds during Camp Meeting, July 11 to 22, inclusive.

Aberdeen District Sunday-School Conference.

The Aberdeen District Sunday-school Conference met in Okolona, Miss., June 20, 1890. Bro. Amos Kendall, P. E., presiding; Bros. H. R. Tucker and J. M. Barnes, secretaries.

Bros. F. A. Whitson, R. C. Morehead, and others, discussed the difficulties which Sunday-schools encountered, attributing same to "lack of interest on the part of parents," "incompetency of officers and teachers," "Defective teaching," "want of interest in the Word of God," "bad country roads—poor accommodations as to stoves, seats, and houses;" lastly, the "failure to provide attractions in Sunday-school work for young ladies and young gentlemen."

Bros. Woodall and Barnes showed that these obstacles were not insurmountable, but could be overcome by the preachers awakening parental interest in the Sunday-school cause, and by seeing that each school in his charge is properly officered and taught, being careful to select men and women of God for this important work. These brethren urged the necessity of laymen taking more interest in the condition of church-buildings, and see that requisite accommodations be provided for the comfort of the children; also that they look after the public roads, and, by faithful work and influence, have the roads leading to God's house kept well repaired. Bro. Barnes concluded by saying that with proper teachers, pleasant houses of worship, and good roads, the Sunday-schools would be attended by all classes, especially the young people.

Bro. T. B. Sykes, superintendent of the Aberdeen Sunday-school, in speaking of "The Qualifications for Teachers," stated that he had found women better teachers than men, because they give more attention and time to preparation of the lesson. Teachers, to be effective, must study the Word of God, must be consecrated, must be able to ask questions, in addition to those in the Quarterlies. They should have the special gift of instructing and edifying a class, in spite of pranks, wildness and willfulness of sprightly, fun-loving boys and girls.

Bro. Whitehurst remarked that the best way "To Secure Larger Attendance" in Sunday-schools was by having consecrated, bright, happy-faced teachers, social both in and out of school. A live secretary, as well as an active superintendent, who should see every visitor, and make the latter feel at home, asking them to join the school.

Bro. W. D. Bass spoke on this subject somewhat as follows: "We must follow the plan of the world by making a noise, creating an excitement, getting up an interest in our Sunday-schools. There is too much carelessness in the preparation of the lesson by the teachers. We must feed the lambs if we expect them to come to us. We should have joyous singing; happy sounds possess great drawing power. We need more money, more books, more knowledge, more of the Holy Ghost; and more Christ in our schools will add to their strength and usefulness. The Sunday-school work must begin and be carried on in our homes. Mothers and fathers, brothers and sisters must all be baptized by the Holy Ghost, and be filled with a longing to know the truth."

Bro. J. A. Lewis spoke on "The Secular and Social Influence" of Sunday-schools, and showed how they aided in preparing boys and girls for positions in the busy world; that Sunday-school scholars grow to be law-abiding, Sabbath-keeping, upright citizens—honest people; industrious, progressive men and women—who will improve our domestic, social, commercial, agricultural, industrial, business, State and national life. How important, then, to place the Sunday-school on a high plane, and make it an effective power for the upbuilding of our respective communities.

Bro. W. M. Leftwich delivered an able address on "The Prime Object of Sunday-school Teaching," which was published on the fourth page of this paper, last week.

Bro. Amos Kendall said on this subject: "Let us, as preachers, give more attention to the children; they are the hope of the church. See to it, my brethren, that the little ones of the flock are brought up on the 'sincere milk of the Word.' Get the children converted early. When we do this, we are on the borders of the millennium. We should spend more time in working among the young. If we get a child of ten years converted, he has a long career of Christian usefulness before him; but what can you expect a seventy-five year-old sinner to do for Jesus if you do succeed in bringing him to Christ?".

Bro. Eugene Johnson, on "Relation of Sunday-schools to the Missionary Cause," said a child should be taught what missions are doing, how the heathen live, their ignorant and demoralized condition. They should be taught how to carry the gospel to the poor; they should do missionary work at home; they should be taught their duty to contribute to the cause of missions. This will raise up a host of willing contributors, who will be blest and bless in giving to God for this great cause.

Bro. H. R. Tucker remarked the gospel is a missionary gospel. Discipline says to organize Sunday-schools into missionary societies, not merely to organize missionary societies in our Sunday-schools.

Children's Day is a missionary day. Incidental teaching and missionary facts are not enough. If we use all present means of instruction on missions, we should do about all we can do at present; and, as the Sunday-school is the creature of the church, the children of the Sunday-school bear the same relation to missions that the church does. It is the all-important cause, and the Sunday-school should be told all we can teach about missions.

In reference to the "Best Method to Raise Money for the Sunday-school," Bro. R. L. Trice said: "Get superintendents and teachers enlisted in Sunday-schools, and raise funds required for any outlay by contributions from them, thereby showing scholars that you are interested in their welfare to the extent of personal giving." He endorsed the words of Bro. Loftwich as to needs of preachers preaching to children: "If I were a preacher, I should give my first and best attention to the spiritual wants of the children, instead of preaching to old gray-headed people." Bro. Trice advised pastors to preach to the Sunday-school before the Sunday-school adjourns.

Bro. Swayze said the plan in his Sunday-school is to raise collections for expenses by classes; amount sent up by some one selected by each class.

Bro. T. B. Sykes remarked: "Classes take care of special objects—one an old lady, another of a sick boy. We have four entertainments a year, which furnish money for Sunday-school current expenses."

The discussion of the subject, "Should the Discipline Be Taught in Sunday-schools?" was argued nay by Bro. Augustus; but Bros. Kendall, Sullivan, Foster, and others, took the opposite side of the question, and insisted that it should be taught and explained. Bro. Kendall was very emphatic in urging all preachers and superintendents to have the Discipline taught; that it was founded upon the Bible, and its rules are binding upon every Methodist. Bro. Kendall asked: "How can one obey them unless they understand them? When can one better learn the rules than in childhood and youth? Then commence to teach the Discipline to the children, and you will have a church better established in the faith."

Religious exercises concluded this interesting convention, which was attended by large audiences. M.

A College President Taking Vacation.

Having finished the after-work of the session and commencement at Centenary, I set out to travel in the interests of the college. Natchez was first on my program. I had not seen the place for nearly two years. Its growth and improvement are manifest on every hand. A grand hotel and a large and elegant Masonic building, now going up, are among the improvements in the central portion of the city, while handsome additions are being planned and pushed all around the outskirts. The Fort Scott railroad is coming across the river to Natchez, at whatever cost. Its work in preparing to ascend the bluff, to its depot in the southern part of the city, is a stupendous exhibition of human energy and skill, and is being pressed to completion night and day.

Christianity, though not very demonstrative, is not dead in Natchez. Our churches have faithful pastors—Ballard and Burton—who are doing good work. When the superintendent of the Sunday-school at Jefferson Street Church called for the raising of hands with Bibles in them, almost every scholar promptly responded. Not every Sunday-school could do that. Every child that can read ought to have a Bible, and carry it to Sunday-school. Centenary College lies near the heart of many in Natchez, and some did not fail to give substantial evidence of their interest in its endowment.

Passing through Vicksburg, where I found Bro. Jones and Dr. Marshall ready for every good word and work, I reached Delhi in time for the District Conference. Bro. Harper and the faithful band of apostles, of which he is the worthy leader, were hard at work conducting the Conference as the Discipline directs. The attendance was good, and so were the reports, especially for a district which had been so largely under water by the late overflow. Surely these men are men of God, or they would not undergo what they do for his cause. These preachers follow receding waters as promptly as do the cotton planters, and the overflowed region must not fail of its crop, either of cotton or Christians, this year. It strengthens my faith to be among such men. Delhi and Delhi district have helped and will help Centenary both with endowment and students. When meagerly paid preachers give endowment notes without being asked, and pay the interest in advance, I feel assured that Centenary's fortunes can never wane, at least so far as money can sustain them while such men survive. Their number is increasing almost daily.

Monroe is a pleasant, growing city, on both sides of the Ouachita; has a new oil mill, and is soon to have a $280,000 cotton factory. Centenary got some help here. Bro. Upton is captain of the Lord's host on one side of the river, and Bro. Munholland on the other; and the church proposes to keep pace with the growth of the city. A new railroad crosses the V. and S. road here. So I took the train for Mer Rouge, and thence a hack for Bastrop. This is a quiet rural town, situated on a ridge, which is, doubtless, the remains of a long, narrow peak not yet covered by the alluvial flood which has buried the surrounding land to various depths. Five hundred years hence, perhaps, this entire ridge, which is now twenty miles long, five miles wide, and fifty feet high, will be covered with alluvium, and be as flat as any other part of the Mississippi Valley. In Bastrop the scholarly Bro. Brown is in charge of our church, and teaches the people from the pulpit and in the school-room. The Fort Scott railroad will touch Bastrop, and will, doubtless, quicken its commercial life. Bastrop takes large stock in Centenary, as you, Mr. Editor, can testify since your last year's visit to the District Conference at this place.

After Sunday I purpose to visit Ruston and Minden and Shreveport, and then three District Conferences at Homer, Robeline, and Colfax.

And, now, Mr. Editor, let all interested know that the endowment, so far, has worked well; the interest is paid with commendable promptness, and has put new life into the college in every way. But the endowment must grow. Those who have subscribed to it have done a most noble work for Christian education. Let all who have not taken part in the endowment do so at the earliest opportunity. We must have the $100,000 at once. The college buildings and grounds are now undergoing improvements according to the order of the trustees; houses are in demand by persons who wish to move to Jackson to educate their sons, and young ladies are applying for admission into the college, which shows what they think of it. Shall we turn the daughters away for lack of appliances to instruct and accommodate them? Let the endowment grow that the college may expand till it shall become the glory of Louisiana.

Millsaps College Endowment.

When the work of the endowment of a Mississippi Methodist college for young men was first inaugurated, there were two extreme opinions that would very naturally be formed with regard to its success. One was that $50,000 was so small an amount to be divided among 75,000 Methodists that it would be raised at once without effort, and the other was that our people were not sufficiently appreciative of their needs in this particular, and that the amount could not be raised at all. The result has shown that both were mistaken views. On the one hand, success has demanded, and still demands, a united and persistent effort upon the part of the friends of the enterprise; while, on the other, the presentation of the cause has met with so willing and generous a response that the most despondent can no longer doubt the ultimate success of the effort.

At no time since the publication of Maj. Millsaps' proposition has the outlook been as favorable as at present. Our preachers, itinerant and local, are taking hold of the work, and not only contributing liberally of their own means, but securing notes from others also, while new friends among the laymen are coming to the front every day. From present indications sermons on Christian education and collections for the endowment of Millsaps College will soon be the order of the day in Mississippi Methodism.

Let every presiding elder magnify the educational work in his district, and let the cause be presented to every congregation, and the approaching sessions of our Conferences will, as Bishop Galloway says, "be occasions for jubilee." Let our preachers and people see to it that they are prepared to take part in that jubilee.

The agent not only receives a cordial welcome and generous co-operation wherever he goes, but the preachers, realizing his inability to visit all the charges, are taking up the collections and sending in the notes, and almost every mail brings evidence of their zealous labors. Witness the following extract from an east Mississippi pastor: "Enclosed find endowment notes. ....I expect to send you some more soon;" or this from west Mississippi: "Enclosed find a check and two notes. I hope to be able to send more;" or this from a south Mississippi layman: "Enclosed find $10 to cover my note. Send me a blank note, so that I can give you another toward the college;" or this from a pastor in northeast Mississippi: "I enclose herewith two notes. Bro. C. hopes to be able to pay both this winter. .... I hope to get more to aid in the work." This comes from southwest Mississippi: "Enclosed find two notes. I have the promise of more help in the Fall. I hope you are still succeeding in your work." An east Mississippi presiding elder says: "Enclosed find a note for $50 in favor of Millsaps College. We are going to present the college to every Quarterly Conference." A south Mississippi layman writes: "I enclosed you five notes for $25 each." A pastor from south Mississippi says: "Enclosed find notes and money for the college. This is the work of my wife and daughter, who secured the amounts sent." An east Mississippi pastor sends the following: "I send you some endowment notes that I have secured on my work. Please send me some more blank notes. The Lord bless you and the college!" A south Mississippi layman writes to the agent: "Send me some blank notes. I want to sign some myself, and I will get some others to sign also." Another prominent layman from the southern part of the State writes to Maj. Millsaps as follows: "Enclosed find a check for $100, which I send as a contribution to the endowment fund of Millsaps College. No one has asked me to contribute; but I wish to be represented in this important enterprise. I would look with apprehension to the future of Mississippi Methodism if our people should fail to respond to the generous proposition which you have made them; while, with the establishment of this institution, I shall feel assured of an era of increased prosperity and influence."

I could give the readers of the ADVOCATE many other extracts of a similar character; but the above are sufficient to show that the cause has taken a strong hold upon the hearts of our people.

All that is necessary to secure an immediate and glorious success is that every friend of Christian education in the State put himself upon record as an advocate of progress by signing two notes himself, and using his influence to secure notes from others. The agent will promptly forward blanks upon application.

The time will come when to have contributed to the establishment of this institution of learning will be a subject of gratification and pride.

Woman's Missionary Convention of Louisiana Conference.

The Woman's Missionary Convention of the Louisiana Conference met in Baton Rouge, June 27. The president, Mrs. Thomas P. Fullilove, presided over every meeting in her characteristic manner of gentleness and dignity. We had as pleasant a convention as the excessive heat would allow; dispatched business very rapidly. We regretted the necessity of a meeting at a time when there was such a diversity of interests. The Lottery, the Sunday law, the Scientific Temperance bill, and other important questions were fiercely agitated, and it was the commencement week of the State University. All things considered, we had a very good attendance. The reports were rather more encouraging than usual. The treasurer reported $1,628 46 as having been remitted to her in the past year. This is an increase of several hundred dollars over any previous year. The juveniles are doing some heroic work. The Shreveport juveniles gained the banner. They averaged about $3 25 per capita. Who will try for it next year? Arcadia was second on the list this year. The president offers a handsome Bible to the society that is second on the list next year. Of course, the banner is to go to the society that contributes most per capita. The Executive Board were reelected, but there were several changes made in the district secretaries. Shreveport was selected as the place of next meeting; time—immediately after the Woman's Board of Missions at Ft. Worth adjourns.

Our annual sermon was preached by Bishop Galloway. It was very forcible, as is every utterance of this great man. We had the pleasure of listening to him three times in one day. At eleven A. M. he preached the commencement sermon to the State University; at five P. M. to the Young Men's Christian Association, and at night to the Woman's Missionary Convention. That was truly a day to be remembered.

I regret not having at hand our corresponding secretary's statistical report. Our friends all over the State would, doubtless, be glad to know just what we have been doing. It is a well-kept report, and, in many respects, very encouraging.

We were most hospitably entertained while there, and shall ever look back with pleasure to the many acquaintances formed among those dear, good people.

Before closing, I must not neglect to impress upon every society in the State the absolute necessity of making neat and accurate reports. Blanks will be furnished, and must be used. Systematic reports would so much alleviate the arduous labors of the treasurer and corresponding secretary.

Dear friends, I know you do not realize the additional work a little carelessness on your part may inflict on these long-suffering sisters. We received one report during the convention that did not have the name of any place or society on it; and, as it was mailed on the train, we at first supposed it impossible to identify it; but, referring to the corresponding secretary's report, we finally succeeded.

Each society is requested to keep the receipts for money remitted to the State treasurer, and send them up to each convention, and not to expect credit for anything more. The amounts that come in after the report is made are put down for the next year. Each member is requested to pay ten cents per month strictly, and this will cover the dues and Conference contingent fund. The local contingent fund is a different thing, entirely separate and distinct. It must be raised by each society in any legitimate way, and need never be reported to the Conference treasurer.

Hoping this is satisfactory and explicit, I am,

Your sister in the work,

L. PAXSON, Rec. Sec.

A Sunday-School Convention.

There was held at Plaquemine Brulee, July 5, a convention composed of delegations from the several Sunday-schools comprised in the circuit. The idea in having this assembly was to meet together and discuss publicly questions relative to the carrying out of the different departments of Sunday-school work. It was thought that by coming from different fields and exchanging ideas concerning the varied methods of conducting Sabbath-school business, we might all be mutually instructed and the Sunday-school interest more generally aroused.

There was accordingly made out a regular programme of exercises consisting, for the most part, of essays, discussing the various topics of Sunday-school work, with suggestions as to how this work might be best accomplished.

These papers were very profitable, embodying, as they did, the best thought, as well as the accumulated experience of their several writers.

The convention, though the first of its kind ever held in this part of the country, was a great success, and so declared by all who attended; and in token of the interest awakened it was decided to make the convention an occasion of annual occurrence.

We append the programme as carried out:

1. "The Best Method of Conducting a Sunday-school," by W. S. Evans.
2. "Should Sunday-school Teachers be Paid?" by Miss Emma Cunningham and Miss Julia Wilkins.
3. "Finances in Sunday-schools," by W. S. Evans.
4. "The Influence of Good Singing in Sunday-schools," by Miss Dora Wimberly and Miss Nettie Barrett.
5. "Missions in Sunday-schools," by Thomas Carter.
6. "Temperance in Sunday-schools," by T. E. McSpadden and Miss Ella Evans.
7. "The Duty of Teaching the Evils of Profanity," by Mrs. J. S. Latta.
8. "How to Secure the Greatest Attendance at Sunday-school," by Miss Maud Latta.

TEECEE.

Twenty Years Ago and Now.

Last Sunday, at the request of the present pastor, Rev. H. P. Lewis, I visited one of my old country churches, called Midway, eighteen miles distant, where I used to preach twenty years ago. It was Bro. Lewis' Children's Day at that place. Several acres of woods surrounding the church were covered with buggies, carriages, wagons and horses, and the church was crowded to overflow. I knew almost everyone; but nine out of ten had first to tell me who they were. Then I knew them familiarly.

The general improvement of everything making up church-hood was very marked, and exceedingly gratifying. I had the gratification of administering the Lord's Supper to persons who were born since I was pastor of that church.

I saw, too, a good and unusual illustration of home Christianity in the domestic household of Bro. Lewis. Intelligence and religion were plainly stamped everywhere, and in one thing most remarkably. Such a family of singers I have not before met with. They form a complete orchestra. From the eldest daughter, who handles the piano with vigor and dexterity, down through a troupe of seven or eight (father and mother sometimes joining in)—the youngest a little fellow about seven or eight—carrying all the musical variations in exact harmony and fullness of volume, they make it known in the highest strains of melody what the new hymn book was made for.

The church is growing in Yazoo.

THE MASTER'S CALL.

BY ANNIE L. JACK

The Master walks beneath the trees,
And many a wailing Zacchens sees;
Aloud he calls in gentle voice,
While saints and angels all rejoice,
"Zacchens, come down, come down."

Strong in good works we fain would try
To climb, with hopes to reach the sky,
The tree of self, so frail and weak,
But still that kindly voice will speak,
"Zacchens, come down, come down."

O let us hear the Master's call,
And at his feet with reverence fall,
Abashed and humbled be our pride,
We own but Christ, the crucified,
Zacchens, come down, come down."

Brookhaven District Conference.

The Brookhaven District Conference met at Hazlehurst, June 26; Presiding Elder Lewis in the chair. The presence of Bishop Galloway during two days of the session was highly appreciated. A good religious feeling prevailed, making the occasion one of profit both to the Conference and the community. By courtesy of the editor, Mr. Mitchell, we enjoyed the unusual privilege of reading daily a full account of the proceedings as published in the Copiah Signal; and thus it happened that when the elder inadvertently spoke of "this General Conference," only a few seemed to observe the mistake. The reports of the several committees were generally hopeful and inspiring. Collections, especially those ordered by the Conference, are well advanced; new territory is being added to existing circuits, and the gospel, faithfully preached, is reaching the hearts and doing its own good work in the lives of the people.

The Board of District Trustees appointed at our last session reported that they had selected Wesson as the location of the district parsonage, and negotiated for the purchase of a commodious house in one of the best parts of the town. Nearly half the purchase money is now in hand, and in a short time we expect to have our presiding elder at home in a house owned by the church, and set apart for his own use.

Millsaps Methodist College was brought prominently before the Conference. Interesting addresses were made in reference to it, including a strong appeal by Bishop Galloway, after which $1,070 was added to the endowment fund. One contribution may be specially noticed, as its sequel holds a moral. An old man, who has worked hard all his life, came tremblingly forward and subscribed $500. Next morning he came to the presiding elder and proposed to pay the amount down. "I have but a little time to live," he said, "and I want to make sure I have left something behind to do good when I am gone." A check for the full amount was at once forwarded to Maj. Millsaps, treasurer, at Jackson. Other subscriptions were made in the name of the young, chiefly preachers' children. Thus the college cause establishes itself in the hearts of our people of all ages. Gift and good-will, heart and treasure, prayer and patronage, will unite in making a rich endowment for the new school enterprise of the church. Indeed, Millsaps Methodist College promises to make a gracious history before it really begins to exist. Its friends can afford to be patient. The genesis of a benefaction is not the smallest part of it, by any means.

Another movement in the same line should command the sympathy of the church in Mississippi. President Fitzhugh, in the course of his report of Whitworth College, proposed that the Brookhaven district endow a chair in that institution, in memory of Dr. Johnson, and to be called by his name. A resolution pledging ministers and laymen to aid in this work of gratitude and love was carried with spirit, and will, doubtless, be heard from hereafter. Those only who study the subject from the inside know how large a work was done by this grand man for Christian education. It stands alone in the history of our church, if, indeed, it has a parallel anywhere in our country. Mississippi Methodism can not fill up the measure of duty by merely accepting or conserving the results of such a life. We must encourage the liberality of the living by enlarging the benefactions and perpetuating the good work of those who are gone.

Three ex-presiding elders were among the clerical members of the Conference—a weight of dignity that might have been oppressive had not their bright sallies on more than one occasion proved that dignity and dullness are by no means inseparable.

The delegates-elect to the next Annual Conference are: L. T. Fitzhugh, C. E. Hudson, R. Babington, and B. F. Goza. The next session will be held at Bogue Chitto.

The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE received kind and commendatory notice at the hands of the proper committee. The only complaint heard in reference to it was that the editor was not with us.

R. S. RICKETTS.

Aberdeen District Conference.

The District Conference of the Aberdeen district, North Mississippi Conference, was held in Okoloua, Miss., June 27-29, in the absence of a Bishop, Rev. Amos Kendall, the presiding elder, presided to the perfect satisfaction of all. This is Bro. Kendall's last year on the district, and no truer and better man ever served in this office or elsewhere. He is universally loved, and in return his preachers and brethren are loved by him.

Every charge in the district was represented, and the pastors, with two exceptions, were present. Revs. W. T. Shell and J. A. Bowen were kept at home on account of sickness. Bro. Shell was reported very low and rapidly nearing his heavenly home. (He has since died.—ED.)

The reports of the preachers show a healthy and prosperous condition of the church throughout the district. Several of the charges have enjoyed revivals, and others are just ready to enter upon special services. The following facts were brought out. Up to date there have been 344 additions to the church in the district; there are 46 regular prayer meetings; 73 Sabbath-schools—all, with one or two exceptions, using our own literature; over 500 church papers taken; Church Conferences held generally; books sold in nearly every charge by the preachers, and Children's Day pretty generally observed. Whisky is sold legally in but six places in the district. One thing we note to be deplored is, that while all our parsonages and nearly all our churches are properly deeded, but few are insured. The church seems to ignore the idea altogether. The spirit of the meeting was good, and the preaching was in power and demonstration. The preaching was done by Revs. Eugene Johnson, D. L. Mitchel, M. E. Tumlin, R. C. Morehead, J. A. Whitehurst, T. Y. Ramsey and Richard Harwell.

Rev. D. L. Mitchel represented to the Conference the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Rev. G. W. Bachman, colporteur and Sunday-school agent, presented the claims of our publishing interests. Rev. T. Y. Ramsey represented the Grenada Collegiate Institute. The delegates to the Annual Conference are: T. B. Sykes, P. W. Shell, W. W. Allen and Dr. J. W. Miller. The place of the next meeting is Amory. The Sunday-school Conference was held the day preceding the District Conference, and was a most enjoyable and successful day. The presiding elder had prepared a most excellent programme, and every subject was discussed with considerable interest. The speeches made were the most pointed we ever heard on any similar occasion. Rev. N. G. Augustus preached an appropriate sermon at eleven o'clock.

Thus has passed a pleasant and delightful Conference. Okolona's hospitality abounded, and each member of the Conference had the best home. We left Bro. Burroughs, the pastor, at work for a revival.

HOUSTON, MISS., July 2, 1890.

Columbus District Conference.

The twentieth annual session of the Columbus District Conference, of the North Mississippi Conference, began at Louisville, Winston county, Miss., Thursday, June 26, and closed its labors with the benediction, Sunday night, June 29. Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan, P. E., presided, and won the affectionate esteem of all by the firm and dignified, but gentle and considerate manner in which he conducted the business of the Conference. We were kindly received and hospitably entertained by the good people of Louisville. Our Methodist people at this place are on the "up grade" in point of church building. They have nearly completed a very neat and commodious building (after the modern plan), which would do credit to much larger towns. Rev. W. W. Williams, P. C., looked after the brethren in true brotherly style. He is an earnest and devoted pastor. The reports on the spiritual condition of the charges, Sunday-schools, church literature, periodicals, etc., in the main were good, and, in some localities, show an advance movement. We especially noticed the increase in membership.

Rev. J. W. McLaurin, agent for the American Bible Society, was with us, and delivered a lecture, and a collection was taken up for the cause he so ably represents.

Resolutions were passed complimentary (and which were deserved) to Rev. T. J. Newell, A. M., on his re-election to the presidency of the Grenada Collegiate Institute; also commending the school to our people.

In compliance with a resolution, Dr. Sullivan took up a collection for Millsaps Methodist College, amounting to one hundred dollars.

A resolution was introduced and passed requesting Rev. J. H. Brooks, who completes his fiftieth year in the ministry this year, to deliver a semi-centennial discourse at the next Annual Conference.

The Louisiana State Lottery was not forgotten, as the records of our Conference will show. The committee to whom was referred this subject spoke the sentiment of the Conference in no uncertain tones. It denounced the methods of this monster evil, and the attempt, on the part of its managers, to buy up the legislative branch of our sister State. May the God of our fathers direct the good people of Louisiana in the fight they are waging against this great evil!

J. GALCREAN.

Greenville District Conference.

This body convened in Rosedale, Miss., June 27, at 9:30 A. M. The day previous was devoted to Sunday-school interests. This Sunday-school Conference was pronounced by all who attended to be the most interesting ever attended. It quickened the impulse for Sunday-school work and will bear rich fruit. We had no ordained episcopos to preside; but our presiding elder was equal to the occasion, wielding the gavel with the suavity of a Duncan and the dignity of a Keener. It required a wise and steady hand to manage that body of experienced debaters.

The progress of the business showed some important indications and marked advance in some parts of the district. Committees were appointed on the spiritual state of the church, the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE and Conference Records. I will give an outline of the general features of the work.

First, As to the spiritual condition of the district, with few exceptions, the reports showed a sad lack of conformity to the, even, average standard of piety.

Worldliness has been received and tolerated in the church for so many years, that it has come to a crisis here as to whether we shall insist on the maintenance of Methodist usage and piety, or ground our arms and submit to the domination and leadership of the devil in the church. The world and the flesh and the devil have become entrenched so firmly in some places that the issue has to be made boldly, not with timid and feminine hand. The policy of forbearance, tenderness and love have been exercised here without any of the positive phases of discipline until "patience ceases to be a virtue."

The battle is joined, and the validity and merit of our Discipline will be vindicated or else we will have to surrender our heritage. But, as God has blessed us in our history, he will not now desert us in our present necessity. There is a crisis all over our church on this point, and the last General Conference was forced to voice itself, or else cringe under the gibes and taunts of a world-conforming and pleasure-worshiping age. We can lose no real strength if our discipline is right; and if it is wrong, it should not stand. We do not have any fears for the ark of God. The church will triumph in the end under wise and provident guidance and management. We must be done with catering and pandering to the rich, proud and gay for their money and their position. We must discern between the evil and the good, darkness and light.

This district is growing in grace and in liberality. We have good Sunday-schools and good congregations. The preachers are well supported and the church literature well patronized. The people are growing in connectional enterprise and spirit. The people have given, if I am correctly informed from the best authority, more than any other district in the State to the college endowment funds. We have good houses of worship, with but few exceptions, where we have any at all. And there are very few charges without a church at each appointment belonging to us.

Methodism, as elsewhere, was first in this country; it has grown and holds to-day the leadership of this country among the denominations.

About one-fourth of the district has been seriously damaged by the floods in the spring. Many charges are so materially weakened that the entire financial demand on the people can be met with great difficulty.

But few of the lay delegates were present, and all the preachers but two were present. These were absent on account of family affliction. Bro. Spraggins received the condolence of the Conference in loss of his little son.

A set of resolutions from the Sardis District Conference came too late for action by our Conference, requesting Rev. J. H. Brooks, of our Annual Conference, to preach a semi-centennial sermon at the next session of our Annual Conference. We, however, concur and urgently join in this request.

The session was harmonious throughout, and Rosedale overflowed with hospitality. Rev. A. F. Watkins was present to represent the college endowment, and made his presence felt by his earnest efforts in the great cause to which his time is devoted. He stirred up recollections of college days.

Mr. Editor, you and the ADVOCATE and Bro. Grant were not forgotten. We are proud of all our ADVOCATE gang and the noble work they are doing. Of course we resoluted. Blessings on our Methodism and the cause of Christ everywhere!

Aberdeen Sunday-School.

During a recent trip to North Mississippi the business manager visited Aberdeen, and was elegantly entertained by Bro. T. B. Sykes and his charming wife. On Sunday morning I visited the Sunday-school of our church at that place, which is ably superintended by Bro. Sykes, each member of his family helping him in this work; Sister Sykes teaching a class of middle-aged, cultivated gentlemen, while two daughters teach, one a class of about a dozen little boys, all of whom recently joined the church in a body; the other teaches a large class of bright little girls, who are Christian workers. There were classes of all ages taught by an efficient corps of teachers. Bro. Sykes taught a class of nervous, restless boys, all of whom knew the review lesson, and recited it while playing all sorts of pranks on each other. Bro. Bowen's, the pastor's class, was composed of thoughtful, talkative gentlemen, each ready with question and answer well suited to the lesson in hand. Bro. Bowen's severe illness threw a gloom upon the company, and many felt it might be long ere their beloved pastor would occupy his customary chair. A singular feature of this Sunday-school is that in several instances ladies teach gentlemen, and gentlemen teach ladies. Thorough Bible work seems to be the motto of this band of Christian toilers.

The East Mississippi Female College Commencement.

The nineteenth session of the East Mississippi Female College closed Thursday evening, June 19. The commencement exercises formed a happy sequel to what had, perhaps, been the most successful session of college work in the history of the institution; work that would not suffer by a comparison with the best in the land.

The sermon was preached in the First Methodist Church, of Meridian, by Rev. Mr. Woodward, of Yazoo, the college choir furnishing the music. "Building Character" was the subject of the discourse.

Monday was art day. The display of the various kinds of work showed skill in teaching and diligence in study. Dr. J. W. Bozeman, of Meridian, delivered the address.

Tuesday was the alumnæ day. Miss May Durham, president of the association, made the welcome address, which was responded to by Miss Fannie White, of the class of '90. An essay and history were read, and an address delivered, all which tended to strengthen the cords that bind the members of the association to their alma mater.

Wednesday evening the concert was given. Besides other rare and classical performances, the audience was delighted for about an hour by a musical drama, "The Pleiades," representing the conversion, by an edict from Jove's celestial court, of the seven virtuous sisters into the seven stars and the crowning of the youngest one, who only married, queen of the heavens and the center of the constellation, her face meantime being veiled to prevent vanities and jealousies.

Thursday morning, certificates of proficiency and of distinction were delivered in the presence of friends and patrons to those students who had met the requirements for the same; and Thursday evening came the proudest event of all—the graduating exercises of the class of '90, most of the dozen members of which would have graduated a year sooner, had not the standard of the college been raised. Consequently, they moved upon the stage with that dignified air that conscious worth gives.

The following is a list of the twelve: Ada Black, Blanche Buntyn, Alma Ellis, Mary Hawkins, Jennie Moore, Julia Moore, Rosa Moore, Ellie Ormond, Lou Smith, Mary Terral, Zelle Watts, Frances White.

The essays showed substance. Ornament is never absent from the girl graduate's production. Those selected to read, did so without embarrassment. Miss Ellis, of Exeter, Va., received the degree of A. M.; Miss Hawkins, of Enterprise, Miss., the degree of A. B., and the remaining ten, M. E. L. diplomas. All honors were accepted with becoming grace, and admiring friends covered with flowers the portion of the stage occupied by the twelve. The baccalaureate of the president was a model of its kind, and the annual address by Rev. A. F. Watkins, of Jackson, was a feast of thought seasoned with rhetoric. The serving was admirable, as the preparation had been thorough, and all the major and minor thoughts tended to the elevation of mind and spirit above matter.

TUNICA, LA.

The third Quarterly Conference for Bayou Sara circuit was held at Tunica, July 5 and 6.

Rev. J. T. Leggett and myself started from this place on Friday morning, reaching Bro. Robert Thom's about eleven A. M., who showed us some fine corn, which is estimated at eighty bushels on an acre. We left his house about one P. M. The route traveled was across the hills well known in these parts—hills high and steep and rugged. Sometimes we would walk down a steep place so as to go in safety; and, again, walk up a hill so that the horses could pull our vehicles. Along the route we saw some right extensive coves. Between New Hope and Tunica the country has seen its best days for farming; stock-raising may be profitable. Whites are few in number, while there are large numbers of colored folks. A little after dark we reached our destination. There were two things that conspired to make us glad. One was that twenty-five miles of the most rugged road was behind us, and the other was the exceedingly kind hospitality with which we were received. Tunica equals the best for hospitality. The church here is small, numbering only fourteen, and is twenty miles or more from any other Methodist Church. Thus isolated by the hills and distance, they only claim a quarterly meeting occasionally; so when they do get one, the preparations are elaborate and expectations run high. The church is among the Tunica Hills, two or three miles east of Tunica Landing, on the Mississippi river. These hills are almost mountains. The virgin soil is a rich loam covered in cane, with magnolia trees predominating. I noticed cuts in some of these hills made by the road fifteen to twenty feet deep without any change of color in the soil. I noticed honey locust trees in great abundance as a natural growth, and they loaded with the bean or fruit they bear. A bear had been killed near the church a month ago. He had been robbing the bee-hives in the neighborhood. He weighed 282 pounds. At one of the places I visited, the gentleman had a stock-farm in connection with his store and grain farm. There were about seventy-five head of horses, some of which were fine-blooded. While at Bro. A. G. Reily's, my attention was called to some old things. The house he lives in is seventy-five years old, made mostly of poplar, sawed with a whip-saw. A large pitcher and dish over one hundred years old, of heavy figured ware. The dish had a scooped-out place at one end for the gravy. It was large enough to hold the largest gobbler in West Feliciana. A medical book a hundred years old; a Bible of the American Bible Society's print made in 1826, now sixty-four years old, which has seen considerable use and is still readable; also a grey mule that was just finishing her twenty-fourth crop.

The preacher in charge, Rev. T. W. Brown, being still feeble from recent sickness, was not with us, but was represented by his youngest son, Rev. P. M. Brown, who, with the junior preacher, Bro. Leggett, assisted in the pulpit labors.

The meeting was a good one; two accessions and much interest manifested. They told me that nearly all the white people in that section attended church. Some one who counted told me that on Sunday at eleven A. M. there were fifty persons in the house, counting the children, which was the largest attendance for years. Some repairs had recently been put on the church, and the new lamps were just put into position for the quarterly meeting occasion. The prospect here is brighter than for years past. Bro. Brown is very popular. On Monday our party of five recrossed the hills for home, with pleasant impressions of the good people of Tunica.

C. MCDONALD.

WEIR, NORTH MISSISSIPPI, CONFERENCE.

On Wednesday, June 18, the Rev. Joe J. Jones came to McCool, and remained five days, preaching three and four times a day. The pulpit is his strong forte; and there, with fluency of language, with fervency of spirit, with an uncommon degree of heavenly zeal, and with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, the thoughtless youth, the gray-headed sinner, and the unbelieving are made to bow and to acknowledge the power of God under his preaching. He is at times quite figurative, and his figures, though not of classic character, are, nevertheless, very appropriate, and truly interesting; and the more so on account of their originality. He appears to be perfectly original in his sermons, and in his voice and manners an imitator of no one. I know that he has done a good work at McCool. His good, natural abilities; his depth of piety, his undoubted call to the ministry, with the daily verification of the promise of his Lord and Master, "Lo, I am with you," will account for his success. Some are disposed to blame him for making people laugh when preaching. It is true he has a considerable faculty of humor about him, but it is only used to wake up attention to something important that he is about to introduce. Bro. Jones is well calculated to build up believers in their most holy faith, and successfully to point the trembling penitent to the blood of atonement. He well knows how to give to all their meat in due season, and he himself is always "instant in season, out of season; reproving, rebuking, and exhorting with all long-suffering and doctrine." He is coming back to us in October. "God be with him till we meet again."

W. A. DOLLAR.

VANCLEAVE, MISS.

I am glad to report Vancleave circuit still on the up-grade. Spiritually my people are notable; financially they are improving; giving is more general. Besides paying their preacher about $400 and other assessments, they sustain a camp meeting, feeding everybody that comes free of charge. Improvements are being made on the parsonage inside and outside. I trust that the preacher on my next circuit will leave me as good a home as I will leave my successor. Just closed a profitable meeting. Thanks to Bro. Holland for good service. Twenty-two accessions to church this year; third Quarterly Conference held. Bro. Cooper was present, and did some good preaching. I carried him to the Americus Quarterly Conference. A goodly number of officials present. Bro. Raleigh's circuit is in a nice fix; great deal of enthusiasm manifested during Conference, especially when Bro. Casper suggested the raising of Bro. Roberts' salary. One thing noticeable; all the stewards that take the ADVOCATE said, Raise the salary. I am going to work for the ADVOCATE; there is an elevating influence in it. The district is improving fast, intellectually and financially, under Bro. Cooper's administration.

BOOKS.

LIGHT ON LIFE'S HIGHWAY. By Wayland Hoyt, D. D. John G. Huber & Co., Philadelphia and St. Louis.

This is a book "for the despondent and the cheerful; the tried and the toiling; the doubting and the believing; for those under bright skies or grey." Dr. Hoyt has produced a book that will be a solace to many and an inspiration to not a few. Here the spiritually hungry will find "convenient food;" the thirsty, cool and sparkling waters. The doubting will be strengthened in their faith, and the faithful will be encouraged to persevere. It will prove a "means of grace to all readers." The publishers have brought the book out in splendid style. It is richly illustrated.

FAITH, OR EARTHLY PARADISE; AND OTHER POEMS. By Ellen E. Hebron. Published for the author by the W. T. P. A., Chicago.

The first poem in this book fills 330 pages, and is a kind of drama. There are some good verses, and the tone is eminently religious. The smaller poems are on a variety of subjects, and exhibit some poetic taste. There are several prose essays at the end.

LESSON IV.—July 27.

LOST AND FOUND.

Luke xv, 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT—There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth.—Luke xv, 10.

INTRODUCTION.—The time and place where and when this parable was told can not be exactly given. But we know that Jesus had begun already His last journey to Jerusalem.

1. Then drew near unto him—Rather, and there were drawing near to him all the tax-gatherers and the sinners to listen to him. Publicans and sinners know that Jesus had turned, as in indignation, from the house of the Pharisee, and this, it may be, gave them courage to approach him.

2. Publicans and sinners, drawn by his tenderness of spirit and genuine compassion, gathered joyfully to hear him, but Pharisees and scribes, proud, haughty, too holy (in their own esteem) to have the least association with men repulsed to be sinners, growled at him: "This man" (putting the utmost contempt into their words and tones), this low, vile fellow, receives sinners upon the same social level with himself, and even eats with them! Shame! Murmured—Rather, were loudly murmuring. And eateth with them—Our Lord, who read the heart, knew that the religious professors were often the worst sinners before God, and he associated with sinners that he might save them.

4. What man of you, having an hundred sheep—This parable gains fresh force and interest if we remember that it followed on the great parable of the Good Shepherd in John x, 1-16, and on the compassion for the lost sheep of which we read in Matt. ix, 36. In the wilderness—Not a desert place, but uncultivated grassy plains. Note that the sheep are being pastured there. The sheep are left, of course, under minor shepherds, not uncared for. Some see in the lost sheep the whole human race, and in the ninety-nine the angels, as though mankind were but a hundredth part of God's flock. Until he find it—There are unfathomable depths of love in this phrase.

5. He layeth it on his shoulders, rejoicing—Literally, his own shoulders. All anger against the folly of the wanderer is swallowed up in love and joy at its recovery. "He bare our sins in his own body." 1. Pet. ii, 24. We have the same metaphor in the Psalm of the shepherd king (Psa. cxix, 176), and in the letter of the apostle to whom had been addressed the words, "Feed my sheep." 1. Pet. ii, 25. The "Good Shepherd" is a favorite subject in early Christian art. We can not go through any part of the Catacombs, or turn over the pages and collection of ancient Christian monuments, without coming across it again and again. We know from Tertullian that it was often designed upon chalices. We find it ourselves painted in fresco upon the roofs and walls of sepulchral chambers, rudely scratched upon gravestones, or more carefully sculptured on sarcophagi; traced in gold upon glass, molded on lamps, engraved on rings; and, in a word, represented on every species of Christian monument that has come down to us. It is not strange that the Good Shepherd has become so favorite a figure. It expresses the whole sum and substance of the Christian dispensation.

6. He calleth together his friends and neighbors—The recurrence of the two words so soon after chap. iv, 12, is suggestive. In its bearing upon our Lord's own work we may think of his "friends and neighbors" as being the disciples whom he had chosen: we may think also of "the angels of God," and the spirits of the just made perfect, who rejoice over one sinner that repenteth.

7. I say unto you—I, who know. Inasmuch as the saving of a human soul is for eternity, all the holy in heaven know that the misery terminated and the happiness made certain when a soul turns to God are simply immeasurable: therefore all benevolent souls swell into rapture over such an accession to the sum of real blessedness. Ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance—That all offended in many things, that for a man to say he had not sinned, was a lying boast—this was the first postulate of every preacher of the gospel, whatever school of thought he might represent. That our Lord uses the description with a holy irony is clear from the parable of the Pharisee and the publican. (See xviii, 9.) They trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others. They did need repentance, but did not want it.

8. Pieces of silver—Coins worth about eighteen cents a piece, commonly with the image of an owl, a tortoise, or a head of Pallas. As a weight, 65.5 grains. Ten drachmas. Each represented a day's wages, and may be roughly rendered shilling. These small silver coins were worn by women as a sort of ornamental fringe round the forehead. The loss might, therefore, seem less trying than that of a sheep, but in this case it is a tenth (not a hundredth) part of what the woman possesses. There is, perhaps, a special significance in the fact that the coin is lost in the house, while the sheep strays from the fold. What seems implied here is the possibility that a soul that is precious in the sight of God may be lost even within the society or church of Christ, which is for the time being the visible house of God. Light a candle and....seek diligently—To "light the candle" can be nothing else than to put forth the full power of truth and holiness. To "sweep the house" can be nothing else than to use all available means for discovering the possible good that lies hidden or seemingly lost. The coin is what it is because it has on it the king's image and superscription. Man is precious because he, too, has the image and superscription of the great King, the spiritual attributes of Thought and Will, by which he resembles God, stamped upon him. What we call feminine virtues and graces are needed for the deliverance of souls that have fallen—patience and diligence and minute observation—not less than what we think of as the more manly qualities of courage and enterprise and endurance.

9. If the woman be intended to represent the church, the loss of the "piece" intrusted to her may be, in part at least, her own fault. I...lost—Through her own carelessness. Of the sheep, Jesus says "was lost." A sheep strays of itself, but a piece of money could only be lost by a certain negligence on the part of such as should have kept it. In the one case, the attention is fastened on the condition of the thing lost; in the other, upon the sorrow of the one who has lost.

10. Joy in the presence of the angels of God—The To Deums of heaven over victories of grace. Over one sinner that repenteth—"I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live." Ezek. xxxiii, 11.

Missionary.

MISSION NOTES.—In the year 1876, by the most reliable estimate, the Protestant population of Europe, the United States, and the British colonies numbered 37,700,000, the Roman Catholic population 80,190,000, and that of the Greek Church 40,000,000. In 1886 the Protestant population in the same area had increased to 131,000,000—nearly fourfold; the Roman Catholic population stood at 163,000,000, and that of the Greek Church at 83,000,000. Adding to these Roman Catholics those in Mexico, Brazil, Peru, and the smaller South American states, their total number throughout the world are set down, in 1886, at 205,000,000; while, with 6,000,000 Abyssinians, Nestorians, Copts, etc., in Asia and Africa, the Christian sects of the world aggregated, in that year, respectively: Protestants of all denominations, 137,000,000; Roman Catholics of all sects, 205,000,000; Greek Church, with many diversities, 89,000,000. In connection with these figures it is pertinently added: "Every year popery is losing ground. Her population is unproductive and unprogressive. There is a lack of enterprise and energy, while those of the Protestant and Greek Churches are multiplying and advancing on every hand, and taking possession of the earth. Emigration is the feature and the forte of the races which compose their membership; and now that Europe is so densely peopled, the emigrant races will be the forces of the future. Rome knows and feels this, and her grand efforts are now put forth to corrupt the Protestantism of Europe and America, and, above all, to win back the Saxon race." These facts and this comment come from "A Century of Christian Progress," by the Rev. James Johnston, F. R. S., of Bolton, England, which has passed, as we have heretofore stated, to a second edition—Christian Union.

LOVE OF GOD AND MAN.—The love of God and the love of man must go together to make the missionary. Neither can be conceived of as standing alone. Let man's heart be filled simply with the sense of God's love for him and his love for God, and he may rejoice in the delightfulness of this affection, and forgot that it is selfish, because it is so rich, and he has lost sight of the multitude to whom he might carry this love. On the other hand, let a man be filled with love only for man, and you have no missionary. Again, you may have the philanthropist, who is ready to help his fellow-men; but you have no man who stands distinctly with the mission that God intends, with a great influence coming from God through his manly nature, to reach those for whom it is intended. When these two elements unite in the church, only then you have the prosperity of foreign missions. It is like the meeting of the chemical elements which have in them the power of the fire, neither of them holding it alone, but each requiring from the other its magic touch to give to the fire life, and the fire starts suddenly into its glorious blaze the moment the two come together. This is the simplicity of missions. Whatever may come afterward, in organization or in development, everything comes back at last to this.—Phillips Brooks.

THE TRIUMPH HASTENING.—Nothing so impresses the student of missions as the fact that a wonderful celerity of movement is manifesting itself with increasing force in the mission fields all over the world. Much of the work of the past has been the tunnelling and plowing and sowing, preparatory to the grand uplift, the toppling of walls, and the reaping of harvests. There were fourteen years of work in Tahiti before there was a convert, and now the Tahitians are the leaders in the Polynesian mission movement, which is evangelizing the islands of the South Seas. There were many years of fruitless toil among the Telugus; later Dr. Clough baptized ten thousand in three months. Johnson saw Sierra Leone transformed into a Christian state in seven years. In Fiji a thousand spires took the place of twelve hundred cannibal ovens in fifty years; at the beginning of that time there was not a single Christian, at the close not a single professed heathen. There are discouraging facts in places abroad, as well as at home; but a fair mind must be awed by the multiplied miracles of missionary work by which God is testifying to his presence with his people in these wonderful years.—Helping Hand.

A GREAT LOVE INDISPENSABLE TO THE TRUE MISSIONARY.—I was taught to believe that the essential to a missionary was strong faith. I have since learned that it is more essential for him to have a great love. I was taught out there that he needed to have great knowledge. I have learned that more than knowledge even is required—personal character. I have met men in mission fields in different parts of the world who could make zealous addresses at evangelistic meetings at home, who left for their fields of labor laden with testimonials from churches and Sunday-schools, but who have been utterly demoralized within a year's time, because they had not learned that love was a greater thing than faith. That is a neglected part of a missionary's education, it seems to me, and yet it is a most essential one. I would say that the thing to be certain of in picking a man for such a field as Africa, where the strain upon a man's character is tremendous, and the strain upon his spiritual life, owing to the isolation, is even more tremendous, that we must be sure that we are sending a man of character and heart, morally sound to the core, with a large brotherly sympathy for the natives.—Prof. Drummond.

Temperance.

The Christian and temperance people of the whole country will commend the action of the great International Fair and Exposition of the United States and Canada, to be held in Detroit, Mich., August 26 to September 5, inclusive, in rigidly excluding all forms of gambling, and all selling of intoxicating beverages from their buildings and grounds. In order to prevent evasions of this strict temperance policy, the Association has printed in the body of all its contracts and licenses for restaurant, lunch, dining and all other refreshment privileges, the following conspicuous notice: "All forms of gambling and selling of intoxicating liquors prohibited. This license may be revoked by order of the secretary for violation of above rules." Also the further warning: "Accepted by——subject to the above conditions——Sig." As this great international Fair was attended last year by a quarter of a million of people, and a much larger attendance is expected this year, many thousands of dollars have been vainly offered the managers for privileges to sell intoxicating beverages and also many thousands for licenses for various gambling devices. Not only is this strict prohibition an example to be commended to the managers of all other fairs and expositions, but it also shows how greatly Christian and temperance principles have advanced when such a course is adopted by the managers of such an immense popular enterprise, not only because they consider it right, but also because it is believed by these shrewd and experienced business men to be the policy best calculated to please and attract vast numbers of the well-to-do classes of people from all over the continent.—Mid-Continent.

The Bar-Room.

Young man, have not your eyes been frequently attracted to a sign having the following ominous word on it?—"Bar."

Avoid the place; it is no misnomer. The experience of thousands has proved it to be:

A bar to respectability;
A bar to honor;
A bar to happiness;
A bar to domestic felicity.

Every day proves it to be:

The road to degradation;
The road to vice;
The road to the gambler's hell;
The road to the brothel;
The road to poverty;
The road to wretchedness;
The road to want;
The road to robbery;
The road to murder;
The road to prison;
The road to the gallows;
The road to the drunkard's grave;
The road to hell.
The bar-room is truly;
The curse of the drunkard's wife.

We the undersigned, do testify that we have used Dr Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar for years, for all throat and lung troubles, with the greatest benefit. For coughs and colds it never fails. When taken according to directions, it cures our children of croup and whooping-cough, and for serious lung troubles it always gives relief.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." O. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla
The Best Blood Medicine

So say Leading Physicians and Druggists, and their opinion is indorsed by thousands cured by it of Scrofula, Eczema, Erysipelas, and other diseases of the blood.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla has won its reputation by years of valuable service to the community. It is the best."—R. S. Lang, Druggist, 212 Merrimack st., Lowell, Mass.

Dr. W. P. Wright, Paw Paw Ford, Tenn., says: "In my practice, I invariably prescribe Ayer's Sarsaparilla for chronic diseases of the blood."

Dr. R. R. Boyle, Third and Oxford sts., Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "For two years I have prescribed Ayer's Sarsaparilla in numerous instances, and I find it highly efficacious in the treatment of all disorders of the blood."

L. M. Robinson, Pharmacist, Sabina, O., certifies: "Ayer's Sarsaparilla has always been a great seller. My customers think there is no blood-purifier equal to it."

"For many years I was afflicted with scrofulous running sores, which, at last became so bad the doctors advised amputating one of my legs to save my life. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla and soon saw an improvement. After using about two dozen bottles the sores were healed. I continue to take a few bottles of this medicine each year, for my blood, and am no longer troubled with sores. I have tried other reputed blood-purifiers, but none does so much good as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—D. A. Robinson, Neal, Kansas.

The Original Package Decision.

From the way matters have been going since the Supreme Court of the United States rendered its decision about the "original package," it seems to us that that decision has cut the ground from under, not only the prohibitionists, but from under every sort of temperance folk and temperance work. That decision seems to have broken the devil's chain, and that individual is now running loose, "seeking whom he may devour," and actually devouring a good many. The wisest seem to think the only hope is in Congress; but Congress is very slow to act on anything except purely party measures. For six months two or three anti-lottery bills have been quietly snoozing in congressional committees, notwithstanding loud cries from all parts of the country that they be acted upon. We "hope against hope" when we hope that Congress will act in this matter.

Gen. C. B. Fisk.

The death of this distinguished man occurred in New York, July 9.

Gen. Fisk was one of the most prominent men in the country. By profession he was a lawyer, by occupation a merchant and speculator. During the war, from the rank of colonel he was raised to that of brigadier-general, and breveted major-general. Through his efforts Fisk University, at Nashville, Tenn., was projected. He was the prohibition candidate for the presidency at the last election. He was an enthusiastic Methodist, and held the confidence of his denomination. He was fraternal messenger to our General Conference at Richmond, Va., in 1886. His speech on that occasion will not be forgotten by those who heard it. At the time of his death he was president of the Board of Indian Commissioners. He was an out-and-out prohibitionist, and that cause has lost one of its ablest advocates. He was in his sixty-second year.

Report No. 12, Committee on Episcopacy.

Resolved, That the Book Committee be instructed to apportion $12,000 among the Conferences, notifying the presiding elders of the several districts of the sums necessary to be collected in addition to assessments already made and apportioned; and the presiding elders are hereby instructed to divide these sums among their charges in the usual way, according to the sums previously distributed in these charges.

St. Louis, Mo., May 23, 1890.

Mr. Editor: The above Report No. 12 on Episcopacy, adopted by the late General Conference, has been sent to me, as chairman of the Joint Board of Finance, with instruction to apportion to the several districts in the Louisiana Conference $356 additional assessment for Bishops. I suppose you had better publish the report and give the amount assessed to each district, which I send you below:

New Orleans	$92 00
Shreveport	71 00
Homer	70 00
Delhi	50 00
Opelousas	41 00
Alexandria	32 00
Total	$356 00

A Legislature that refused by an exact two-thirds' vote to investigate charges of bribery, when those charges were made openly on the streets and in the newspapers, created evidence of the strongest kind that the charges were true!

Seashore Camp Meeting.

The camp meeting exercises for the current year were most auspiciously introduced on Friday night, July 11, by a sermon preached by Rev. Mr. Peterson, of Mobile, from the text, "But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." (Acts i, 8.) The sermon was an earnest exposition of the main feature of this text, and a fervid exhortation to Christians of all ranks to witness individually and at all times and in all places for their ascended Lord. At this opening service there was a larger attendance than is usual both of ministers and people, and the whole tout ensemble wore a decidedly hopeful expression. At the 8:30 A. M. service, on Saturday, J. M. Beard preached from the text, "Whom having not seen, ye love; and who, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory." (I. Peter i, 8.) The service that follows this early sermon is by immemorial custom an experience meeting, and to say that as such it was a success is less than an extravagant statement. For an hour the tide of holy feeling rolled uninterruptedly and until it was checked by the approach of the hour for the ensuing service. At the 11 o'clock hour W. W. Wadsworth, of Augusta, Ga., discoursed upon the saying of the patriarch—"As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord;" and it was good to be there.

The crowd has increased with every service, and there are strong indications that there will be a Sunday overflow as well as a largely augmented attendance throughout the entire season. Every train brings its reinforcement, and the usually quiet grove is becoming animated in the extreme. The postoffice and newspaper, telegraph and management offices are in full blast. The restaurant, under the popular control of B. O. L. Rayne, Esq., is feeding hundreds of guests, and the tide is on in all the numberless activities to which the season gives rise. The grounds are in excellent condition since the last meeting. Several handsome two-story buildings have been erected; notably those of E. P. Mackie and Col. Zable, which are among the most comely on the grounds; while the important Committee on Lights have distinguished themselves by substituting oil lamps for the old-fashioned torch-lights, which have heretofore been depended on to illuminate the tabernacle grounds. This latter is a most important reform, and we would heartily commend it to all camp meeting managers. The most delightful weather prevails; leeward breezes are constant; and the mean thermotical register would do credit to the month of May.

The Music Committee have also done their work well, and by the liberality of Philip Werlein, Esq., one of the managers, have provided splendid instruments—organ and piano and cornet—such as may have been used in the temple service in David's time; and the result is good music in quantity and volume to suit. Rev. Henry Ahrens, and Miss Nonie Jones, organist of the Rayne Memorial Church, are in charge of the music, and do full justice to their difficult department.

Among ministers present are Messrs. Peterson, Lamar, Roper, Brittin, Hurt, J. O. Keener, Calhoun and Chappelle, of Alabama; Cooper, Messrs. Harmon, father and son, Vickers and Carley, of Mississippi; Rankin and Nabors, of Tennessee; Wadsworth, of Georgia; Bishop Keener, S. S. Keener, J. A. Parker, Evans, Isbell, Hocutt, C. Keener, Beard, Scurlock, Schulc, J. B. A. Ahrens, H. H. Ahrens, of Louisiana.

At three o'clock, on Saturday, S. S. Keener, of the Moreau Street Church, New Orleans, preached from Pilate's saying, "What I have written I have written," to the largest congregation which had convened in the tabernacle since the meeting begun. The sermon was an instructive discourse and left a good impression on the large audience. At night, owing to the large influx of arrivals during the day, the audience was nearly doubled, and Hurt, of Greenville, Ala., discoursed about the judgment in its relation to the individual sinner, both entertainingly and impressively; but there was no general response at the close of the sermon. Indeed, there seems to be a very large percentage of the picnic element in the crowd now assembled here, and to counteract it will require more gospel headway as well as more depth and breadth of Christian witnessing than is apparent at this stage of the meeting.

At 8:30, Sunday, J. B. A. Ahrens preached from the text, "Did I not see thee with him in the garden?"—an appropriate and charming discourse—to an audience that filled the tabernacle, and at eleven o'clock Bishop Keener preached a sermon characteristically good and great from the four last verses of the ninth chapter of Mark. If the plan of salvation had been lost from earthly records, it could have been found entire and sublimely put in the Bishop's discourse. At its close there was a delightful altar service, and ten or twelve conversions; some of them notable ones.

The meeting at this stage is pronounced a great success, and it will, doubtless, grow better to the end.

Dr. Rankin, of Asheville, N. C., preached at three o'clock a noble discourse, and there were many penitents and several conversions. Dr. Wadsworth, of Georgia, at night, discoursed eloquently from the text, "And the door was shut," and there were many bright conversions. Multitudes are in attendance, and it has been a great day.

Rev. John Barcroft.

Rev. John Barcroft, for twenty years secretary of the North Mississippi Conference, is dead. His death occurred yesterday at Richland, where I was holding his quarterly meeting. It was painless and sudden.

He was attacked Sunday, during the sermon, with a convulsion, which passed off in a moment. He repaired to Mr. Morrow's, near by, where he had another, but apparently briefer and lighter. In a moment he was quite himself again, walked into another room, lay down on a bed, and talked in an animated way of his regret that his health was such that he must postpone his meeting that was announced to begin at that time. Ceasing to speak, at the continued request of his friends, he turned over on his side, remarking that if it was the Lord's will to take him then, it was all right. He added, in the next breath, "Another one is coming," meaning a convulsion, turned purple in the face, gasped three times, and was gone. His body went up at three o'clock this morning to Holly Springs, where it will be buried. His health had been poor since Conference, and about a month ago dropsy had attacked him, beginning in the feet and had gone upward to his body. His Quarterly Conference on Saturday gave him a vacation to seek restoration of health elsewhere. He would have gone in a day or two.

I learned from association with his people, several days before his death, that he was greatly honored in the whole community here, at Goodman and at Richland, and was enjoying a growing esteem with all, and especially with the young men, as a good man, a thoughtful, instructive preacher, and a diligent, sympathetic pastor. His power for good was increasing.

He was in the fifty-seventh year of his age, and in the thirty-first of his ministry. I had long and frequent conversations with him for the last few days. There was no thought of his that death was near, though he believed it might come in a few months; but he was ready. I held his hands when the last came, and I think the first thought of death that came to him was when he had already passed through it.

J. J. Wheat.

Pickens, July 7, 1890.

A Pleasant Day at Mount Pleasant.

Mount Pleasant is a church in Copiah county, five miles east of Crystal Springs. Learning that Presiding Elder Lewis had a quarterly meeting appointment there last Sabbath, I asked the privilege of being present. This was readily accorded, with the assurance that a college collection would be entirely agreeable. (Not every preacher has the grace and courage to give such assurance.) So, accompanied by the companion of twenty-one itinerant years, I went down on Saturday afternoon to Crystal Springs, the tomato metropolis—indeed, the truckopolis—of Mississippi. A delightful night was spent in the home of Bro. W. C. Wilkinson, like Blennerhasset, "a native of Ireland and a man of letters," but, unlike him, a Methodist and loyal son of the republic.

On Sunday morning, behind the parsonage pony, we had a pleasant drive, over an excellent road, to the neat little church beneath the oaks. Beautiful for situation is Mount Pleasant! Before the hour of eleven the spacious grove was filled with vehicles of every description, and the tasteful little chapel overflowed with a devout and intelligent congregation.

After a profitable love-feast, earnest heed was given to the Word preached. The Master of assemblies was present. An appeal for offerings to the Millsaps College endowment fund was responded to with ready liberality. Young and old threw into the treasury until the sum of $338 50 was realized. I have never seen more joyous giving. The people felt it a privilege to have a share in building up an institution so vital to the successful ongoing of Methodism in Mississippi. If wealthier congregations, in proportion to ability, would respond with like liberality, we could open our college with an endowment of a half-million dollars. This collection indicates a growing and intelligent concern for an institution worthy of the opportunity now before the church in the State.

After a delicious family dinner beneath the trees, we returned to the church for a lucid, helpful sermon from the presiding elder and a solemn communion service.

In the evening, at the request of Pastor Norsworthy, I had the pleasure of talking to an immense Crystal Springs congregation on "Mexico." We need a larger and better appointed church in the capital of the Montezumas, and Crystal Springs will help to build it.

On Monday morning we are at home, refreshed in spirit, filled with cheerful memories, and with stronger faith for work. Fraternally yours,

Chas. B. Galloway.

Jackson, Miss., July 7, 1890.

The preachers are coming to the front in public affairs. Rev. Dr. Kelley is a candidate for governor of Tennessee on the Prohibition ticket; Rev. J. P. Eagle, a Baptist minister and present governor of Arkansas, is a candidate for re-election, and Rev. N. B. Fizer, a Methodist, is his opponent. What does it mean?

Opelousas District Conference.

The Opelousas District Conference convened, pursuant to appointment, in Patterson, La., June 26-29. Rev. John A. Miller, presiding elder, occupied the chair, and Rev. R. S. Isbell was elected secretary. Several of the preachers were absent, and the lay representation was small. The business of the Conference was transacted through committees, and all the interests of the churches on the district were minutely considered. From the reports rendered, we gather the following facts: that all the various departments of church work were in a healthy condition, the preachers encouraged to press forward, and the laity coming up to their help, financially and otherwise. The percentage paid on the pastors' salary was larger than at the same time last year, and the various Conference collections were receiving due attention. The work on the district is progressing favorably. Some protracted meetings have been held with success, others are in contemplation, and the preachers are planning for glorious results.

Prominence was given to religious service, and the Word was preached with power. Congregations were large at each service, and the people were edified and blessed. The Conference was entertained by the people of Patterson in a princely style, and some had to borrow a few preachers upon whom to lavish their hospitality.

Delegates to the next Louisiana Annual Conference: John N. Pharr, U. T. Blackshear, W. B. Torian, and W. B. Pilley, local elder. Alternates: A. H. Trotter and W. C. Chevis.

Place for holding next District Conference: Lafayette, La.

R. S. Isbell, Sec.

Rev. John Barcroft.

Bro. Barcroft, the secretary of our Conference, and pastor of Richland circuit, died at 1:30 P. M. on the sixth instant. He was attacked by something like apoplexy in the church at Richland, while Dr. Wheat, his presiding elder, was conducting the services of his quarterly meeting. He was taken from the church to a private house, where he died in about one hour after he was taken.

His mind was clear to the last moment. His last words were: "If my Master has called for me, I am ready to go."

Bro. Barcroft has been our Conference secretary for twenty years next November. His journal has always been considered among the best in the Church, South.

He joined the Memphis Conference in the Fall of 1858, and gave thirty-one years of his life to the work of a traveling Methodist preacher, spending about twenty years in station work, and four years on the Holly Springs district as presiding elder, from which he went to the field, where he died. He was brought to Holly Springs on the seventh, and was followed from the Methodist Church by his many friends here to the cemetery, where he awaits the call of the resurrection trump.

Bro. Barcroft has been more or less affected for the last ten or twelve years; hence those who did not know him before this time did not know him at his best. I have known him intimately for twenty-six years; for during much of this time we have succeeded each other and filled neighboring charges, together much in protracted meetings and in our own homes. I knew him long, I knew him well; and I do not hesitate to say that he was one of the purest men I ever saw—a man of strong faith, deep piety, warm heart, ever drawing nearer to his friends as their misfortunes increased. He was an affectionate and devoted husband and father, almost idolizing his wife and two little girls, who are now left heart-broken to mourn their loss.

Bro. Barcroft has not failed to answer to the roll-call of the North Mississippi Conference in twenty years. When his name is called at our next Conference we will remember his last words—"I am ready to go."

J. W. Honnoll.

Holly Springs, July 8, 1890.

A Question.

We have received a note which runs after this fashion:

Mr. Editor: There is a question which we would like to see answered in the Advocate. It was promised that the Messiah should be a descendant of David, but Matthew traces the genealogy of Joseph, who was not the father of Jesus. What we wish to know is, where to find the proof that Christ was a descendant of David. It must be somewhere in the Bible, but we can not find it, and our minister can not tell us where it is!

Subscribers.

We turn the question over to our learned theologians and doctors of the law, and hope some of them will be able to satisfy the desire of these subscribers.

Notes.

A Legislature that violated the Constitution of its own State by an exact vote of two-thirds on two separate ballots would make a good picture for future statesmen!

The poor dupes of the Lottery who live outside of Louisiana may make up their minds to pay ninety-seven per cent. of Morris' million and a quarter a year to support the pauper State.

The Ram's Horn:

There are men who will walk five miles to lead a prayer meeting, simply because they enjoy being at the head of the procession; but when somebody is wanted to sit up with the sick or help the needy, they are suddenly missing.

In regard to advertisements, no matter where found, this will be a good rule to follow. Whenever anything is offered for nothing or next to nothing, let it alone; it is a fraud. And the man or woman who desires to get something for nothing has nearly crossed the line of honesty.

Judge Harris, of DeSoto, and Capt. Doss, of Morehouse, both members of the Legislature, have shown commendable zeal in working for the temporal benefit of Rev. E. B. Foust, our preacher at Oak Ridge, La., who lost one leg in the war and lost the other this past spring. These gentlemen, having interested themselves in his behalf among their friends, have secured and transmitted to him a snug sum of money. We are glad to chronicle this good deed, and hereby tender the honorable gentlemen our special gratitude.

The words with which Gov. Nicholls closed his message vetoing the Lottery bill deserve to be enshrined in the heart of every true patriot in Louisiana. Here they are:

At no time and under no circumstances will I permit one of my hands to aid in degrading what the other was lost in seeking to uphold—the honor of my native State—to affix my signature to the bill. I would, indeed, be ashamed to let my left hand know what my right had done.

I place the honor of the State above money, and in expressing that sentiment I sincerely voice that of thousands of brave and true men, and of good and devoted women of the State.

If the people of Louisiana suffer the Lottery to capture them at the polls, the people outside of Louisiana will pay annually into our treasury the snug little sum of $1,212,500. How do you like the prospect? you outside folks. This calculation is made on the admission of the Lottery Company that only three per cent. of its earnings come from Louisiana! Say, you outside people, how do you relish pouring into Louisiana's treasury $1,212,500 a year, while we Louisianians put in $37,500. You had better begin to kick. You'll have it to pay if you don't.

Those persons in the Legislature who declared that Gov. Nicholls had "assumed an authority directly in violation of the Constitution and dangerous to the sacredness of the same," when he vetoed the Lottery bill, are the same persons who violated the Constitution by thrusting this issue upon the people in the face of the Constitution which declared emphatically that after a certain time all lotteries should forever cease. And now they turn around and talk piously of the "sacredness of the Constitution," and denounce the governor for interposing to save the State from their own violation of its plain provisions! What do such people mean by "sacredness of the Constitution?" They must mean consecration to John A. Morris.

Personal and Otherwise.

We are glad to record that Dr. McCoy, of the Alabama Advocate, is "on his feet again and at the post of duty." May he continue to improve until every fiber of his belug shall tingle with health!

The following brethren were elected delegates to the North Mississippi Conference from Columbus district: W. V. Connell, W. J. Newsum, M. F. Ames and J. A. Cook; alternates—W. B. Shumaker, R. M. Smith.

Dr. E. J. Meynardie, a prominent member of the South Carolina Conference, died of apoplexy, July 1.

Bro. Cooper, presiding elder of the Seashore district, passed through the city last week en route to the Seashore Camp Meeting. Bro. Cooper has obtained 30 new subscribers for the paper in 3 weeks. Can't other presiding elders do as well?

Governor Nicholls vetoed the amended Sunday law passed by the Legislature, and they failed to pass it over his veto.

Dr. R. N. Sledd has been appointed fraternal messenger to the Canada Methodist Church.

The editor expects to attend two District Conferences this week, and will necessarily be away from the office eight or ten days. Our correspondents will please bear this in mind.

We call the attention of the presiding elders of the Louisiana Conference to a communication in another column from Rev. J. H. Scruggs, chairman of the Joint Board of Finance, in reference to an additional assessment made upon the districts to meet the increased Bishops' fund.

The business manager was handsomely entertained while attending the Meridian District Conference, at Enterprise, Miss., by Presbyterian brother Fox and his charming lady. No pains or effort were spared to show that hospitality was one of their prominent Christian characteristics.

Bishop Galloway and Rev. A. F. Watkins presented the subjects of "Christian Education" and "Millsaps Mississippi Male College" at the Meridian District Conference, held last week at Enterprise, Miss., and obtained over $660 in subscriptions to the latter.

The president of Centenary College has received an application for a house in Jackson, La., from a gentleman residing in the city of Mexico, who wishes to send his family to the United States for the purpose of educating his four sons. Centenary is the place for them.

Christian Advocate, N. Y.:

Governor Abbett, of New Jersey, has vetoed the bill by which the Legislature attempted to legalize gambling at horse-races in that State, and in this he has discharged a plain duty and taken his place beside the governors of Louisiana and California, both of whom have lately placed themselves on record, and used their official influence against threatening evils whereby unscrupulous men propose to corrupt the land for the sake of gain.

We have some big cities in this country, and just now we are boasting of their bigness; but London would swallow up New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Cincinnati and San Francisco, and would just be full. It could gulp down Baltimore, St. Louis, Boston, Cincinnati, San Francisco, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Cleveland, New Orleans, Milwaukee, Washington, Newark, Minneapolis, Louisville, Jersey City, and St. Paul, and not be full by nearly a hundred and sixty thousand. Pretty big place that! The population of London is set down at 4,351,738.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. J. W. Maloue, writing from Mlater City, Miss., says: "At the Grenada District Conference, held at Sunny Side, June 27-29, Jas. A. Townes, of Minter City, gave $570, distributed as follows: Millsaps College endowment, $250; Oxford Church, $170; ministerial education, $150. He was elected a delegate to the Annual Conference."

—Rev. H. P. Lewis, Benton, Miss., writes: "Our congregations are good, very good; on the increase. Our Sunday-schools are well attended and well conducted. Our superintendents are faithful, good men. Col. S. M. Dyer, superintendent at Benton, is seldom absent from his post. He is the oldest superintendent on the circuit. J. J. Pepper, the superintendent at New Hope, has had a long, severe attack of "la grippe," but is all right now, and wants to know who baptized John the Baptist. Can you tell him? Robt. Tate, at Tates' Schoolhouse, with the help of "those faithful women," is moving on well. Dr. F. Caruthers, at Midway, has a fine, large school, with a lot of good teachers, and is doing good work. J. N. Brown, at Bowman's, is in charge of a school that has recently been organized with fifty-three names enrolled, and bids fair to do much good. We have recently received seven persons into the church, baptized four children; collected on Children's Day, $17."

—Rev. J. D. Cameron writes from West Point, Miss.: "The Sam Jones' meeting in West Point, Miss., will begin on August 5, and continue eight days. Every preparation is being made for the comfort and accommodation of the worshipers of God. Our tabernacle is under way, and is to be completed by the twentieth of this month. Its comfortable seating capacity is about seven thousand. We are praying and working for a grand moral and spiritual revolution. The preachers are cordially invited to come and help us. Pray for us, brethren, if you can't come."

—Rev. R. A. Burroughs writes: "Okolona is passing through one of the grandest revivals ever held there. About sixty persons have given their names for membership in the church; thirty-eight to the Methodist. The good work goes on; will continue until Sunday. The Rev. Joe J. Jones has won nearly all hearts to him. He is a great preacher of righteousness. He handles the great evils of the day without gloves, and the vile sometimes rage and curse; but he continues to tell them of their folly. The Lord is with us. To his name be all the glory!"

—Presiding Elder T. L. Mellen writes: "To-day, July 14, at Enterprise, license to preach was granted to Henry Gabriel Hawkins, son of the late Gabriel Hawkins, of the Mississippi Conference, and brother to Rev. Ira Hawkins, recently licensed at Ellisville. A few weeks ago, at the West End Church, Meridian, a similar license was granted to Thomas Jones Norsworthy, a son of the Rev. R. D. Norsworthy, of our Conference. May a double portion of the Spirit be given unto these sons of the prophets!"

VACATION SONG.

I have closed my book and hidden my slate,
And thrown my satchel across the gate,
My school is out for a season of rest,
And now for the school-room I love the best!

My school-room lies on the meadow wide,
Where under the clover the sunbeams hide,
Where the long vines cling to the mossy bars,
And the daisies twinkle like fallen stars;

Where the clusters of buttercups gild the scene,
Like showers of gold-dust thrown over the green,
And the wind's flying footsteps are traced as they pass,
By the dance of the sorrel and dip of the grass.

My lessons are written in clouds and trees,
And no one whispers, except the breeze,
Which sometimes blows, from a secret place,
A stray sweet blossom against my face.

My school-bell rings in the rippling stream
Which hides itself, like a school-boy's dream,
Under a shadow and out of sight;
But laughing still for its own delight.

My schoolmates there are the birds and hers,
And the saucy squirrel, less wise than these,
For he only learns in all the weeks
How many chestnuts will fill his cheeks.

My teacher is patient, and never yet
A lesson of hers did I once forget;
For wonderful love do her lips impart,
And all her lessons are learned by heart.

Oh, come! oh, come! or we shall be late,
And autumn will fasten the golden gate,
Till all the school-rooms, east or west,
The school of Nature I love the best.

The Missing Five Cents.

Holding out his hand for the change, John's employer said: "Well my boy, did you get what I sent you for?"

"Yes, sir," said John; "and here is the change, but I don't understand it. The lemons cost twenty-eight cents, and there ought to be twenty-two change, and there's only seventeen, according to my count."

"Perhaps I made a mistake in giving you the money."

"No, sir. I counted it over in the hall to be sure it was all right."

"Then perhaps the clerk made a mistake in giving you the change."

But John shook his head. "No, sir; I counted that, too. Father said we must always count our change before leaving a store."

"Then how in the world do you account for the missing five cents? How do you expect me to believe such a queer story as that!"

John's cheeks grew red, but his voice was firm. "I don't account for it, sir; I can't. All I know is that it is so."

"Well, it is worth a good deal in this world to be sure of that. How do you account for that five-cent piece that is hiding inside your coat-sleeve?"

John looked down quickly, and caught the gleaming bit with a cry of pleasure. "Here you are! Now it is all right. I couldn't imagine what had become of that five-cent piece. I was certain I had it when I started from the store to return."

"There are two or three things that I know now," Mr. Brown said with a satisfied air. "I know you have been taught to count your money in coming and going, and to tell the exact truth, whether it sounds well or not—two important things in an errand boy. I think I'll try you, young man, without looking further."

At this John's cheeks grew redder than ever. He looked down and up, and finally he said in a low voice: "I think I ought to tell you that I wanted the place so badly I almost made up my mind to say nothing about the change if you didn't ask me."

"Exactly," said Mr. Brown; "and if you had done it, you would have lost the situation, that's all. I need a boy about me who can be honest over so small a sum as five cents, whether he is asked questions or not."

Railroad Jack.

"Railroad Jack" is the most famous dog in all this section. He lives in and about the depot and railroad trains and is a great traveler. Nobody owns him, but it is safe to say that every railroad man and express agent and station hand is his friend, and he always finds cordial welcome and good care wherever he goes. The most common range of Jack's travels is from Montreal to Poughkeepsie, though he takes an occasional trip to the east on the Fitchburg and to the west on the Central.

A short time ago, after staying a day in Saratoga, he boarded a south-bound train and took a trip to Rhinebeck. While Mr. Randolph, the baggage-master at the station, was attending the evening train due from the north, the train baggage-master said to him:

"Railroad Jack came down from Albany and got off here. Look out for him."

As the train drew away from the station Jack jumped on the station baggage-car and took a seat among the trunks. Mr. Randolph said:

"Well, Jack, have you got any baggage, and where are you going?"

Jack wagged his stumpy tail and opened his intelligent jaws, as much as to say: "I'm all right." As they came to the crossing where the baggage is transferred to a wagon for Rondout and Kingston, Jack waited until the wagon was backed up against the car, and then leaped into the wagon. Saul Keldar, the driver, said:

"Well, Jack, if you are going to Kingston, jump up on the seat and out of the way."

The dog did as was requested, went across the river, and spent the night at the Ulster and Delaware round-house. The next morning Jack was at the ferry, went on board the boat, and as soon as she landed on the Rhinebeck side he went to the depot and remained there until the 7:07 A. M. train for Albany came along. When the train stopped Mr. Randolph said:

"Jack, that is the Albany train."

The dog gave a low whine, and in an instant was on the platform of the baggage-car, scratching at the door, which was opened by the baggage-master, and Jack was all right on his return trip to Albany.—New York Sun.

Chauncey Depew's Tussle.

In an address before the Railroad Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association of New York, the Hon. Chauncey M. Depew gave an incident from his early life which carries a weighty lesson. Said he:

"The best thing I remember connected with myself is, that when I graduated from Yale I thought I would lead a life of scholastic ease. I thought I would read and write a little, take it easy and have a good time. I had a hard-headed old father of sturdy Dutch ancestry. He had money enough to take care of me, and I knew it; and when he discovered that I knew it and intended to act accordingly, it was a cold day for me, and he said to me: 'You will never get a dollar from me except through my will. From this time forth you have got to make your own way.'

"Well, I found I had a hard lot of it—nobody had a harder one—and the old gentleman stood by and let me tussle and fight it out. I bless him to-night with all the heart and gratitude I have for that. If he had taken the other course, what would I have done? I would have been up in Peekskill to-night nursing a stove, cursing the men who had succeeded in the world, and wondering by what exceptional luck they had got on; but having my way to dig alone, I got beyond everything my father ever dreamed of; but it was done by fourteen hours', or sixteen hours', or eighteen hours' work a day, if necessary. It was done by temperance, by economy.

"When you make a dollar, spend seventy-five cents, and put the other twenty-five cents by. No man can stand still. When God created us he did a fortunate thing for us; he made us so that we must either go backward or forward. A man knows more to-day than yesterday, or he knows less. A man who bottoms a chair, gets up and goes to his meals, and then goes back again and bottoms a chair, and then to his meals again, in the course of five years will be the biggest dunce in the community, and his opinion will not be worth knowing. He will lose his power for work, and will not be worth three cents an hour."—Selected.

Household.

The Christian Home.

A Christian home is the most powerful influence on earth. No wonder the devil takes such pains to mar it. For if that be injured, then, like cracks in the ice, huge fissures and breakages are seen in every direction. How demons must rejoice as they see the record of spoiled homes in our newspapers! They feel that drunkenness, impurity, ill-temper, pleasure, and want of godliness are preparing whole families for hell. How God must rejoice at the conversion of such a man as the Philippian gaoler! It is salvation brought to the man and also to his house. His children know the change; his servants breathe a new atmosphere. There is one more fortress built up against sin. Will you help to build a like defense? Fathers and mothers, be truly godly. Children, be obedient to Christ. Servants, serve as to God. Masters and mistresses, seek the special good of those under your roof. Let the home be both yours and Christ's—yours to serve and Christ's to rule. Serve as though all depends on you. Call to your aid frugality, simplicity of living, freedom from debt, the beauty of cleanliness and of art, the polish of industry, the helpfulness of friendship, the stimulus of the best books, the brightness of art and music. But pray as though all depended on you. Let the cross be your refuge from sin. Plead daily at the mercy seat for pardon. Make the Most High thy habitation. Let children, treasures, income, hopes, expectations, all belong to God because you belong to God. "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it. Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain. It is vain for you that ye rise up early, and so late take your rest, and eat the bread of toil; for so he giveth unto his beloved sleep."—Rev. Samuel Pearson.

A MAN'S IDEA OF HOME COMFORT.—A man wants some place in the home that he can call his very own, some portion of the house where his will is law, where no conflict of authority can rise. This is not altogether for the purpose of securing solitude, for his family is usually most welcome there, but the need for it springs from the desire for that sense of proprietorship which is his habit abroad, and from the wish to be able to do precisely as he pleases in at least a corner of his house. Here should be the comforts that the man devises for himself. Here he should be able to feel absolutely at his ease, troubled by no fear of "mussing things," no need to thread his way anxiously through a maze of furniture and various decorative obstructions, trembling lest something should be overturned and broken; and here should be the seat of that admired disorder to which he has only one clue. His hooks and papers should be left as he leaves them, though to the orderly female they may seem to lie in hopeless confusion. His desk may be littered with piles of books, magazines, letters, manuscripts, everything that can find a place; but if a woman wishes to secure to a man one of his most cherished home comforts, she will let that desk alone.—Percy Vere, in Ladies' Home Journal.

HOW TO MAKE LIFE HAPPY.—Take time; it is no use to foam or fret, or to do as the angry housekeeper who has got hold of the wrong key, and pushes, shakes and rattles it about the lock until both are broken and the door is still unopened. The chief secret of comfort lies in not suffering trifles to vex us, and in cultivating our undergrowth of small pleasures. Try to regard present vexations as you will regard them a month hence. Since we can not get what we like, let us like what we can get. It is not riches, it is not poverty; it is human nature that is the trouble. The world is like a looking-glass. Laugh at it and it laughs back; frown at it and it frowns back. Angry thoughts canker the mind and dispose it to the worst temper in the world—that of fixed malice and revenge. It is while in this temper that most men become criminals. Show your sense by saying much in a few words. Try to speak some kind word or do some kind deed each day of your life. You will be amply repaid. Set your work to song.—Post.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach.

Scientific.

Influence of Electricity in Modern Life.

BY FRANZ BENDT.

The life of to-day has derived its most essential characteristic—rapidity—from the wonderful natural force, electricity. We are living under the sign of electricity; and yet the science that has brought it about is very young. The coming year will witness its twenty-fifth birthday only; for there could be no talk of a technical utilization of electric currents prior to the invention of the dynamo machine. And next year will give us, as has been finally decided, an international electrical exhibition in Frankfort-on-the-Main.

Although Germany was the original home of the telegraph, the methods of quick telegraphy that have done more than anything else to create this age of electricity have been developed in England and America. In the past year the Wheatstone apparatus, which is capable of transmitting from 460 to 600 words a minute, was first introduced into our country. Similar mechanisms are in use in France, among them the Baudot multiple printing instrument, with which from 216 to 252 despatches of 20 words can be forwarded on a single wire; whereas with the Morse instrument the limit was 25, and with the Hughes instrument 60 messages. These improvements in the apparatus have been accompanied by a remarkable economy in the wires since Siemens, Frischen, and Edison have developed the method of multiple telegraphy. It is now possible to send several messages simultaneously on the same wire, and even in opposite directions. In a short time the entire globe will be encircled with the telegraph, as the San Francisco Board of Trade have resolved in favor of laying a Pacific cable by way of Honolulu and Tutuila.

Another memorable advance is the bringing of widely distant places into direct oral communication, as by the Rome and London Line that has been in operation since December 1, 1889.

During the year 1888-89 the number of cities provided with the telephone increased from 174 to 200, and the number of telephone stations rose to 38,769, an increase of 7,444.

For generating currents for electric lighting throughout the world about 1,000,000 horse-powers are employed, capable of a total illumination of 200,000,000 standard candles. The floating capital employed amounts to $400,000,000. In the United States alone $625,000,000 are invested in the electrical industries. In electrical conduits Germany leads all nations, even the practical Americans, as no less an authority than Edison has acknowledged. Central generating establishments exist in the great cities, not merely for the purpose of supplying illumination, but for conducting electrical currents for other purposes into the houses of consumers; and here a prospect is opened for electricity to play an important part in the domestic and social economy of the future. With the growth in the number of consumers and improvements in insulation and dynamos, the supply of power is becoming constantly cheaper, and the time is not far off when the artisan will be enabled to drive his little machines with the electric current, relieving his muscles, and placing it in his power to develop a manual dexterity that in certain directions can produce results beyond the attainment of manufacturing processes. Thus it is seen that there is virtue in electricity to aid in the solution of some of the social question that are stirring the world.—Unsere Zeit.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

The only reliable vegetable substitute for calomel, which acts on the liver, blood, kidneys and stomach, and best anti-bilious purgative is Maguire's Cundurango. Endorsed by Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia; Rev. McNally, of St. Louis, and a host of prominent people.

"It Disagrees with Me."
A common remark. If you take Tutt's Pills you can eat anything you like, and feel no bad effects. They act specifically on the liver, stomach and bowels, causing a free flow of gastric juice, which is essential to good digestion and regular bowels.

Don't Fear Now.
Rev. R. Burts, Manata, Fla., says: "Tutt's Pills are held in high repute as a Liver Regulator. I hardly know how we could get along without them. Chills and fever have lost their dread. Our people take one or two doses of the Pills, and follow it with fifteen grains of quinine, divided in three doses during the day. The chill never returns."

TURNER—Miss C. D. TURNER was born in Baltimore, Md., November 21, 1808; died in Natchitoches, La., May 8, 1890.

When quite a girl her parents moved to Charleston, S. C., where she grew up into womanhood. Being of a bright, investigative turn of mind, she soon learned to think seriously and profitably of those deep, grave truths that come to us from divine revelation. Then, too, she was at an early age taught by religious parents to lisp the name of God in prayer. So at the age of seventeen, after having been genuinely and brightly converted to God, she at once connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; and until she sweetly fell asleep in Christ, was a living exemplification of this wonderful Pauline truism: "Therefore, if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature."

Her home for the past seventeen years has been with Mr. Willis Holmes, who resides in Natchitoches, La. She had not been in that town long before she had thoroughly identified herself with Methodism; and today has the honor of organizing the first Sabbath-school in the city of old Natchitoches. For many years past she has been actively engaged in all kinds of church work; and, until too enfeebled by old age, was always seen in the Sabbath-school. Attending church was one of the great pleasures of her life. With David she could always say, "I was glad when they said unto me, let us go into the house of the Lord."

Hers was a long and useful life; a faithful daughter, an affectionate sister, a Christian woman. She beautifully grew up into Christ, her divine Head; "old age being the childhood of immortality." She lived well; she died well.

A. D. MCVOY, JR.

BURNS—Forasmuch, As it hath pleased Almighty God, in his wise providence, to remove from our midst Bro. CHARLES BURNS by sudden death; And, whereas, Bro. Burns was an official member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, holding his membership at Pleasant Hill Church, Westville circuit, Brandon district, Mississippi Conference, we, the committee of the Quarterly Conference in said pastoral charge, feeling a deep sense of the great worth of our departed brother, and the loss which the church and community have sustained by his untimely death, desire to offer before the second Quarterly Conference, of which he was a member, the following resolutions:

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Burns we feel that his wife has lost a devoted husband, his children a kind father, the church an active and faithful member, and the community a noble, generous-hearted neighbor and citizen.

Resolved, That while we deeply deplore his untimely death, we meekly bow in submission to the will of our heavenly Father in this dispensation of his providence; realizing that he doeth nothing wrong, and that he causes all things to work together for good to those who love him.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the family and relatives in their sad bereavement. May the Lord comfort their hearts and help them to say, "Thy will be done!"

T. J. MILLER, P. C.,
For Committee.

NEWSOME—Little SALLIE MAUD NEWSOME, infant daughter of J. C. and Addie Newsome, was born July 22, 1889, and died June 24, 1890.

Little Sallie Maud was the beloved object on which the parents had centered many bright hopes. Their strong devotion to her seemed almost to evince that she was the star of their existence. She was the joy of their hearts, and the flower of their home; but God, in his wisdom, saw fit to transplant this precious flower in heaven. Little Maud has gone to dwell serenely with Christ in ineffable glory. The transition has been one of sore affliction to the dear parents.

May a corresponding degree of divine comfort be given to the hearts which have been stricken by this dispensation of God's providence!

J. T. LEGGETT.

SWAFFORD—Mrs. M. S. SWAFFORD, wife of Thos. F. Swafford, died at her home in Grant parish, La., June 13, 1890, after six months' illness, three of which she suffered intensely night and day; but she endured it all with Christian patience and fortitude. She was fifty-nine years old, and the mother of thirteen children, seven of whom preceded her into eternity. She joined the church about twenty-five years ago, at which time she was brightly converted, and lived a consistent Christian life till the date of her death. She leaves many relatives and friends to mourn her loss.

R. M. WALKER, P. C.

DENSON—Mrs. GEORGIA V. DENSON, mother of our Bro. J. E. Denson, of the Louisiana Conference, died at the home of her son-in-law, D. C. Robertson, in Evergreen, Avoyelles parish, La. Sister Denson was the second daughter of Thomas Saunders, of Clark county, Ala.; was born September 12, 1819; was married to J. W. Denson, of same county and State, February 15, 1844. Bro. Denson moved with his wife to Woodville, Miss., in 1850, and during that year she was happily converted, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and in the church of her choice lived a consistent member and died a triumphant death.

The writer has known Bro. and Sister Denson since they came to Louisiana in 1858. He was an official member in the same church until the day of his death, July 11, 1884. Sister Denson was, indeed, a noble Christian character; true to herself, true to her God.

They rest together in the Evergreen Cemetery. Happy together in life, in death undivided. Their house was the preacher's home. This preacher has spent many happy hours around their fireside. Sister Denson was the mother of ten children. Five of these still remain to mourn her loss. She lived with her children after the death of her husband. Her godly example, her prayers, her tears, her admonitions—long may they be remembered and cherished! May God bless the five remaining children, and help them so to live that the entire family will form an unbroken circle in the kingdom of Heaven!

Her former pastor,

FRED WHITE.

NICHOLS—My heart is very, very sad as I attempt to pen these lines to inform the ADVOCATE'S friends and readers of the death of our esteemed friend and sister, Mrs. MOLLIE NICHOLS. After an illness extending through several months, during which she suffered more than words can express, on May 31, while surrounded by the dear loved ones who so tenderly ministered to her during the sad months of intense suffering, together with others, many of whom were her life-long friends, God's loving angels came from heaven and calmly, gently bore her beautiful spirit to a place and state of perfect rest, there to abide till the judgment of the great day.

It was the writer's happy privilege to be with her during her last days, and, while talking with her, she said that while she could wish to live, being young, she was ready and perfectly resigned to go, and that it would be to her a blessed rest—that she was so tired.

Oh! how much we will miss her in her home, in the social circle, in the church that she loved, and for which she labored. May our God above bless and comfort, as he only can, the dear ones who loved her so fondly, and enable them to follow Christ as she did! And may God overrule this affliction for the good of the entire community and extensive circle of friends, who mourn the death of this devoted Christian lady! May it prove the golden cord that shall draw them nearer to the Savior and heaven!

J. E. RIDDLE.

CARLISLE—GEORGE CALVIN CARLISLE was born July 12, 1845, in Choctaw county, Ala. At the age of twenty-one he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was converted at same time in his house. He married a Christian woman in Alabama, and afterwards moved to Clarke county, Miss. His wife died in the triumphs of a Christian's faith, April 9, 1886. She requested him to meet her in heaven. The death of his wife made deep religious impressions on his mind. He was a faithful worker in the neighborhood prayer meeting. He conducted a prayer meeting held at his house two weeks before he was hurled, June 28, 1890.

Bro. Carlisle's summons was very unexpected. He was apparently as well as ever on June 26, but was taken violently ill on June 27, and ere the setting of the sun his eyes were closed in death. He leaves a son, a sister and brother, with many friends, to mourn his departure. We condole with the friends of our departed brother, and hope we shall all meet in heaven.

A. C. FLOWERS.

CLARK—ARTHUR CLARK was born near Grove Hill, Clark county, Ala., July 23, 1847; died, of consumption, near Shell Beach, La., May 14, 1890, fully sensible of his condition, repeating in his last moments, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

He was a sufferer for many months without murmuring, exhibiting a high degree of Christian patience and fortitude. He was a good man in every relation he sustained; as friend, father and husband. He leaves a devoted wife and six children to mourn his loss and to follow his Christian example. May the Lord comfort them and finally bring them all to meet on the shores of eternal bliss!

M. M. H.

Heart-work is hard work indeed. To shuffle over religious duties with a loose and heedless spirit, will cost no great pains; but to set thyself before the Lord, and tie up thy loose and vain thoughts to a constant and serious attendance upon him—this will cost thee something.—Flavel.

GRANT'S FURNITURE STORE

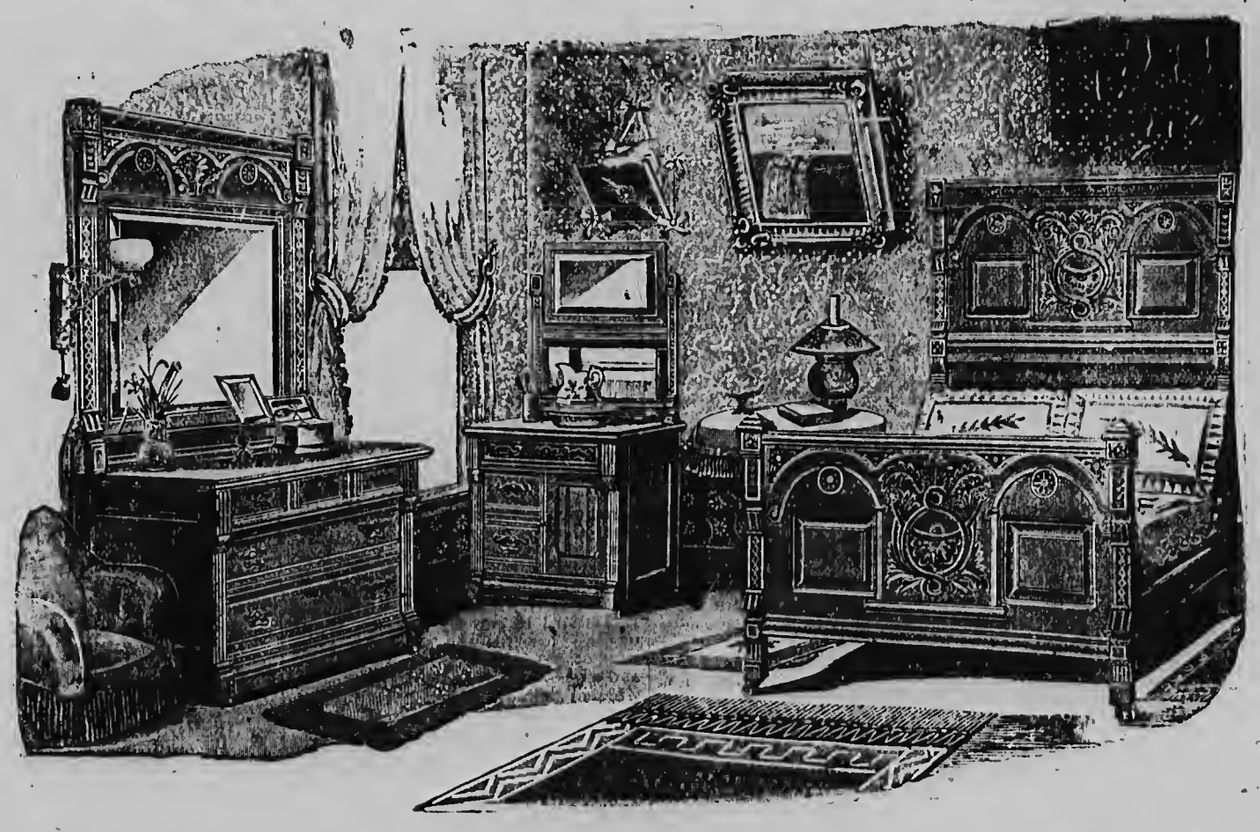
NEW STORE, AT 114 Camp St. NEW ORLEANS. NEXT DOOR TO ADVOCATE OFFICE.

BEAUTIFUL PARLOR GOODS.

I have one entire floor devoted to the display of these goods alone, and have over sixty different varieties to select from. Complete Suits anywhere from $35 to $650, and odd pieces—such as Sofas, Divans, Easy Chairs, Patent Rockers, Window and Reception Chairs—at as low prices in proportion as the Complete Suits. I have these goods in Cherry, Mahogany and Walnut, and can give you your choice of any of the following coverings: Crushed, Embossed, Plain and Silk Plushes, Hair Cloth, Mohair, Raw and Spun Silks, Satins, English Tapestries, French Valours, Petit Point, Brocatelle or Damasks. I make a specialty of these goods, have many of the patterns made specially for my own trade, and can offer a greater variety at lower prices than any other house in the South.

NEW STOCK

In all departments, and every grade of goods, from the cheapest to the most expensive, in endless variety. I have all the latest and most fashionable designs, and, as I have only purchased from factories whose goods I have been selling for the past six years, can and do guarantee every piece of Furniture that leaves my establishment.



LOW PRICES

are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.

A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and whether you wish to pay $40 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs.

I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.

I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

Monteagle Assembly and Summer Schools.

EIGHTH ANNUAL SESSION, JULY 1 to AUGUST 25, 1890.

Assembly Park open to Summer Residents from June 1.

MONTEAGLE, TENN., widely known as the "Southern Chautauqua," is on a mountain plateau or spur of the lower Cumberlands, reached by mountain railway, one hour from Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis R. R. at Cowan, Tenn.

Rising 2,000 feet above the sea level, dry, pure air, no malaria, no mosquitos, magnificent scenery and abundance of pure spring water, it is the great natural sanitarium of the Southwest.

With 100 acres of picturesque, wooded heights enclosed; with improved water-works, sewerage, daily mails, telegraph, public buildings, and near 100 cottages; with the annual Assembly Platform and Summer Schools, affording a continual feast, it is a quiet "lodge in the wilderness," having all the world within call.

Parties desiring cottages for the summer should make early application.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Mr. Bliss, from the Committee on Labor, on July 10, reported, with some minor amendments, the bill constituting eight hours a day's work for all laborers employed by the government.

A terrible race riot, in which the killed and wounded amounted to eighteen, occurred in Fayette county, Ga. A row occurred between a white man and a negro. Others joined in the difficulty, and a general war ensued. About 100 shots were exchanged. More trouble is expected.

The Legislature of Louisiana adjourned on July 10.

At the third day's session of the National Educational Association, on July 10, an exhaustive address on public schools was made by Archbishop Ireland, who said, among other things: "The State school is non-religious. It ignores religion. There is and there can be no positive religious teaching where the principle of non-secularism rules. It follows then that the child will grow up in the belief that religion is of minor importance, and religious indifference will be his creed. The great mass of children receive no fireside lessons and attend no Sunday-school, and the great mass of children of America are growing up without religion."

According to advance reports received from many of the larger postoffices of the country, showing their gross receipts for the quarter ended June 30, 1890, New Orleans has gained more than any other city, the per cent. of increase for this city being 21.1.

Mr. Rathbone, the chief of the postoffice inspectors, has been interviewed at length upon anti-lottery measures now pending before committees of Congress. The legislation which he has recommended to the Postmaster General excludes from the mails newspapers containing lottery advertisements, and making the offense of using the mails for lottery purposes a continuous one from point of mailing to destination, so as to allow prosecutions at intermediate points.

The Silver bill passed the National House of Representatives, on July 12, and it will now go to the President for his signature. Mr. Conger, of Iowa, speaking favorably of the bill, said: "An additional circulation had been demanded. The bill will give the country at the present price of silver an increase of $57,780,000 a year. If silver went up to a parity with gold, it would give an increase of $70,000,000. The last section of the bill unlocked $70,000,000 now tied up for the redemption of bank notes.

Information has been received at the Navy Department that trouble is imminent between San Salvador and Guatemala, arising out of the recent change in the government of the former country. It being thought advisable to have some American war vessel near at hand, orders were issued for the United States steamship Ranger and the Thetis, now at San Francisco, to proceed at once to the west coast of Central America.

A disastrous fire occurred in Philadelphia on July 13. Mill and factory property valued at $600,000 was burned.

The excursion steamer Sea King was caught in a cyclone on Lake Pepin, near Lake City, Minn., on July 13, and capsized; its cargo of 150 people being precipitated into the lake. About one hundred lives were lost.

FOREIGN.

A fire in the town of Fort de France, in the French island of Martinique, nearly destroyed the place. Many persons were killed and wounded by dynamite, which was used to check the progress of the flames. The loss is estimated at over $4,000,000.

The Italian Parliament was closed on July 11. Before the adjournment Premier Crispi, in a speech, said it was necessary to maintain European peace. He favored international arbitration.

Foreign bankers on July 11 ordered $1,000,000 gold for shipment to Europe, making so far $2,000,000 in gold bars, to go to Liverpool by steamer on July 12. Some bankers state that the gold is intended for the Bank of England, whose reserve has decreased to a low figure, and others state that it will go ultimately to Buenos Ayres.

The marriage of Henry M. Stanley and Miss Dorothy Tennant took place in Westminster Abbey on July 12. The ceremony was performed by the Very-Rev. George Granville Brady, D. D., dean of Westminster; the Very-Rev. Frederick William Farrar, D. D., F. R. S., archbishop of Westminster, and the Rt.-Rev. William Boyd Carpenter, D. D., lord bishop of Ripon. While moving towards the altar the bride stopped, broke the line of the procession and walked slowly to the table under which lies the dust of Livingstone and placed thereon a wreath of white flowers, in the center of which was a scarlet letter "L."

Rumors are current that some of the members of the French Chamber of Deputies and, perhaps, some of the ministers also, desire to retaliate against the United States in case of the passage of the McKinley tariff bill by changing the French tariff as to favor Russian petroleum. It is doubtful whether the government will sanction such an effort.

During his remarks in the House of Commons, on July 12, Mr. Parnell proposed a measure providing for the appointment of a Board of Arbitration for the settlement of disputes between landlords and tenants in Ireland.

In an interview Captain Casatti, the African explorer, said that himself and Emin Pasha were heartily glad to be liberated from the equatorial province by Stanley. Evil tongues, he said, had magnified the misunderstanding between Mr. Stanley and Emin Pasha.

The official feeling against Prince Bismarck has been heightened since the report of an interview with him appeared in the Frankfort Journal. Even his friends admit that he has been indiscreet in his revelation of knowledge obtained by him while in office.

BIRDS-EYE VIEW OF THE SEA SHORE CAMP GROUNDS, NEAR BILOXI, MISS.

CAMP MEETING.

The Nineteenth Annual Camp Meeting on the SEASHORE CAMP GROUND will open JULY 11TH, next, and continue for ten days.

Eminent preachers will assist in conducting the religious services, as heretofore.

Ample accommodations will be provided for all visitors.

Two commodious bath-houses render the finest salt-water bathing on the coast accessible to all.

The Grounds are 78 miles from New Orleans, immediately fronting the beach, and on the line of the L. and N. railroad. All trains stop at the station during the meeting, landing visitors within 100 yards of the enclosure.

Reduced fares will be in force over all connecting roads for the meeting.

The gate fee for entrance into the Grounds is 50 cents for the season, or 25 cents for the day. The revenue thus obtained is used for improving the Grounds.

Preachers will be furnished sleeping accommodation free of charge, and tickets for meals at the restaurant at half rates, as heretofore.

Railroad tickets—Louisville and Nashville—on sale from July 6 to 22; good until 31st. Excursion tickets also on sale to Camp Ground; good to return on to September 30. All trains will stop at Grounds during Camp Meeting, July 11 to 22, inclusive.

Neither Pessimism Nor Optimism—The Alternative.

BY REV. C. H. OWEN.

In any view of the present era of the world's history extremes are dangerous, especially in the present status of Christianity. The church has arrived at that stage of her progress in the evangelization of the world when a one-sided view is deleterious to her efforts toward the ultimate conquest of the nations for Christ. There is a sense of security in the results of great victories, which frequently diverts necessary thought and carefulness from the tasks yet ahead, from fields unexplored, from enemies unsubdued. There is on the other hand a feeling of unrest; dissatisfaction takes possession of men, and frequently it amounts to a feeling of despair, as the result of sometimes local adversity, or sometimes fatigue and restiveness under slow progress. Men, surrounded day by day by superior numbers of the enemy, without recruits or encouragements from headquarters, holding the trenches against fearful odds, occasionally losing a comrade, will often think that the cause is lost, become discouraged, and stack their arms and raise the truce, thinking that the whole grand army has become impotent and has surrendered. Men who are so situated that they can keep abreast of the affairs of State and Church, sometimes see things from different sides. Owing to personal environments they get different impressions of events and the general course of things. Sincere students of human affairs will render different verdicts. These various impressions become, on the one hand, oftentimes a morbid sentiment of doubt, fear, distrust; and, without prompt treatment, this sentiment will become the womb of many a heartache, melancholia, and gloom. The good news and cheering bulletins become too good to believe. There is a cloud always, either just rising or lowering over the firmament. The subject of such pessimism becomes contracted, loses the warm catholicity of spirit, dislikes the society of men, and, like Jonah, settles down under his gourd-vine and prays to be taken out of this evil world. On the other hand the sentiment is buoyant, enthusiastic, exultant. Difference in mental constitution throws the rose-ate hue on everything. The person becomes oblivious to every sphere of life but the one in which he moves. He is on the mountain, and catches the view of all that is grand, beautiful, and sublime. He cultivates the taste for the ornate; does not get down on the plane of the grand landscape and examine the details that are intimately connected with the magnificent whole. The rugged ledges and depressions, the dens and lurking-places of poison and destruction are unknown to him. The untutored and less gifted and privileged rustic and yeoman, whose sphere makes them acquainted with the hard realities of life, see a thousand dangers that go unobserved by the enchanted artist. And none but those who mingle with the humble spheres of life can realize these things. That artist will draw a charming and faultless landscape, and the student of his art can never have an adequate knowledge of the things as they are.

Here is the danger of optimism. Nothing but the hopeful, the cheerful, the grand and glorious are presented. This is the perspective through which the student looks at life. This occasions many a bark to run against the breakers. Many, on entering the public sphere, are led to think everything is inspiring on the highway of life. They meet with disappointment at the threshold. The extreme optimist is as much to be feared as is the pessimist. He sees nothing particularly wrong in the church. Glittering triumph is always at hand. He spends his spare hours counting the increase in numbers. The great promontories of Canaan are all that he can see. He does not stop to attend the funeral of the class meeting. He does not count the number who are habitual tipplers, nor to count the members who are serving the god of pleasure and fashion. He counts all additions, but does not count the proportionate decrease in family altars. No matter where, nor how, nor who, the protracted services were a grand success. He can see half a dozen join the church, while hundreds and thousands, in the jaws of vice and sin, are untouched, and sing, "Victory, victory; soon we'll gain the victory." There is not near so much in figures as there is in substance. Ezekiel saw a whole valley of dry bones; in number, a great army. It was the house of Israel. There are many crying out, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace."

The pessimist sees only disaster and destruction wherever he turns. He sees the ministry seeking place, honor, and fortune. The church has become corrupt from crown to sole, his neighbors are hypocrites, and the world going to pieces. He prates of hard times, and sees harder times coming. To be in his company long at a time you almost come to believe in the fates. He sighs and groans over the degeneracy of the times. From such please deliver us; and, alike from the Utopian censor and castle-builder, give us rest. One savors of distrust in Christ and his gospel. Depression follows in the wake of his influence. The other sports in the fictitious and delusive. It genders pride, inertia, too much content and exultation. There are persons who look at the present situation with complacency, and can see only glory, prosperity, and triumph sailing in the folds of the unfurled stars and stripes. The tremendous power exerted upon society and government by the rum traffic and political machinations, the corruption of foreign immigration, and the heterogeneous mass composing the civil fabric, the greed for money and spirit of gambling, the light and frivolous character of modern society, and the flood of vicious and trashy literature pouring over the world, do not come into consideration but very little in striking off the balance-sheet between the good and the evil. There are persons, on the other hand, with whom the consecration, learning, in Church and State, the material and spiritual progress and development of the world rarely ever awake thanksgiving or inspire hope. Blasphemous infidelity weighs tons; but the literature of the Book of God, the vast libraries of Christian culture, together with the combined faith and works of millions, weigh but ounces.

There have been adverse criticisms on the great little book of Dr. Josiah Strong, "Our Country," on the charge of pessimism. This book, to my mind, occupies the true position in regard to the present status of our great nation. Because he goes to the record and brings out the facts and shows the true inwardness of things, he has been condemned as a pessimist. In reading this book, even before the criticisms came out, the idea of pessimism never entered my mind. His ground is the alternative to the radical and extreme views. He is optimist enough to see the triumphs and potency of the gospel of Christ, to inspire hope and confidence in the church, to join the militant host, and march with the serried columns of the army of the conquering Christ. He is pessimist enough to see the perils and watch the maneuvers of the devil, to warn Christendom against idleness and the festering places of sin and vice. He looks at the reality of the situation. He would not lend a discouraging word to the faltering, but would spur them up to vigilance and activity. Jesuitism, rum, gambling, covetousness, and a herd of vices must have the attention of the closest vigilance, and demands prompt and heroic treatment. Some of the prophets of Israel were isolated and imprisoned for prophesying adversely, and warning the people against sin. They wanted smooth words, pleasing messages. So with the ultra optimist. But the messenger must be true to the facts and the welfare of men.

The precept and example of Christ and his apostles is the direct reverse of the modern optimist. Christ said, "Ye shall find trouble and sorrow." Christianity is cross-bearing. Through humility, humiliation, suffering and sorrow, we shall enter the kingdom. "These are they which came out of great tribulation." The Christian life is one of constant warfare, but with victory always at the close. "Hold fast that which thou hast, that no man take thy crown." "Endure hardness as a good soldier." Optimism reverses the picture and makes it a path of unalloyed pleasure, without let or hindrance. Truly there is pleasure in Christian living, but not the ease and pleasure of this world that comes to naught. It is the pleasure of sacrifice for Christ's sake, the consciousness of divine approbation, of duty done. We are exhorted to "count it all joy when we fall into divers temptations." Paul rises into the full dignity of his grand personality when he announces to the elders of Ephesus that "none of these things move me; neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy." It is right that we should count the heroic deeds of our fathers and the series of splendid victories that have hovered over the banner of the Lord's host. Centennials of progress should be celebrated with the greatest possible demonstrations. But we should not ground our arms and forget the need of deeper consecration for future conflicts—

> "Forget the steps already trod,
> And onward urge thy way."

Surely Christ is able—yea, he is willing to give victory and glory to his church. He has signed "the decree that may not be changed," that the evil shall be overthrown, that "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." Let the hopeless and faint-hearted look forward and take courage. "For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth." Three-fourths of the roll are yet to be Christianized, and mighty combines of evil to be overthrown; but the Son of God shall put all enemies under his feet.

Prohibition.

BY J. R. WALKER, D. D.

The popular arguments urged by anti-prohibitionists may be summed up in three points: First, that prohibition does not prohibit (a singular objection for one who wishes to sell intoxicants; second, that it is an infringement on "personal liberty;" and, thirdly, that it is an oppression to those engaged in the liquor traffic.

Suppose, for a brief discussion, we admit the validity of these objections, and see how anti prohibitionists will relish their application to another question.

We have a prohibitory ordinance against vessels from infected ports, and having infectious diseases, such as yellow fever, small-pox, and the like. The anti-prohibitionists are generally in favor, as they say, of "high license." Shall we then not have high license as something better than a prohibitory quarantine? Why so? Because quarantine does not quarantine; it does not always and entirely exclude persons from infected ports and infected ships. People land at Savannah, Jacksonville or Corpus Christi, or Galveston, and then sometimes come promptly here by rail. So the quarantine falls in some examples to be a complete exclusion of persons from infected ports and ships. Shall we abolish the prohibitory quarantine because it does not exclude, and shall we have in its place a "high license" law, so high as greatly to reduce the number of incoming infected ships and persons? With a license as high as $5,000 per infected ship, and $500 per infected person, we should exclude most ships and most people, especially small ships and poor men. But somebody may urge that a few infected ships may be productive of great evil. That may be; but statistics show that the licensed saloons have caused more mortality than yellow fever, not to speak of the financial losses, domestic sorrows, and frightful crimes.

But quarantines not only sometimes fail to prevent the introduction of infections, but they interfere most arbitrarily with "personal liberty." A citizen of some Gulf State of the Union has been absent for long months or a year; he is naturally most anxious to see his family, or he has business of great importance that must materially suffer for want of his attention. He protests against detention as a most gross infringement of his "personal liberty:" but he is told immense interests are involved, and that he can not be permitted to imperil so many lives. He, perhaps, would be willing to pay a license of $500 or a $1,000, but is answered that the interests involved are beyond all money value, and is a privilege not to be bought.

But quarantine prohibiting infected vessels also seriously interferes with certain forms of business. Some commodities spoil before they can be got to market; the ships lies idle at a daily heavy expense and loss; passengers suffer heavy losses. Instead, then, of an imperfect, expensive and arbitrary prohibitory quarantine, shall we not do better to have a "high license" for infected ships and passengers, and thus avoid infringement of "personal liberty," and serious interference with some forms of business? This is precisely the argument of anti-prohibitionists. Say they, "Let us 'regulate the business,' and let the State draw from it a handsome revenue." The case we have supposed is quite analogous, except that the saloon with its poisonous intoxicants annually produces far more mortality than any form of infectious disease, besides the pauperism, criminality and sorrow that always attend them.

Now, if the arguments that the quarantine does not always accomplish all that it seeks to do; that it interferes, with personal liberty, and is damaging to the interests of certain classes, do not authorize the abolition of the prohibitory quarantine, and the employment of high license in its stead; so neither do they authorize the repeal of the prohibition of the sale of intoxicants as a beverage.

I suppose if a member of the Legislature were to propose to permit a ship having yellow fever on board to come up to our wharf, because she might be able to pay a license fee of $5,000 for the privilege he would seal his political doom forever.

A Question of Law, and Its Philosophy.

BY J. V. ENOCHS.

I stayed all night last night with a good friend—a Baptist minister.

"What do you do with your baptized children—list them among your members?"

"No. The practice is to mark them like our pigs, and turn them out."

"But the theory?"

"Is to hold them under the watch-care of the church."

"What relation, then, do they bear to the church?"

"They are heirs. Just the relation that the circumcised Jew held to the commonwealth."

"But, admitting your theory, what advantage has the circumcised child over the alien in the gospel dispensation?"

"Outside of the benefits of the church's watchcare he has inalienable rights that no other has. I illustrate, viz: In 1864 (my memory for dates) J. C. Enochs, a baptized boy, made application to be received into full connection at the hands of his uncle, Rev. Richard Hennington, P. C., of Georgetown, Ct. The pastor told him that he must serve his six months' probation. J. F. Enochs took issue, claiming that 'the probationary rule does not apply to our baptized children. They are heirs. As priest of my own household, I represent the watchcare of the church over its children;' and, upon the refusal of the pastor, he appealed to the Quarterly Conference, and the presiding elder (I forget who) sustained the ruling of the pastor in charge. J. F. E. then further appealed to the Annual Conference, and Bishop Paine, at the session of the Annual Conference, December, 1864, at Crystal Springs, which reversed the ruling, and directed the boy to be received."

"But your probationary rule is done away with?"

"Not a word of it. On the contrary, our phraseology is somewhat changed; but it is the obligation of our pastors to hold the application for membership till he is satisfied that the applicant is sufficiently impressed with the importance of his church vows."

"But does not this rule apply to the baptized infant?"

"It does not. Whenever the heir comes forward and voluntarily assumes his baptismal vows, he has a right to his inheritance."

[Am I right? How many of our people understand this?]

The good brother hastened off to his appointment, and his wife continued: "It seems to me that Methodist preachers are negligent in not taking more trouble to explain these things."

"Not so," I answer. "Our economy, our doctrines, and our institutions are so surely grounded in the philosophy of a true theodicy, that their simplest statement becomes their surest vindication. We are not on the defensive anywhere; we are not timid anywhere in the light of history; we are aggressive all along the line. Like Nehemiah, we have no time to sit on a log and discuss metaphysics with Sanballat or Tobiah. To be ever on the defensive is an evidence of conscious weakness. I have been a soldier, and have had to be constantly on the alert, sword in hand, bayonets fixed, for the protection of a weak point. I have torn away these weak defenses, and established new foundations, with scientifically constructed superstructure. Then I could undress and sleep. I have seen more than one sensitive, sore-headed, quarreling, blustering street-fighter brought face to face with real danger, where manly courage was requisite. Then I understood that their blustering was all from self-consciousness of a craven spirit. I have seen a poor fellow with a tender joint in the rush of a busy, rustling crowd. His chief business was to protect his tender joint. We are satisfied with our doctrines; they need no defense."

Missions in Our Sunday-Schools.

This paper has its origin from the belief in the writer's mind that the subject of missions is entitled to more attention than is accorded it on the part of our Sunday-schools. The reasons of its being of so much importance to our young people will form the body of our discussion. The lack of missionary enterprise among the churches is woful to contemplate; but when we turn to our Sunday-schools, and there behold what prospects we have for the future, the outlook is, indeed, appalling. This leads us to consider, in the first place, the need of action in this regard.

The experience of ages commends to us the superlative wisdom of our Savior's last command to the apostolic church. He said, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations," and this behest extended beyond them to all that in after-time should believe on his name. The history of the church shows that where this marching order is obeyed there is progress and prosperity; and where it is disregarded there is retrogression and disaster. Hence it is that to a sincere heart the cause of missions presents no difficulty; the true Christian needs no profound and wide-reaching arguments to set forth clearly to his mind the "philosophy of obeying his Lord's commands." This state of mind and heart, although so readily attainable by the application of the simple rules of common sense, is, to a great degree, lacking in the church, for the sole reason that we do not make the application. The spirit of a great many church members seems to be the same as that under which a certain senator labored when he opposed a bill chartering "The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions." His ground was, "it will export religion, whereas there is none to spare among ourselves." He forgot that the religion which is not "exported" dies of itself; that it is a thing of development; and when its growth stops, then is sounded its death-knell. "There is that which scattereth and yet increaseth," is a proverb applicable to the religion of the man that shares the joy of his own heart with his fellow-beings. The opposite is equally true: the man that shuts up in his own narrow self all the blessings of our Christian dispensation is sure to tend to poverty in the matter of piety. Although these facts are so patent, yet we are pained by the thought that there is in the church too much of the false reasoning of the senator. To counteract this delusive opinion, the church should set about to do its utmost.

Now, it is a fact, conceded by all, that the most potent influence that can be brought to bear upon human beings is education. We are so constituted, in the wisdom of God, as to be susceptible of education to a most remarkable degree. Indeed, we may be educated to do almost anything. But we must bear in mind that to obtain the best results, our training must begin when we are young, when the mind is fresh, and all our faculties most easily impressible. Hence, from this fact we see the need of missions in our Sunday-schools. If we would have our churches to be missionary churches, we must begin with the children and inculcate in them missionary ideas; and, by so doing, awaken in their hearts a missionary spirit. The destiny of the church for all future ages is to be determined largely by the training that is given the children of to-day. How solemn is the responsibility under which we are placed! How imperative is the obligation to train them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord! In no way can this be done better than by rightly impressing them in regard to missionary work. It is, moreover, a fact that the good accomplished will be twofold in its character. All good work has for its result not alone the glory of God and the good of them for whom it is undertaken, but also its influence reacts upon those who do it. In no department of church work is the truth of this proposition more clearly seen than in the rebounding good effect that the missionary movement has upon its promotion. Like mercy, "its quality is not strained. It blesseth him that gives and him that takes." And so we are led to believe that the good that is accomplished by sending our money to supply the gospel to those who have it not, is but half the story. The rest is told by the renewed life in our own hearts, and the result of that revivifying influence in our lives. So that if we could get our Sunday schools awake to the demand that is upon them, how changed would they become! How the service would be transformed from a mere perfunctory duty to a most blessed time of worship! Our pupils would feel that they have an immediate, personal interest in the work. They would be conscious of the great fact that they, too, are called to the exalted honor of being "co-workers with God" in the great work of soul-saving, and, feeling this, would, according to the law of spiritual economy, while seeking to help others, build themselves up in their Christian characters.

We have tried to show the need and design of the missionary movement in the Sunday-school. Let us now invest our thought to inquire how the design may be worked out, and the need supplied. Let us consider some method by which we may gain for ourselves good and, at the same time, help forward the kingdom of our blessed Master. Let me say, in the first place, that there is need of organization on our part. Our efforts must have some distinctive plan in order to insure success. Hence, perhaps, the best method would be to form in each Sunday-school a missionary society, composed of all the scholars and teachers. Upon these latter will rest the responsibility of forming and governing the society to some extent; but, at the same time, let it be distinctly understood that the object of the organization is to enlist the co-operation of the young in the work of the church. Let the initiation fee and monthly dues to this society be fixed according to the amount that is to be expected from children, remembering that it is not the amount, but the spirit in which it is given, that the Master looks at; that the great good of this scheme will be in the educating influence that it will have on the minds and hearts of the rising generation.

Another plan which I have seen tried with splendid results is just simply to set apart one Sabbath out of the month (say the first), and give it the distinctive name of "Missionary Sunday." On this day (which, by announcement, is made known to all) each scholar is expected to bring his or her offering to the respective classes, where it is all collected and sent up in an envelope appropriately marked. Either of these two plans, if prayerfully and systematically carried out, will result in material aid to the cause, and exercise untold benefit upon the spiritual growth of the Sunday-schools which adopt them. No limit can be placed to the work that may be done by simply applying our whole souls to do it. Surely the need is great, the method is simple, and the results most gracious. We should not prove recreant to the trust imposed on us. Let us educate the children to the true missionary idea, and we need have no fear of the result. The church throughout the world will feel a thrill of heavenly life, and, from the impetus received, will make grander strides than ever in the past. God's approving smile will rest upon her; she will go forth in the strength of God, conquering and to conquer; and soon "the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ."

SMILE WHENEVER YOU CAN.

When things don't go to suit you,
And the world seems upside down,
Don't waste your time in fretting,
But drive away that frown;
Since life is oft perplexing,
'Tis much the wisest plan
To bear all trials bravely
And smile whene'er you can.

Why should you dread the morrow,
And thus despoil to-day?
For when you borrow trouble
You always have to pay.
It is a good old maxim
Which should be often preached—
Don't cross the bridge before you
Until the bridge is reached.

You might be spared much sighing
If you would keep in mind
The thought that good and evil
Are always here combined.
There must be something wanting,
And though you roll in wealth,
You may miss from your casket
That precious jewel—health.

And though you're strong and sturdy,
Yoummay have an empty purse
(And earth has many trials
Which I consider worse);
But whether joy or sorrow
Fill up your mortal span,
'Twill make your pathway brighter
To smile whene'er you can.

The Long Ago.

BY REV. R. H. ADAIR.

The dear old friend, comforter and educator, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, was received this morning. We had not seen it for years. It was like a reunion of all the years and associations of a life; just as if the lights of all those weary years had been gathered up and shed in one glow of glory upon the brow of this bright July morning. The things that were and are shall live again, and the receding years, like Abel's faith, stand statuesque against the horizon of life. Looking forward down life's perspective, we see its vanishing lines lost among the lights that shine down from Heaven's everlasting home. One writer has said, "There's nothing in a name," and a nobler tongue answered, "There is that in a name that challenges the admiration and homage of men and angels, for at the name of Jesus," etc.

Let's see a few names that entered our dear home this morning: C. K. Marshall—doing what? Just what he was, when, thirty-six years ago, our sainted mother, sitting on the front seat in a vast assembly, said to us: "Listen; that's Dr. Marshall." He was delivering a glorious oration on "Home Education," at the laying of the corner-stone of the Southern Female College. Go on, grand old man eloquent, we would swap Gabriel's trumpet, if we had it, for your thought and theme, and a chance to talk to school-girls of the graces of their young lives, of the higher grace and graces of God and "the glory that shall follow." And, now, here comes H. M. Booth, the saintly pastor of our father and mother when we were their little barefoot boy, one of whose proudest achievements was to carry "Uncle Booth's" saddle-bags to the house; for, God bless those old-time preachers! they had saddle-bags and looked like preachers. They had no hog-skin grip, dude hats and three-dollar watches, with a drummer's swing and slang. No sir, they were preachers right, and people wept while they preached, and made the church vocal with amens and volumes of praise.

There is W. B. Lewis, too—"the young man everybody went to hear" at our church and followed from place to place. There is P. A Johnston, who taught this lad in the ways of hic, hæc, hoc, and illustrated all the variations of the Greek verb tupto in many striking ways to the "very mooch disgoost" (as the Frenchman said) of the aforesaid lad, who swore in his wrath that when he got to be a man he'd lick that teacher or die. However, since he grew to manhood, and found that he still had to turn his eyes up to the ceiling where the ex-teacher's countenance seemed to constantly remain, and noticing that the end of the ex-teacher's arms carried double-geared protuberances something less in diameter than a water-bucket, he concluded to wait until he—that is, the boy—should take a second growth. As that has not taken place yet, we have concluded to forgive the teacher. But revenge is sweet; so we will use that Greek verb once in a while over some Baptist preacher's cranium, and think of our old teacher as he attacks "idolatry" (and other dolls) with all his ancient force.

Then there is the name of Alexander, B. F. (we wonder what that stands for), whose name is ever dear. In a strong rosewood case, containing one of Dr. Abby's Parchment Bibles, is also a linen envelope, and in that a paper reciting that on a certain day in June, 1868, this scribe was duly licensed to preach the gospel by the Quarterly Conference of Many mission (B. F. Alexander, P. E.), and through all the days and years of our ministerial toils, sorrows and joys, no friendship was ever nearer than this one. May his bow abide in strength, and may the eagle's youth be renewed until, "with no middle flight," he shall pass "the Anonian Mount," and stand among the white-vested elders before the throne!

And there is Medlock—one of the "boys" of the class of four in '69. We stood with him at two altars—Caron-delet and Felicity—and by the holy hands of Doggett and Keener were set apart to the solemn work and office of the ministry. May we all stand together again before the Shepherd and Bishop of souls, "accepted of him!" What a wonderful expression of satisfaction!

Then there is the Port Gibson Female College—the dear charmed circle of its inner life—our boyhood spent under its very shadow, where Drake preached and Jones administered, and blessed women taught. And Mansfield College—the vine Thweat planted, and Stuart watered, and Pipes dressed—from which has gone forth daughters polished after the similitude of a palace—daughters that excel them all.

Let us say right here: Texas is "the grandest State of the greatest republic of earth's" history, and here are the finest female colleges to-day in the nation; but we would rather our daughter hailed from Mansfield Female College than from any school on earth. With due respect to all his successors, we say that the most polished and completely educated Christian women we have ever met are those graduated from that school during the illustrious days of Stuart and his co-workers. Louisiana Methodism can prove its blindness by suffering its historic halls to be deserted.

Time will fail me to tell of Robert Randle and J. J. Wheat and John A. Miller, and many others, who, through faith, have subdued kingdoms; but they are all lights in that window through which along life's weary journey Heaven's glory has fallen upon our path.

Last comes John Franklin, of Vernon, whose name printed in bold brevier caps, stands out as one of those bright immortals that were not born to die. For two weary years he was our class leader and steward. We were with him in his poverty, and he was with us around the sick-bed and grave of our first-born. Upon his strong bosom we leaned when it seemed that the heart would break and hope would depart. A Christian, a Mason, a gentlemen, a MAN, we knew in advance which side he was on, and when he departs this life we shall know his address, for he will have a palatial home in a glorious city—a home that will outshine anything that Lottery boodle could buy. No, sir; Mr. Beauregard, you and all your millions could not buy John Franklin.

This old paper tells us, in a little paragraph encircled by blue and red pencil, placed there by dear hands, that we have a daughter married. How strange it seems that the little infant dedicated (it seems but yesterday) in holy baptism by dear old Bro. Pipes, is now out on the sea of life for herself! The men whose names we have called in this letter gave as much that we have been able to give to her. We had no money, nor lands, nor elegant gifts to bestow as her dower, but we gave her those things which faithful men of former years gave to us. May God grant to the daughters of this land all the agencies of Christian and home education, that the men of the future, with glad faces and beaming eyes, may say: "The gift of the girl far exceeds a gift of gold!" Gold may emblazon, but only grace can beautify womanhood.

And now, my dear old friend, Mr. Editor—we will say, Dr. Charles (in place of the good old-timey Bro. Charley)—will you regard this, not as a piece of fulsome eulogy? Will you regard it as a glimpse of life through all the journey from the cradle to the Jordan? Will you read it as one chapter of millions that are written in the books the world can not contain? As an outpouring of a grateful heart and not as an effort of poor composition? Down here, past the meridian of life, we thank God for Christian parents, teachers, ministers, laymen and children, and last of all for a Christian press.

Educate the Boys.

BY M'KENDREE M. BLACK.

It is a manifest tendency of the times to discard everything that has no direct bearing upon practical life, and it is to be feared that the pendulum of practicality is swinging too far. Particularly is this the case in the education of the boys of to-day.

By taking a survey of present conditions, we may see that they are not, as a general thing, receiving the thorough mental training demanded by nineteenth century civilization.

Nowadays, as soon as a boy is old enough, he goes to clerking, working as copyist, selling papers, or something of that sort, when he ought to be at school acquiring, at least, the rudiments of an education. Now, it would be senseless, indeed, to say that boys must not be allowed to work or to earn money until they have finished school. Of course, there are many cases where it is absolutely necessary that a boy should earn money, whether he has been to school or not. Oftimes sons are but discharging a filial duty in remaining away from school in order to help support the family. It may be that they are the only dependence of an invalid father or a widowed mother, or they may be orphans, and, therefore, are under the necessity of looking out for themselves. Boys of these classes are to be commended for entering the world of business and toil.

But what shall we say of parents who, though perfectly able to give their sons a good schooling, yet permit them to engage in money-making, instead of sending them to school or college.

Strangely enough, the sons of rich parents are often found in the counting-house, or other place of business, when they might be taking invigorating draughts at the fountain of knowledge. It not unfrequently happens, however, in such cases, that aversion to study is too great for anything to be accomplished in that line—such aversion having its origin in the reliance which young men put in riches to carry them through the world.

It is a deplorable fact that when boys dip into business at an early age, they become so absorbed in money-making that study becomes irksome, and soon the thirst for knowledge, which God implants in every human breast for a wise purpose, has forever taken its departure. After this, mental culture is out of the question. Boys and young men who have come thus far are simply content with knowing how to make money or how to have a good time. Henceforth their mental faculties seldom soar beyond the realm of stocks, market reports, local news and society gossip. In the very nature of things, such men rarely become leaders in great moral, political, or social movements. Their mental horizon is too contracted for broad-guage plans and purposes to find a lodging-place.

As the influence of cities upon the young is to beget an undue love of money and of pleasure—two things inconsistent with high mental and moral development—it comes about that the various professions and lines of business have to rely upon the country to supply men of culture and integrity. Of course, there are exceptions; but biography shows that the majority of men who attain eminence are reared in the country.

Again, when mere boys are allowed to go into business, being still in the formative period, they easily fall into bad habits. It is not long before they learn to use slang, to smoke cigarettes, and, finally, to swear, for it can not be disputed that boys (and men, too) take up with evil far more readily than with the good. Tares grow of themselves; the wheat must be carefully cultivated. As boys are supposed to be kept under strict surveillance, both at home and at school, all harmful tendencies are, to a certain degree, kept in abeyance till they arrive at the age when reason and judgment assume control.

It by no means follows, however, that boys should be entirely exempted from work, or that they should not be allowed to earn money at all. Far better is it for them to be at work than to be constantly roaming around in sweet "do-nothingness." The old saying that "an idle mind is the devil's work-shop," is, indeed, a true one. During vacation give your boy something to do, at least, part of the time. You will thus teach him to be industrious, also keep him out of mischief. But when the school term rolls around again, see to it that your boys go in for their share of education. If parents have the interests of their sons at heart, they will not suffer their boys to continue clerking, serving as collectors, etc., after the school term begins. It is a humiliating fact that the negro race are to-day manifesting a greater desire for education, and are making better use of advantages offered than are the whites. If such a state of things continues many years, can we hope to maintain our political supremacy?

Two years ago a certain Georgia editor penned the following: "It seems to be the growing tendency of our young men to neglect the higher literary education in their haste to get out into the world and make money, while the women are making rapid progress in the higher departments of literature, science and art. About five girls will receive literary diplomas in Georgia this year where one is awarded to a boy." What was true of Georgia in '88, if I mistake not, is true of all the Southern States to-day. Clearly, then, if this goes on, it will not be long before the women will be so much better educated than the men that few women will care to marry; for will they not be marrying their inferiors? Anything that tends to bring about an estrangement between the sexes can have but an unhappy effect upon society and upon the race.

Because a colt is strong and tractable, is no valid reason why he should be put to doing the work of a draught horse. For a season he may work well, but presently, instead of a vigorous, well-developed animal, you have a miserable jade. Similarly, by a false economy, the time which ought to be devoted to intellectual culture is too often given to the acquirement of technical skill of some kind. Commercial courses and technical training are well enough in their place, but when pursued to the exclusion of mind training, the result is but to dwarf men and confine their sphere of action to a very narrow circle. The truth is, technical training and mind training are complements of each other, and all well-rounded men possess both.

Here is exactly where the people of the North outstrip us. While due prominence is given to technical training, mental culture is none the less strongly insisted upon. Just as long as Southern people fail to realize how great is the need of the latter, just so long must we remain behind our brethren in those things which belong to a high degree of progress and civilization.

The thrust is continually made at us that we are far behind the North in intellectual culture; but we hardly deserve any better. It is high time for us to change this state of things. Is it true that we love money so well that we are willing for our sons to forego education for its sake? Have we sunk so low in the scale of civilization that intellectual culture has no charms for us? Modern civilization, practical though it is, has reached a point where half-educated men can not stand at the head of great enterprises. Furthermore, men in all occupations not only find it a great advantage to have a thorough education, but in many cases an actual necessity. Then does it not seem foolish in the extreme to permit mere lads to plunge into the whirl of business before they finish what the common schools have to teach?

Men of mediocre attainments are already too numerous. Let us, therefore, prepare ourselves for the highest positions; then if we are ever called to fill places of trust and honor, we shall not be found wanting. Let us so direct the wave of educational enthusiasm, now sweeping the South, as not to allow the training imparted by commercial and technical schools to supplant that of the high school and the college.

Our Special Work.

From the beginning one of the distinguishing features of Methodism has been an intense effort to give the people all needful information concerning religious doctrines and duties, and the progressive work of the church. For this purpose the pen and printing press have been freely used. The ever-recurring charge of Mr. Wesley to his colaborers was: "Feed our people with helpful reading;" "Take care that every society is supplied with books." All his preachers were colporteurs; and their examination, as his assistants, included the inquiry concerning their faithfulness in this work. "The Foundry (church) provided a room for the publication and sale of books. .... The Conference early ordained that every circuit was to be supplied with books by the assistant." (McTyeire's History of Methodism, p. 223.)

As soon as American Methodism was organized the value of the press as an efficient arm of the itinerant system was recognized, and arrangements were made for publishing and circulating good books. All along no connectional enterprise of the church has received more attention than its publishing interests. It is a chief topic in General, Annual, District, Quarterly, and Church Conferences. Committees are appointed, reports are made, speeches are delivered, and resolutions are adopted in reference to providing and circulating religious literature. It is needless here to detail the progress of this department of Methodist Church work from the administration of John Dickins, which began in 1789, to the present time. Suffice it to say that the little book-room of his, "the contents of which might have been hauled in a cart, has been like the grain of mustard seed." That small beginning has grown with the growth of the church, and has divided with its divisions, so that each branch of Methodism has its Publishing House or Houses, and a literature adapted to its people and sphere of work. In this matter the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is not, at this date, a whit behind others in enterprise and effort. We have located at Nashville, Tenn., an establishment known as "The Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South," "the object of which is to advance the cause of Christianity by disseminating religious knowledge and useful literary and scientific information in the form of books, tracts, and periodicals." This institution has been imperiled by war, fire, and debt; but from all it has had deliverance, and is to-day in a better condition to fulfill its mission than ever before. It is established in position, and with facilities for great usefulness. With much prayer and painstaking, those who have the work in hand are daily engaged in making and keeping in stock an attractive and wholesome literature adapted to all classes and conditions of people. Here are books, pamphlets, tracts and papers suitable in matter and style for the old and the young, the religious and the irreligious, and at prices adapted to all circumstances. No labor or means are spared by editors and publishers to provide needful reading matter for the church and people; but in order to fulfill the design "to advance the cause of Christianity," the matter prepared must be put in circulation. Hence the church has not only wisely provided from time to time for an ample supply, but also for a thorough circulation of its literature. According to present provisions, it is no less obligatory upon each pastor "to see that all the people within the bounds of his charge are duly supplied with our books and periodicals" than it is upon the book agents "to supply, as far as practicable, the demand of the church for books, tracts and periodicals." Thus we see in this, as in every other department of church work, the service of co-operation; the one is to provide, and the others are to disseminate the literature. It becomes every Methodist preacher to think on these things, and to give all diligence in promoting this church interest by putting into the hands and homes of the people wholesome and helpful literature. By so doing he will prove his fidelity to his ministerial vows, and to the spirit and polity of his church. It requires much self-denial, fortitude and patience for this as well as any other pastoral work; but he that is faithful in the sowing shall be rewarded in the reaping. The well-selected seeds of truth and purity (books, tracts and periodicals) are in the garner (the Publishing House). Let the seedsmen (the preachers) bring them forth and scatter them broadcast over the land, and there will be an abundant harvest of converted souls and of intelligent, devout and active members within the church. So mote it be!

Our Church Extension Work.

The July stated meeting of our Board was in session yesterday with all the officers; Bishop Hargrove and Bros. Settle and Palmore present. It was an "all-day meeting," beginning promptly at nine A. M., and closing at five P. M., with a brief recess for dinner. A large amount of detail work is always done at these intermediate meetings, which, though tedious and without special interest to the general public, is of great importance, and really vital to our work.

THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY.

The election of an assistant secretary made it necessary to define his duties, and a by-law prescribing the same was proposed and agreed to, though it must lie over till next meeting for final approval. It gives the assistant secretary authority to discharge all the duties of the corresponding secretary in the absence or disability of the latter, and further says, "He shall be chiefly employed in soliciting contributions to the funds of the Board."

Dr. Morris and family are here, and we expect efficient and valuable service from him in both field and office. Louisville Methodists are specially pleased with his location here, as he was for nine years a pastor in the city, and greatly endeared himself to our people during the time.

VISITATION OF CONFERENCES.

The circular letter to the Conferences for the current year was read and approved. The secretaries will visit the Conferences as follows: Morris—Montana, Columbia, East Columbia, Kentucky, St. Louis, Southwest Missouri, Holston, Indian Mission, West Texas, North Texas, Memphis, Arkansas, Little Rock, Louisiana, Alabama, Florida, South Georgia, Baltimore. Morton—Denver, New Mexico, Illinois, Western, Missouri, West Virginia, Louisville, Tennessee, Virginia, North Alabama, North Georgia, South Carolina, North Mississippi, Mississippi, White River.

PRINTER'S INK.

We hope to use the church papers more than ever before. Two secretaries can and will write more than one; and, unless our plans miscarry, bright, breezy, crisp articles in advocacy of our cause will, from other sources, reach the public, and induce enhanced interest in our work.

THE WOMAN'S DEPARTMENT

Starts off as a full-fledged femme sole, and by order of the General Conference our Board set it "up," not "off," with our benedictions. Miss Helm will supply particulars.

The Spiritual State of the Church.

The reports on this subject to a District Conference from the charges in it have been carefully examined; and, though they do not develop clearly the spiritual state of the church, they serve as a guide to inquire into it. This question claims serious consideration, because all the work of the church should contribute to its spiritual life. The church may be deceived in regard to its condition. The systems adopted for inquiring into the spiritual state may not be the best to present it in its true light as to spiritual life and health. There may be, as Bishop Galloway has expressed it in a sermon, "unconscious spiritual declension," not only in individuals, but also in the church as a body. Inquiry is to be made, and facts should be recognized. The church is to live and grow, and be presented "a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing," but "be holy and without blemish;" and we should direct our labors to that end. It is our mission "to spread scriptural holiness over these lands;" and a pure spiritual life is essential to the best success. There are signs of life in the numerical, material and intellectual progress of Methodism.

Is there evidence of a corresponding advance in the spiritual forces in the church? That is the great question. Other denominations may have more material wealth at their command; but we must look to our spiritual stores, and from them draw our strength to battle against sin. It is by observing this rule that Methodism has come to the front among the spiritual forces in the world to give life more abundantly. Our growth in the things that are highly esteemed by men is manifest. Our doctrines and usages are helping other influential denominations. They are taking some of our good things, and profiting by them, and we are depreciating some of our best things. The reports reveal the fact that the family altar is greatly neglected, and this indicates the absence of spiritual power in the family and the church. Worldliness and a want of trust in God are sins which break down the family altar, which is so necessary to counteract their influence. The class meeting has almost lost its place; the love-feasts are easily counted; the prayer meetings are not largely attended, and yet there are more who lead in public prayer than there are family altars. The proportion of members taking the Lord's Supper is not large, and the attendance upon the public worship is not equal to the demand of a high spiritual state.

It is probable that the spiritual state of the church in the district under consideration would compare favorably with it in other places. We have great cause for rejoicing in the prosperity of the church. We recognize the hand of God in its origin and progress, and hope for still better things for it in the future. The principles that moved the "eight or ten persons" with Mr. Wesley in "the beginning" must energize the millions through the ages if they fulfill their mission. Since we have increased in wealth and popularity it is the more important that we should hold fast the means that ministered so largely to the spiritual growth of our fathers. The material and intellectual resources are at hand sufficient for all the purposes of the church, if consecrated to the service of a pure, spiritual religion. Methodists ought to have a religious experience to enable them to sing, "In the way our fathers trod."

LESSON V.—August 3.

THE PRODIGAL SON.

Luke xv, 11-24.

GOLDEN TEXT—Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee.—Luke xv, 18.

TIME.—A. D. 88.

PLACE.—Perea.

12. The younger of them said to his father—In its bearing on the individual life, the younger son represents the temper that is eager for independence, self-asserting, energetic; the elder that which is contemplative, devout, ceremonial, quiescent. The portion—According to the Jewish law of inheritance, if there were but two sons, the elder would receive two portions, the younger the third of all movable property. No one in good health could diminish, except by gift, the legal portion of a younger son. The younger son thus was entitled by law to his share, though he had no right to claim it during his father's life-time. The request must be regarded as asking a favor. Divided his living—In the normal scale of distribution the elder son would have as his portion two-thirds of the personal, and possibly also of the real, property, the younger the remainder.

13. Not many days after—This shadows forth the rapidity (1) of national and (2) of individual degeneracy. Took his journey into a far country—Such instances of emigration were, we may believe, familar things in most towns of Galilee and Judea. In the interpretation that lies below the surface, the "far country" is the state of the human spirit, of the Gentile world, in their wanderings far off from God. The "riotous living" is the reckless waste of noble gifts and highest energies on unbridled sensuality of life, or sensuous, that is idolatrous, forms of worship. The individual soul, in its temptations and its guiltiness, tries in vain to escape from God into the "far country" of sin, which involves forgetfulness of him.

14. There arose a mighty famine in that land—In the individual interpretation of the parable, the mighty famine is the yearning of the soul's unsatisfied desire, the absence of its true food, of "the bread that cometh down from heaven." In its wider range it is the craving of humanity for what it can not find when appetites are not satisfied and their wonted supply ceases—the famine, not of bread and water, but of hearing the word of the Lord; the want of a message from the eternal Father to sustain the life of his children.

15. Joined himself—The verb means to glue or cement. Very expressive here, implying that he forced himself upon the citizen, who was unwilling to engage him, and who took him into service only upon persistent entreaty. As he had received him reluctantly, so he gave him the meanest possible employment. An ignominious occupation, especially in Jewish eyes. We observe that, in this far-off land, the prodigal, with all his banquets and his lavishness, has not gained a single friend. Sin never forms a real bond of pity and sympathy. The cry of tempters and accomplices ever is, "What is that to us? see thou to that."

16. Husks—Carob-pods. The fleshy pods are from six to ten inches long and one broad, lined inside with a gelatinous substance, not wholly unpleasant to the taste when throughly ripe. Feeding swine was terribly humiliating to a Jew—to be compelled to eat with them, at their trough and of their food, must represent the very extreme of degradation. It was worse yet that his condition sank even below this, for while he would gladly have eaten of their mess, no man gave unto him even this. Satan has no desire for, and no interest in, even the smallest alleviation of the anguish and degradation of his victims. Even the vile earthly gifts and base sensual pleasures are withheld or become impossible.

17. And when he came to himself—The phrase is wonderfully suggestive. The man's guilt was that he had been self-indulgent; but he had been living to a self which was not his true self. The first step in his repentance is to wake as out of an evil dream, and to be conscious of his better nature, and then there comes the memory of happier days, which is as "sorrow's crown of sorrow." Have bread enough and to spare—Literally, abound in loaves. I have played the fool; I see it now, and I will hasten to confess it.

18. Father, I have sinned—See how sensibly he speaks of his sin and of his folly; how he sees (apparently he had never thought of this before) that he had sinned, not against his father only, but against heaven—against the great God who reigns there; how he had outraged all his obligations, not to his earthly father only, but to his heavenly Father even more. He has a sense of being no more worthy to be called or regarded as a son; but O if he might take the low place of a hired servant, and be where there is bread!

20. And he arose, and came to his father—A mere flash of remorse is not enough; a journey must he taken; the back must be at once and firmly turned on the far land; and all the shame of abandoned duties and forsaken friends be faced. In the story we must think of the wanderer as coming back weary, foot-sore, hungry, and in rags. In the interpretation, the state of the penitent is that of one who is poor in spirit, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, with knees that are feeble and hands that hang down, conscious of his nakedness and needing something else than the "filthy rags" of his own righteousness to cover it. His father—Had his worn eyes often turned that way, and looked and waited and looked yet again, if possible they might ever be gladdened by this sight? Now he saw him, he had compassion; old man as he was, "he ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him."

21. And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned—The iteration of the self-same words comes to us with a wonderful power and pathos. The contrite soul does not play with its contrition, or seek to vary its expression. But the change is as suggestive as the repetition. Now that he has seen his father, he can not bring himself to say again, "Make me as one of thy hired servants." That had been a natural and right wish before; it would savor of unreality and hypocrisy now. This also has its analogue in the history of true penitents. In the first stirrings of contrition they stand afar off, and as they confess their sins hardly dare to hope for their restoration to the blessedness of sons; but when they have felt the Father's kiss, though still confessing to be unworthy to be called sons, they can not be satisfied with anything less than sonship. Sinned against heaven—This includes and surpasses all the other guilt, which is the reason why David, though he had sinned so deeply against man, says, "Against thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight." To be called thy son—He omits, Make me a servant. The slavish spirit vanishes in the clasp of his father's arms.

22. Easily understood. The best robe can not well be other than the "garment of praise," the vesture of righteousness, the new life and immortality with which it is the desire of the penitent to be clothed upon; the ring, as the signet upon the right hand, must be the token of the special favor of the Giver, the seal of his "calling and election;" the shoes must answer to that "preparation," or readiness, which comes from the gospel of peace, and which makes him eager to do his work as a messenger who proclaims that gospel to others, and which he need not lay aside even when he treads on the "holy ground" where man holds communion with God, the forgiven and restored son with the eternal Father.

24. This my son was dead—The words, looked at merely as part of the story, have a wonderful pathos. Absence, alienation, the self-chosen shame—this had made the father think of the son as "dead." Death would indeed have been far easier to bear. Spiritually, we are taught that repentance is nothing less than the passing from the death of sin to the life of righteousness, from the "graves of lust" to the power of the resurrection. Is alive...is found—Both aorists, and pointing back to a definite time in the past; doubtless the moment when he "came to himself." The reader will need not to be reminded that all these points in this extended description are purposely and richly significant. They are freighted with great moral lessons. First, and most directly in the line of this entire chapter, is the unutterable compassion of the father, and his overflowing joy upon the return—the very resurrection as from the dead—of this long-lost son. It reveals to us the infinite God, the everlasting Father, in joy unutterable for the repentance of one sinner. It testifies to the luxury of joy in his benevolent heart over one sinner that repents. We can not be mistaken as to the bearing of this parable upon this very point. For Jesus is now justifying himself for his interest, his sacrifices, and his labors for the sake of reclaiming and saving the lowest class of sinners. In one word, the point of his illustration assigns this reason for his labors—that God loves to have sinners repent. God rejoices over their return, humble and penitent, to the home they had abandoned for their life of sin.

Missionary.

Letter from Mexico.

MR. EDITOR: Since last I wrote you we have had more than the usual amount of care. In addition to that of the mission, Mr. Weems has been quite ill. While convalescing, Bro. Watkins went off to fill an appointment for Mr. Weems, and returned quite ill, with the same disease of which he was suffering. Then I took the little girl, Sofia Sanchez, of whom I wrote in a former letter. Her father gave her to me to raise as my own. Last week I had a letter telling me, if I'd send her to San Luis Potosi, where Miss Holding now is, she would take her to Laredo and educate her, also the daughter of our Toluca Bible-woman, in the new college in San Luis Potosi. As Bro. Grimes was going to San Luis, Thursday last, I got all ready and sent off the girls. Thus at the beginning of our woman's work in Central Mexico they have kindly helped me by taking these two girls, for which I feel truly grateful. That they may have great success in Central Mexico, I do earnestly pray.

Yesterday was Mr. Weems' quarterly meeting here. After he preached, the father and mother of little Sofia, my servant and one other girl joined the church. We had a solemn service, and that mother, who was such a rigid Catholic, wept bitterly, rose in her seat and asked to be taken into the church. These things have filled my heart with gratitude. If I am never able to do more, through the child I took from an unhappy home, the parents have been led to renounce Romanism. Though many anxieties and cares oppress me, I feel that little by little we are gaining ground.

We are looking forward to the coming of our new Bishop with pleasure and hope. I began praying for him when I heard he was to preside in this difficult field, for so much depends here on the right disposition of men and means. Indeed, far more than at home, where the people are instructed as to their duty, etc. I am sure our Bishop will come clothed in authority and in the Spirit of the Master, and we will welcome him to our hearts and homes. I believe our approaching Conference will mark a new era in our mission. We have now our noble women as helpers, and hopes and prospects are bright for the future. Yet we can not congratulate ourselves that Romanism is dying out. I feel appalled at the number of new churches being built and old ones remodeled.

On July 4, which was celebrated at the American legation by a grand ball, I celebrated by a little trip to the Nochetriste, the tree made memorable by the sad night spent under it by Cortez, who is said to have wept all night. I never visited any of the suburban towns; so went out with an American lady, as I was alone as usual; Mr. Weems afar in an Indian town. From this historic tree we went a little further to Popotlan. There I saw a beautiful Catholic Church, more than a hundred years old. They are now repairing it within. Outside I saw a singular looking arrangement built to the side of the house which looked like port-holes. When I went near I found in each bole a skull, while the whole space inside was filled with human bones of all sizes. You may be sure I felt no desire to linger long, as the lady and myself were entirely alone. I returned at the close of our national day to welcome my husband, who returned that night.

Next week I shall not be so entirely alone, as Bro. Grimes will bring his family down from San Luis Potosi, and occupy the mission house.

The good ladies of New Orleans sent Mr. Weems a draft for the benefit of the school here, in which they have been interested many years, and have done some noble work. He wrote them, acknowledging the help it brings. Miss Hallaran is often spoken of, and beautiful tributes paid her as a Christian worker. I was asked a few days since on my way to school, if it was her work I had taken up. "If so," the lady said, "I hope you will be blessed." The pure and good may pass away, but not so the incense of holy lives. It will linger and bear fruit. Oh! that all of us in this sin-cursed land may realize the terrible responsibility resting upon us, and so live that we may teach by example as well as by precept. Pray for us. S. G. WEEMS.

Temperance.

Why Does the Rum-Seller Rule?

Is it because he represents the majority of our people? Surely not. He and his followers form a small minority of the whole. Their rule is the rule of an impudent oligarchy. Two large classes are responsible for this condition of things. First, the partisan voters of respectable character and life who deliberately vote their party ticket although it is defiled with names that are redolent of the odors of the saloon. They lay aside conscience and common sense under the false theory of loyalty to party, as if party were more than country or moral duty. Instead of rebuking party by an opposing vote, they go with the party to maintain corruption. These uncorrupt and incorruptible voters thus sustain the system that their souls hate. Many of them are indifferent or careless as to results, having satisfied themselves that loyalty to the "regular" nominations is the one thing needful. Others wish reform, but are in despair concerning it. Let such understand that to have reform, individuals must be reformers; and that each individual can begin the reform most effectually voting only for clean candidates. The other class responsible for a government by rum-sellers is that of the non-voters. These are chiefly well-to-do people who are too much engrossed in their own business or selfish pleasures to care for the public welfare. It is estimated that there are in New York City 20,000 men who habitually abstain from voting. Their votes, if cast, would be on the side of public virtue, for they are men of correct sentiment and upright life. The depraved are never found wanting when voting time comes. These 20,000 could turn any election in New York City for good if they should exercise their right and do their duty; for not only would their votes count, but the knowledge that there was such an army of righteousness about to vote would purify the list of candidates. The rum-hole candidates are nominated because the politicians count on the absence of these 20,000 from the polls, as well as on the "loyalty to party" of 100,000 who do vote.—Rev. Howard Crosby D. D.

To think of religion in any other sense, than as a state of self denial, is knowing nothing at all of it: for its whole nature is to direct us by a light, and knowledge, and wisdom from God; which is all contrary to the darkness, ignorance, and folly of our natures.—Law.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

The Liver

When out of order, involves every organ of the body. Remedies for some other derangement are frequently taken without the least effect, because it is the liver which is the real source of the trouble, and until that is set right there can be no health, strength, or comfort in any part of the system. Mercury, in some form, is a common specific for a sluggish liver; but a far safer and more effective medicine is

Ayer's Pills.

For loss of appetite, bilious troubles, constipation, indigestion, and sick headache, these Pills are unsurpassed.

"For a long time I was a sufferer from stomach, liver, and kidney troubles, experiencing much difficulty in digestion, with severe pains in the lumbar region and other parts of the body. Having tried a variety of remedies, including warm baths, with only temporary relief, about three months ago I began the use of Ayer's Pills, and my health is so much improved that I gladly testify to the superior merits of this medicine."—Manoel Jorge Pereira, Porto, Portugal.

"For the cure of headache, Ayer's Cathartic Pills are the most effective medicine I ever used."—H. K. James, Dorchester, Mass.

"When I feel the need of a cathartic, I take Ayer's Pills, and find them to be more effective than any other pill I ever took."—Mrs. H. C. Grubb, Burwellville, Va.

"I have found in Ayer's Pills, an invaluable remedy for constipation, biliousness, and kindred disorders, peculiar to miasmatic localities. Taken in small and frequent doses, these Pills on the liver, restoring its natural powers, and aiding it in throwing off malarial poisons."—C. F. Alston, Quitman, Texas.

Act Well

"Whenever I am troubled with constipation, or suffer from loss of appetite, Ayer's Pills set me right again."—A. J. Kiser, Jr., Rock House, Va.

"In 1858, by the advice of a friend, I began the use of Ayer's Pills as a remedy for biliousness, constipation, high fevers, and colds. They served me better than anything I had previously tried, and I have used them in attacks of that sort ever since."—H. W. Hersh, Judsonia, Ark.

Two Points in Religion.

1. All the influences of the Christian religion are elevating in their tendencies. Objectors may talk against religion until they are hoarse; they may write against it until their pens drop from their hands; they may cry against it as a subtle system of priest-craft; they may pretend to see no good in it, and yet the great fact of the world's history is that the tendency of Christianity is to elevate and ennoble; that the most refined intellects have been more highly polished by communion with the intellect of Jesus: that the largest hearts have expanded under the influences of the example of his benevolence, and that the deepest thinkers have sat like little children at his feet and learned with humility the lessons of his infinite wisdom. No man can deny this without denying a large part of the history of the past eighteen hundred and fifty years. Religion elevates and, at the same time, broadens a man's nature so as to produce proportional exactness and symmetrical beauty of character. It tones the mental faculties, purifies the moral emotions and subordinates the animal propensities. It goes to the lowest strata and unearths the precious germs and brings them up and places them in reach of the light and heat of gospel influences, and they grow and flourish and bear fruit to the good of men and to the glory of God. Let no one think that degradation of mind or soul or body will result from the work of religion on the nature. It is elevating always and everywhere. It has taken many of the most miserable sinners the world ever saw and lifted them up into the shadow of God's throne!

2. The men and women who are earnestly engaged in the work of religion are qualified for all the exigencies which the developments of the future shall disclose, and prepared to meet all the results of those developments with calm equanimity. If the world is to march on in progress until the whole earth shall witness the dawn, and then the rising, and then the culmination of millennial glory, they are working to that end and are prepared for just such a result. If Christianity should prove a huge humbug and religion a fable and Jesus a myth and death an eternal sleep and heaven a poetic fancy and hell the dream of a frenzied imagination, they are prepared even for that state of things. If God is true and Christianity a great fact and religion a living power and Christ a divine Savior and death a transition to another sphere and heaven the grandest reality in the universe and hell the hopeless prison-house in which sin and its lovers shall be incarcerated forever, they are eminently qualified for that state of things. Having accepted the religion of Jesus and having yielded themselves to the work of the Divine Spirit, he has wrought upon them so as to assimilate their characters to his, and hence they are prepared for all possible contingencies.

These two points commend religion to every sane mind. Elevation of character and preparation for the future are the two great matters which religion promises to insure to everyone who will be guided by her precepts. Does anything else offer as much?

Editorial Correspondence.

Having promised to attend two District Conferences in one week, it was necessary to leave the office early. So Tuesday morning found me leaving the city by the Texas and Pacific road, en route for the Shreveport District Conference at Robeline, which thriving little town I reached at seven o'clock the same evening. Bro. McVoy, the pastor, met me at the train and domiciled me at the elegant home of J. H. Hill, where I spent two pleasant days with his agreeable and hospitable family.

Robeline is a small town on the Texas and Pacific road, and, sprinkled around over the little hills and valleys, gives some evidences of thrift and industry, though the census has waked the people up to the fact that they are not as numerous as they thought themselves.

The Conference opened Wednesday morning with Presiding Elder Cassity in the chair, and Rev. W. F. Henderson as secretary. The attendance of preachers the first day was fair, but the laymen did not show up in great numbers. It is a busy season with many, and the church work does not always take precedence of other work! The business proceeded in an orderly way. The various interests of the work in the district were carefully looked after, and suggestions as to how those interests may be fostered were made from time to time as the time of the Conference went on.

Dr. Hunnicutt, president of Centenary College, was present during the two first days of the Conference, representing his great enterprise and securing endowment and students. The success of the past session was regarded as a note of what is coming in the future, and the prospects of the college are brighter than ever before. The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE was brought before the people, and its claims upon their support urged by the editor. The Conference recognized the obligation to work for the upbuilding of its own organ, and gave good promises in regard to future operations on that important line. Oh! when will the church everywhere recognize the fact that an intelligent understanding of church work and an uninterrupted progress in that work depends upon the interest the church takes in her great enterprises? And how can the church know anything of these great enterprises unless she reads—yea, studies her periodicals? When we get the church paper in every family, and get every member to contribute to church support, all the problems will be solved!

My stay of two days at Robeline convinced me that the brethren there are in earnest, and, under the guidance of Bro. Cassity, will do much during the coming months to further the cause of the Lord and, doubtless, will be ready, December 3, to render to Bishop Haygood a good account of their stewardship.

While at Robeline I heard of the death of an old friend, Major William Beynon. A Welshman by birth, he came to this country years ago and cast in his lot with our people and became a Methodist. I knew him well and loved him much. He leaves a wife and one son, Dr. John Beynon, of Shreveport. My time is out at Robeline, and I leave this evening for Shreveport, en route to Homer.

C. W. C.

JULY 17.

During our recent trip we met a brother who proposes to be one of one hundred to give fifteen dollars this year to build a church in Japan, and then to give ten dollars a year for four years to support that church! Are there not one hundred readers of the ADVOCATE who will meet that proposition? If so, send your names to this office.

Seashore Camp Ground.

The nineteenth camp meeting of this association will prove in many respects the most remarkable in its history. Such numbers of people have only once previously congregated here, and then the mere human attractions were extraordinary, as Sam Jones and a quartette of new Bishops fresh from their vows of ordination; while the religious revival, pure and simple and pentecostal, will be long remembered.

On Monday after the great success of the day previous there was a slight recession of interest, and though the preaching was good and quite up to the high standard of the meeting, the tabulated results were meager—not to say, microscopical. The advantages of such a crisis in a meeting are very great if properly improved, and to say that, in consequence, "Israel betook herself to her tents," would but very mildly express the depth and universality of that revival of prayer that quickly followed. In addition to private resolve and effort there were coalesced movements in various directions, as a preachers' prayer and conference meeting, a young ladies' prayer meeting, as well as family and tent meetings, and the indications in every direction were that the kingdom of heaven was suffering no small degree of violence. The religious effect was, indeed, profound, and the spiritual tide which began to rise on Tuesday morning at the early prayer service has suffered no abatement until a period near the close of the meeting. The preaching has been in demonstration of the Spirit and power, and at every service there have been conversions. These latter are of the genuine and glad sort that you can take in at a glance, and that become at once factors in the good work of saving sinners, thus following the design of their new creation.

What a power (we had nearly said, "almost divine," but will write, "almost pleni-potential") a redeemed soul may become at such a time in assisting the Holy Spirit to save the lost, and how God hath shined into the hearts of his servants here of all ages and sexes and ranks to give the light of the knowledge of his glory in doing this special work!

The barrier that usually exists between the sinner and saint element of a congregation has had no existence in this meeting, and, perhaps, a majority of the penitents have come to the altar arm-in-arm with their beseeching friends or relatives. Very few have come up for prayer without being blessed, and without evincing a most decided change of deportment, while the experience meetings have been effusive in Christian testimonies to the saving power of God.

The preaching has been "good, better and best" from all styles of preachers—from stately and turgid Barnabas to Apollos, the prince of techniques, and waving his arms like wands; and from the impetuous and discursive to the logical and severe; and upon almost every subject which might be taken to define a distinct feature of Christian theology. Among ministers who impressed upon the occasion the individuality of their preaching, we may mention the names of Rankin, Wadsworth, Walker, Lewis, Parker, Cooper, Cox, Matthewson, Sawyer; F. N. Parker, who is in style much resembled to his sainted father, and John Keener—the latter in a single discourse exhibiting remarkable skill and force, while Mr. Matthewson preached a sermon which none of those who heard it will ever forget—direct and powerful and accompanied throughout by the unique personality of its author's shouting and unimpassioned weeping and laughing, as "a giant refreshed with new wine."

The children's meeting on Thursday was a most interesting and powerful service. It was conducted by E. P. Mackie, Esq., in excellent style, and was addressed with force and discrimination by Revs. W. J. Lewis and A. E. Clay. At this service there were, perhaps, twenty conversions, while fourteen children—all of whom were, perhaps, under the age of fourteen—joined the church.

The sermon of Rev. Inman Cooper, on "Pilate's Dilemma," at a critical stage of the meeting was edifying and forceful, and, like that of Bro. John Keener, in this and other respects belonged to a style of preaching which should not be suffered to go into disuse—plain, direct, overwhelming in its array of fact, and appealing to the powers of the world to come, rather than to the surface emotions of hearers. Bros. Lewis and Mounger preached effectively and entertainingly at a late stage of the meeting; while Bros. Wadsworth, Rankin and Hurt have preached powerfully from the inception, and much of the success is due to their earnest eloquence and labors in season and out of season.

The zeal and skill of the spiritual directors—we mean the presiding elders of the three adjacent districts, Evans, Cooper and Peterson—is deserving of all praise, and they have their reward.

Among subjects that have exerted a direct and potent influence upon the destiny of the meeting, which we could not fail to mention, has been the young ladies' prayer meeting, held daily in the Felicity tent. These "wise virgins," keeping their lamps well supplied with oil, have not only had ample illumination for their own steps at a critical season, but have lighted numbers beyond the dark borders into the kingdom of God's grace. The highest type of female character in this and other ages, though we would not discredit the former, is not the bread-winner, but the soul-winner.

Though it is difficult to obtain correct statistics of such a meeting, it is surmised that there had been seventy-five conversions previous to and including Friday night, and there seemed to be every reason to hope that this number would be increased to one hundred before the close.

The last sermon heard by your correspondent on Saturday morning was preached by Dr. J. B. Walker, and was equal to the best.

Later intelligence, reaching us on Monday morning, is to the effect that Sunday was a great day, and that there were many conversions. But if all the returns were in, and all the witnesses entitled to testify had spoken, who could estimate correctly all the good done and all the blessing received at this session of the great annual love-feast of the Methodists of Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama?

J. M. B.

The Pastorate.

I desire to write a few lines on this subject. I will not try to cover the whole ground of pastoral theology, but content myself with a simple and brief statement of a few salient points. I write for the young pastor; and if I can make suggestions that will contribute in any degree to his success in the work of the Lord, I shall be satisfied. To be a successful pastor ought to be the aim of everyone who has entered into this high calling; yet it is painfully true that among the many engaged in the work, comparatively few are decidedly successful in it. Is it not, therefore, worthy our attention?

It is very important that we appreciate the magnitude and responsibility of our calling. "For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish. To the one we are the savour of death unto death; and to the other the savour of life unto life. And who is sufficient for these things?"

"'Tis not a cause of small import
The pastor's care demands;
But what might fill an angel's heart,
And filled a Savior's hands."

We may well read and think and pray until we are overwhelmed with a sense of responsibility before we start in our work; and if we find our hearts not thus borne down with the weight of responsibility, as we contemplate the duties of this vocation, we may well conclude that God has not committed unto us a dispensation of the gospel.

The pastor is to be a preacher. The pulpit is his throne of power. There he must "read in the Book, in the law of God distinctly, and give the sense, and cause the people to understand the reading." He is to "preach the Word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine." He must be manly, faithful and gentle in the discharge of this duty. He must not allow his own feelings to intrude. He stands there to represent Christ. The truth as it is in Jesus is to be faithfully presented in the spirit in which Jesus himself would present it.

The pastor is to be a student. He can not "preach the Word" intelligently and intelligibly if he does not "give attendance to reading," and "meditate upon these things," and "give himself wholly to them." Therefore, he must "study to shew himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." To this end he must have three things: books, retirement and composure; and he must know how to use all three to the best advantage. He must prepare his sermons with care. No labor of his is better expended than that which is given to the preparation of his sermons. Having accumulated material for a sermon, he should boil it down and make it strong before giving it out.

The pastor is to be endued with power from on high. The preparation of the heart is more important than the preparation of the head. He must go to the pulpit every time with a fresh baptism of the Spirit. This will make his head clear, his heart warm, and his tongue as the pen of a ready writer. No amount of mere intellectual preparation can compensate for the absence of this spiritual power.

A story is told of a young pastor seeking the counsel of an aged minister when his church seemed to be waning. "Show me a pair of your old pants," said he. Then, examining them, he continued: "See here; they are worn in the seat and not in the knees. This accounts for the condition of your church. If you want your church to prosper, wear your pants out in the knees. When pastors kneel their churches rise."

The pastor must look after the details of his work. It is worth a great deal to him to know how to conduct a prayer meeting so as to make it both interesting and profitable to his people. As a Methodist pastor, he must know how to hold his Church Conferences successfully. There are great possibilities of good here. He must take a lively interest in the Sunday-school work of his charge. This is an arm of power. He must "help those women" in their missionary and parsonage aid societies. They are valuable co-workers, and deserve encouragement. He must administer the sacrament and ordinances of the church regularly, and see that the baptisms and marriages, etc., are recorded. He should proclaim the quarterly fasts, and read the rules of the church, as the Discipline directs. "He that regardeth not little things shall fall by little and little." In a word, let him take the Discipline of his church and keep the rules thereof, and not assume to mend them. He has solemnly promised to do so.

The pastor must visit his people at their homes. He must study to know their needs, and how best to serve them. He must keep himself in full sympathy with them, and they must come to know that this is the case. He must have them in his mind, and carry them on his heart, and be always watching for opportunities to do them good. He must seek to lead them to higher attainments in grace, and into ways of usefulness, and to develop their working capacity in the church. His personal influence should be brought to bear in every home. The children, the aged ones, the sick, the sorrowing and strangers have special claims upon his attention and interest. An important factor in the Christian home is the occasional visit and personal influence of a godly pastor. In the discharge of these duties there will be some unpleasant experiences. Many bitter morsels must be quietly swallowed. He must consent to suffer often; but then if he suffers with Christ, he shall also reign with him. He must be willing to suffer, if by so doing he can do good.

Here is a graphic picture, worthy of our study, given in John x, 1-15. Let everyone who desires to be a good pastor read and study this passage; and, as an under-shepherd, seek to imitate the Chief Shepherd. "He has left us an example that we should follow his steps." Remember it is said of the Good Shepherd that "he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out. . . . He goeth before them, and the sheep follow him: for they know his voice. . . . The Good Shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." It is also said that the hireling careth not for the sheep. He cares for the fleece, rather. He is anxious for his salary in full, and loves his ease; but he is not zealous for the salvation of souls and for the edification of the church. He is not willing to "give his life for the sheep"—to spend and be spent for the flock over which the Holy Ghost has made him an overseer. Brethren, let us be good shepherds.

W. B. LEWIS.

Notes.

The man who has no opinion is in a fair way to promotion.

He who is never reminded of his faults will never amend them.

We can put up with parties, but partisans are an unmixed evil.

None but he who made the world can make a minister of the gospel.—John Newton.

It is a sin on the part of any Christian not to be a friend of missions.—Van Oosterzee.

The great army of the traduced is only exceeded in numbers by the great army of the traducers.

A new reason has been discovered for bad handwriting. It is made as illegible as possible to protect the spelling.

The loving disciple who is spoiling for a fight is one of the paradoxes of the nineteenth century.

The broad-minded man who gives nothing to foreign missions is either too broad or not broad enough.

We know a preacher who is popular with all the rich men and utterly out of sympathy with all the poor of his acquaintance. This does not speak well for the discernment of the former class.

Love is the better way, but it often employs harsh methods and weapons. The apostle would have committed the body of the Corinthian recusant to the flames that he might save the imperishable enshrinement.

Millsaps College Notes.

Taking a collection would hardly be considered one's ideal of pleasant work, and yet it is not without its pleasure where a generous people appreciate the need to be supplied, and respond as willingly as they generally do when the endowment of Millsaps College is presented to their notice. Sometimes disappointment comes when a rich man fails to do his duty; but pleasant experiences often come, and often pleasant surprises.

"Put down $10 for Rastus McClendon."

Rastus McClendon is a worthy colored man in East Mississippi.

"Put down $10 for Sam Lee."

Sam Lee is a Chinaman in West Mississippi.

"Mr. Watkins, I want to give one dollar to that college. I want to go there some time."

As he said this, Ed. D—— put down a silver dollar upon the table. A waif, an orphan, hundreds of miles from what he called his home, found two or three winters ago asleep in a sawdust pile, this boy's heart was moved and his ambition stirred. May God's blessing rest upon him!

"I don't want to give anything myself; but my wife may give $1,000 if she wishes."

It is unnecessary to add that Mrs. R. was willing, and the subscription made.

"Put down $100 each for my wife and four daughters."

Such was the announcement that caused a pleasant sensation at the District Conference at Hazlehurst.

"I want to subscribe $50 for each of my two little boys," said a stalwart son of a sister church, some weeks ago.

The cause is taking hold of the hearts of the people; their hearts are moving their hands, and their hands untying the strings of their pocketbooks.

At Enterprise, on Friday night, July 11, Bishop Galloway and the agent presented the cause, and $620 45 was subscribed. At Wayneshoro, on Sunday, the writer preached on Christian education, and received in subscriptions $548 90, and at State Line, on Tuesday night, a collection of $151 was made.

A South Mississippian, in sending a check for $100, says: "No one has asked me to subscribe anything." Brother pastor, somebody in your charge may be waiting for you to present the cause.

A sermon on Christian education to every congregation and a collection for the endowment of Millsaps College is surely not too much to expect. Can we not expect this much from you, brother preacher?

The Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference, has subscribed $7,000 to the college endowment fund, thus leading the districts of the State. The progressive and wise-hearted Methodists of that district will, doubtless, make it $10,000.

It ought to be the ambition of every Methodist in Mississippi to subscribe something to the endowment of Millsaps College. To have done so will one day be a subject of gratification and pride.

A. F. WATKINS,
Agent.

District Church Extension Societies.

Several District Church Extension Societies have been formed, and others are proposed. It is the design to confine their operations to the respective presiding elder's districts in which they are located. The work of one of these has been extensively advertised, and favorable notices of the plan have appeared in more than one of our church papers. It will be well for our people to look closely into this subject before they go further.

One of the chief objects sought in the organization of the General Board of Church Extension and its auxiliaries was to concentrate the gifts of our people in a common treasury, and provide for their disbursement by a system that would accomplish the largest results with the smallest outlay. We believe that the work done will justify the assertions that in this we have been fairly successful.

Over $430,000 have in one way and another been collected and paid out, and over 1,900 churches and parsonages have been helped in eight years. The amount and character of work done by our Board compare favorably with that of any other Board of any other church in an equal length of time. Besides it is steadily growing, and, with right support, bids fair to prove itself an arm of the service which will do much to help possess the land. The very favor into which it has grown has, however, helped to develop certain tendencies which we can but regard with concern and to which we believe the attention of the church should be cited.

I believe these district societies are likely to do harm to the general cause in several ways.

1. By diverting attention from the work of the regular Boards. What they collect will inevitably affect the regular collection. People who give to them will claim that their contributions have gone to the church extension work, and that they must be excused from giving more. And for the reason that persons always sympathize with that to which they have contributed, their interest in the regular work will be diminished in the exact ratio in which they regard this.

2. By fostering a local feeling as against a connectional. Their appeals are based almost wholly upon the idea, "We must help ourselves, our district first; and then if we have to spare, we may go abroad." This spirit followed to its logical sequences would obliterate every connectional enterprise among us.

3. By encumbering the work with additional machinery. If we need a district society, why not one for each city, for each Annual Conference, for each State? Is not the claim that it is necessary equivalent to a declaration that our present machinery is inadequate? And if this is so, how are the results already achieved to be accounted for?

4. By transferring the work of church extension to organizations not provided for, nor recognized by any law of the church, and placing large sums of money in the hands and under the control of parties who are not responsible to any legal organization for either the time, or manner, of its disbursement.

5. By administering their funds under regulations that are altogether different from those of any other church extension organization we have, and thus creating dissatisfaction with existing methods which have been adopted and approved by the highest authority after mature and prayerful consideration of the subject. Will it not be wise to "keep," rather than "mend," our rules just at this point?

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. R. A. Burroughs writes from Okolona, Miss.: "A great revival began in Okolona, North Mississippi Conference, with the Aberdeen District Conference, which was held here June 26-29. On the very opening of the District Conference it was seen that the presence and power of the Holy Ghost was upon the people. The preaching was with power. The meeting was continued until July 13, conducted by the Rev. Joe J. Jones. The congregations soon grew so large that we could not seat them in the church. Arrangements were soon made, and a large cotton-shed was seated that would accommodate 1,500 people. This was filled to overflowing most of the time. Bro Jones exposed the sins of Okolona in such a way as to cause hundreds of people to say they would be guilty no more. We can not tell the number of conversions, but think we would be safe in saying that there were more than 100. Eighty persons gave their names to the different churches; 45 united with the Methodist Church, making 67 since Conference. Bro. Jones is a fine expositor of the Word of God, and he is a fearless preacher of the gospel. Our people gave him their unanimous support, and bid him God-speed in his great work. We give God all the glory, and go on loving and serving him. Pray for us."

—Rev. Isaac L. Peebles writes as follows from Brandon, Miss.: "Our third Quarterly Conference was held on the fourteenth instant. The attendance was good. Bro. Andrew W. Dowd, son of Capt. W. C. Dowd (deceased), was licensed to preach. On Sunday preceding, the presiding elder, Bro. P. A. Johnston, preached twice, in the morning and evening. Our finances are much in arrears as yet, owing to my long prostration; but we are hopeful, however, that as soon as I am thoroughly on foot I shall be able to bring them all up. My foot is still improving slowly, but the improvement is not sufficient to justify my exorcising it much without material damage. Various have been the diagnoses of my case, and conflicting have been the prescriptions. The principal trouble now is in the pedal nerves and, too, it may be, in the calcaneo-astragaloid ligaments, if not in the astragalus itself, for there is an unnatural enlargement about it immediately under the inner malleolus, and tenderness about it, posteriorly. Pray that I may thoroughly recover. May God continue to bless you in your great work, Mr. Editor!"

Meridian District.

The preachers in charge will please see that church registers and Church Conference record books are on hand at the Quarterly Conferences, third round, for examination in accordance with our Book of Discipline. Secretaries of Church Conferences have been negligent at several points, and their books were not present. Some preachers have failed to read the General Rules. Let others not fail.
